A Mystical Book, Fac. l. 3. p. 37. citeth the 13th. Book of this Work.

A Treatise of History and Allegory against Origen. Fac. l. 3. c. 5. p. 46.

Two Letters to Artemius, Fac. l. 3. c. 5. p. 45.

A Letter to Cerdon. Fac. l. 1. c. 1. p. 150.

Symbolum Charisii, Act. 6. Synodi Ephes. Fac. l. 3. c. 2. and 5. p. 39, and 44. Conc. 5. Act. 4.

PALLADIUS.

Palladius.

PALLADIUS, Originally of Galatia, Evagrius his Diſciple, left his Country at Twenty Years of Age, in the Year 388 (a), and went into Egypt, to learn of the Monks of that place the Exerciſes of the Monaſtick life. Being arrived at Alexandria, he addreſſed himſelf to Iſidore to be adviſed by him; who committed him to the Conduct of a Monk, who lived in a Cave near Alexandria. But Palladius not being able to undergo the Auſterities practiſed by that Monk, was forced to leave him; but nevertheleſs he continued three Years in the Monaſteries about Alexandria: afterwards he undertook to viſit thoſe of Nitria and Thebais, and he ſtay'd a great while in thoſe ſolitary places: But falling ſick of a dangerous Diſtemper, he returned to Alexandria, and put himſelf into the hands of the Phyſicians there, who adviſed him to go into Paleſtine, where the Air might agree with him better. From Paleſtine he came to Bithynia, where he was ordained Biſhop of Helenopolis in 401. Being one of S. Chryſoſtom's Friends, when that Saint was condemned, he was obliged to retire to the Weſt, and returning to the Eaſt with the Deputies of the Weſtern Biſhops, he was put into Priſon, and ſent back with them. From the Biſhoprick of Helenopolis, he was tranſlated to that of Aſpuna (b); a City of Galatia under the Metropolitan of Ancyra. He was Ruffinus his Friend, and defended Origen, ſided with Pelagius, and oppoſed S. Jerom. He writ in the Year 421. an Hiſtory of the Life, Actions, Miracles, and Diſcourſes, of the holieſt Monks that he had ſeen in Egypt, Libya, Thebais, and Paleſtine. It is Dedicated to one Lauſus, wherefore it has had the Name of Hiſtoria Lauſiaca. This Relation, (as moſt other Works of this Nature) contains many extraordinary things. Among ſeveral Examples of ſound Vertue, and uſeful Reflections, one may find childiſh Sentences, Examples dangerous to be followed, enormous Auſterities, unreaſonable Practices, and raſh Undertakings: The Stile of this Hiſtory is flat, a meer Relation without Ornament or Order; it was Printed in Latin, in the Lives of the Fathers by Roſweidus, and in the Bibliotheca Patrum: The Greek was publiſhed by Meurſius, and Printed at Amſterdam in the Year 1616. It is Printed likewiſe in Greek and Latin, in the Supplement to the Bibliotheca Patrum, in 1624. Cotelerius added ſome Greek Supplements in the laſt Volume of the Monuments of the Greek Church, Pag. 117, 158.

This ſame Palladius is thought to be the Author of S. Chryſoſtom's Life, and it is very likely. For, 1. The Stile of that work is like that of the Hiſtoria Lauſiaca. 2. Palladius Author of the Hiſtoria Lauſiaca was S. Chryſoſtom's Friend, and perſecuted upon his Account. 3. It is certain, that the Author of S. Chryſoſtom's Life was called Palladius, and that he lived in the beginning of the Fifth Century. But there is no Palladius known beſides this. 4. It is manifeſt, that the Writer of S. Chryſoſtom's Life, was of the ſame party, and in the ſame Intereſt and Sentiments with Palladius of Helenopolis. 5. The Author of S. Chryſoſtom's Life is called Biſhop of Helenopolis, in a Greek Catalogue of the Authors, that wrote S. Chryſoſtom's Life mentioned by Sir Henry Savile. The Greek Title of that Dialogue in the Florence Manuſcript, which is Six hundred years old, beareth the Name of Palladius of Helenopolis; and it is obſerved in the Margin, that he was Biſhop of Aſpuna. Laſtly, Dicdorus of Trimithus ſaith, That the Author of S. Chryſoſtom's Life was Biſhop in Bithynia. Yet ſome Conjectures ſeem to prove, that Palladius Author of S. Chryſoſtom's Life, and Paladius of Helenopolis are two different Perſons: For, 1. The Writer of S. Chryſoſtom's Life ſpeaks of the Voyage of Palladius of Helenopolis to Rome, as preceding his. 2. He ſpeaks as if he writ the Dialogue which relates that Life, whilſt Palladius of Helenopolis was detained Priſoner in the Eaſt: Laſtly, Palladius of Helenopolis was but Thirty nine years old when S. Chryſoſtom died, whereas the Author of the Dialogue makes Theodorus ſpeak of him as of an ancient Biſhop. Theſe Reaſons perſwaded Bigotius, that Palladius Author of that Dialogue, was not Palladius Diſciple to Evagrius. Yet it is eaſie to Anſwer, That Palladius feigned theſe things, after the Cuſtom of Dialogiſts, perhaps to hide himſelf the better, being unwilling to be known to be the Author of that Treatiſe. However, this Hiſtory is compoſed in the form of a Dialogue held at Rome, betwixt Theodorus Deacon of Rome and Biſhop Palladius. It contains S. Chryſoſtom's Condemnation, the Hiſtory of his Life, and a Juſtification of the Accuſations that were brought againſt him. It is written with great Plainneſs, but with much Exactneſs and Truth. It was formerly tranſlated by Ambroſius Camaldulenſis, but his Verſion was not ſincere. Bigotius having ſince found a Manuſcript in the Library of Florence, which contained the Greek Original of that Dialogue, cauſed it to be Printed, with a new Verſion on the ſide, compoſed with all the Fidelity and Exactneſs that can be expected from ſo able a Man. This Volume is Printed in Quarto at Paris by Martin, Ann. 1680.

(a) In the Year 388.] What he ſaith in his Preface, and at the beginning of the Hiſtoria Lauſiaca, determines the Chronology of this Author's Life. He ſays at the beginning of the Hiſtory, that he went into Egypt under the Second Conſulſhip of Theodoſius, which was in the Year 388. And in the Preface, he ſaith, That he had been a Monk 33 Years, and 20 Years a Biſhop, and that he was 53 Years old. He was therefore 20 Years old when he left his Country to become Monk. He was Ordained Biſhop in 401, and wrote his Hiſtory in 421.

(b) Biſhop of Aſpuna] Socrates Hiſt. Eccl. l. 7. *c.*36. reckons him amongſt the tranſlated Biſhops, and ſaith, that he went from Helenopolis to Aſpuna.

P. INNO-

P. INNOCENT I.

POpe Innocent ſucceeded to Pope Anaſtaſius in the Year 402. and governed the Church of Rome till 417. This Pope being conſulted from all parts, upon divers Queſtions, both of Doctrine and of Diſcipline, was put upon writing of Letters, which contein very uſeful Rules and moſt judicious Deciſions. P. Innocent.

The firſt Letter, which ſhould have been one of the laſt, ſince it was not written before 416. is an Anſwer to Decentius Biſhop of Eugubium a City of Umbria in Italy, upon ſeveral Queſtions put to him by that Biſhop.

The Preface of that Epiſtle, ſetteth forth the advantage of the City of Rome. He pretends that if all Churches had held the Practices which they received from the Apoſtles, they had all agreed in the ſame Diſcipline, and that all the difference, which ſo much ſcandalizeth the People, is cauſed by the Deviation from the Apoſtles Tradition. Upon this Principle he concludes, That they ought every where to obſerve the Diſcipline which Rome received of S. Peter, and which it hath always kept. " Eſpecially, ſaith he, becauſe it is evident, that the Churches of Italy, " Gaul, Spain, Africa, Sicily, and other Iſlands that are between Italy and Africa, have been " ſetled by the Biſhops whom S. Peter or his Succeſſors ſent thither.

Tho' this Pope lays down theſe Maxims as indubitable, yet are they not without Difficulty; and it would have been hard for him to have proved them well: for what Evidence is there to juſtifie, that the Apoſtles ſetled all Points of Diſcipline themſelves? and how can we know that they eſtabliſhed them all after the ſame manner? On the contrary is it not certain, that S. John celebrated the Feaſt of Eaſter in the Eaſt, upon other days than Sundays, tho probably both S. Peter and S. Paul did the contrary at Rome? And had the Apoſtles ſetled the ſame Uſages, and Ceremonies in all the Churches which they founded, would it therefore follow, that there is a neceſſity of obſerving them? Do not all Men know, that Diſcipline may and is to alter according to the various Circumſtances of time? And what Proof is there, that the Church of Rome hath preſerved the Diſcipline ſetled by S. Peter, better than other Churches have kept that which was given them by other Apoſtles their Founders. Is there any certainty that the Churches of France, Spain, and Africa, were all founded by thoſe whom S. Peter, or his Succeſſors ſent thither? And Laſtly, where is the neceſſity to oblige them all to change their Rites and Cuſtoms, to embrace thoſe of the Church of Rome? Many ſuch Queries may be made upon this Principle of Pope Innocent, which could not eaſily be reſolved. But an Italian Biſhop his Suffragan, could not in reaſon propoſe ſuch Difficulties; he ought to conform to the Diſcipline of his Metropolis. He had often been at Rome, and preſent at the publick Service, and ſo might well be acquainted with the Ceremonies practiſed there. That was ſufficient to inſtruct, and oblige him to reform the Abuſes of his own Church: Yet he adviſed with Pope Innocent; and the Pope thought fit to make him an Anſwer, not ſo much to inſtruct him, as to teach, adviſe, and reprove with the greater Authority thoſe that receded from the Cuſtoms of the Church of Rome, and even to impoſe them if they would not yield to his Admonitions.

In the firſt Canon he declares, That the Bleſſing is not to be given before the Conſecration of the Holy Myſteries; That ſo it may be as a Sign and Token, that the People approve of the Conſecration of the Myſteries.

The Second enjoyns that thoſe who are to be recommended in the Service of the Euchariſt be not named, before Their offering be preſented.

The Third forbids Prieſts to confirm Children, becauſe they have not the Soveraignty of the Prieſthood: That they may Baptize, and Anoint the baptized with the Oyl that is conſecrated by the Biſhop, but not lay it upon their Foreheads, becauſe this is allowed to none but Biſhops, when they conferr the Holy Ghoſt: He declares that he cannot recite the words, for fear of diſcovering the Myſteries, if he would anſwer the advice that was required of him.

In the Fourth Canon he pretends to give an evident Reaſon of the Saturday's Faſt, by ſaying, that as all Sundays are kept with joy in remembrance of the Reſurrection, and as they faſt every Friday, becauſe of the Paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt. So they ſhould faſt likewiſe upon Saturday, as being between the day of ſorrow and that of rejoycing, and the rather becauſe the Apoſtles mourned all that day. In a word, that ſince holy Saturday is a Faſting day, all other Saturdays ſhould be ſuch in remembrance of that Day. He obſerveth that in his time the Divine Myſteries were not celebrated either upon Fridays or Saturdays.

The Fifth Canon is obſcure enough. S. Innocent ſaith there, that it was to no purpoſe for Decentius to conſult him concerning the leavened Bread, which the Biſhop of Rome ſent every Sunday to the Pariſh-Prieſts in the City of Rome, after he had conſecrated it, becauſe his Cuſtom could not concern the Countrey Pariſhes, for as much as the Sacraments ought not to be carried far, quia non longe portanda ſunt Sacramenta: Wherefore, addeth he, we do not ſend them to Prieſts in diſtant Pariſhes, becauſe they have Power to conſecrate.

The Sixth declares, that a Prieſt may not lay hands upon an Energumen, without leave from the Biſhop, but that he may if the Biſhop gives him Commiſſion to doe it.

In

P. Innoc. I. In the Seventh it is enjoyned, that thoſe who have done Penance ſhould be reconciled upon Holy Thurſday, whether they were Guilty of great Crimes, or of leſſer Offences, except ſome Diſtemper requireth another time: And to judge of Repentance, regard muſt be had to the Pains, mourning and tears of the Penitent, and his Sin muſt be remitted, if it appears that he hath made a proportionable ſatisfaction.

The Eighth is about the Anointing of the Sick, ſpoken of in the Epiſtle of S. James. Innocent ſaith, that the words of the Apoſtle are without Queſtion to be underſtood of the Sick that are faithful, that theſe may be Anointed with the Oyl that is conſecrated by the Biſhop, and the uſe of this is not peculiar to Prieſts only, but all Chriſtians may anoint themſelves, and thoſe that belong to them in Caſe of neceſſity: that it is not neceſſary that the Biſhop ſhould make this Unction; that it ſhould not be adminiſtred to Penitents, becauſe it is a kind of Sacrament, and ſince other Sacraments are denied, they have no right to this.

He concludeth with an Exhortation to Decentius, that he ſhould cauſe the Diſcipline of the Church of Rome to be obſerved in his Church, and to inſtruct the Prieſts and Clerks under his Care well, that ſo they might diſcharge their Miniſtry worthily.

The Second Letter was written in 404. to Victricius Biſhop of Rouen, who likewiſe asked Queſtions about points of Diſcipline. It begins alſo with the Praiſes of the Roman Diſcipline; he exhorts him to ſend this Letter to his Brethren, that they might learn what Rules they were to follow.

This Preface is followed by Thirteen Canons.

The Firſt agreeable to the Deciſion of the Council of Nice, forbids a Biſhop to be ordained without the Conſent of the Metropolitan of the Province: declaring farther, that one Biſhop alone cannot Ordain.

The Second prohibits the admitting of thoſe into the Clergy, that have been Soldiers after they were baptized.

The Third allows a Synod of the provincial Biſhops to take Cognizance of all Cauſes relating to the Perſons of Clerks and Biſhops, according to the Decree of the Nicene Council; but he addeth, Yet without prejudice to the Rights of the Roman Church, to which great regard is to be had in all Cauſes. And if they be cauſæ Majores, devolved to the Holy See, they are not to be brought hither nor judged; before Judgment is given by the Biſhops of the Province.

The Fourth forbids to admit into Orders, a Perſon that has married a Widow, or a Woman that is divorced from her Husband.

The Fifth extends this Prohibition, even to thoſe that have married ſuch a Woman before Baptiſm.

He confirmeth the ſame Law in the Sixth, with reſpect to thoſe that have been twice married.

The Seventh forbids Biſhops to ordain Clerks of the faithful of another Church, except the Biſhop of that Church permits it.

The Eighth ordaineth, that the Novatians and Donatiſts be received by the ſole Impoſition of hands; becauſe that tho' they were baptized by Hereticks, yet were they baptized in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt. He addeth, That if any Catholicks being entred into their Sect, were baptized, and are willing to return to the Boſom of the Chuch, they muſt be put to a long Penance, before they be admitted.

The Ninth is concerning the Celibacy of Prieſts and Deacons.

The Tenth forbids the Monks that were ordained Clerks, to leave their way of living.

In the Eleventh, the Officers of the Emperor, and ſuch as are in publick Employments, are not to be admitted into Orders.

The Twelfth prohibits the admitting of thoſe Virgins that being ſolemnly conſecrated to God, Married, or were corrupted, to Penance, before the Death of the perſon with whom they have committed the Crime, For, ſaith he, if a Woman, who during the Life of her Husband marrieth another is an Adultereſs, and is not admitted to do Penance before the Death of one of them, with how much more reaſon ſhould the ſame rigour be obſerved towards her, who being united to an immortal Husband, went over to an humane Marriage?

The Thirteenth enjoyns a Penance of ſome time to the Virgins that Marry, after promiſing Virginity, tho' they had not ſolemnly been veiled by the Biſhop.

Pope Innocent finiſhes his Letter, ſaying, that if theſe Canons were obſerved by the Biſhops, there would be no more Ambition among them, Diviſions would ceaſe, Schiſms, and Hereſies would be ſtifled, and the Devil would have no occaſion to aſſault the Flock of Jeſus Chriſt, &c.

The Third Epiſtle of the ſame Nature with the two former, is written in 405. to Exuperius Biſhop of Tholouſe.

In the Firſt Canon of this Letter, he confirms Siricius his Law concerning the Celibacy Prieſts and Deacons; yet he forgiveth thoſe who thro' Ignorance obſerved it not, upon condition that they ſhall continue in that Order, and not be admitted to an higher. But he ordains that thoſe ſhould be degraded who violated it knowingly.

The Second Canon relates to Sinners, who ſtay till the hour of Death to deſire Penance: Pope Innocent ſaith, that they were dealt withal after two different manners. That the ancient Diſcipline was more ſevere, becauſe Penance was granted them without allowing them the Communion: but in his time, it was adminiſtred to dying Men, that they might not imitate the hardneſs of Novatian. Theſe laſt words with ſeveral others that are in the Text of that Canon, manifeſt that by the word Communion, is not to be underſtood the Adminiſtration of the Euchariſt : but Abſolution. P. Innoc. I.

neſs

The Third Canon exempts thoſe from Penance, that condemned any Perſons to Death, who put any to the Rack, or were obliged by their Office to condemn the guilty to any Puniſhment, becauſe the civil Powers, ſaith this Pope, are eſtabliſhed by God for the Puniſhment of Criminals.

The Fourth Canon gives a Reaſon why more Women do Penance for Adultery than Men. Pope Innocent ſaith, That the Chriſtian Religion puniſheth this Sin equally both in Men and Women, but Wives not being able to accuſe their Husbands of this Crime, the Biſhop cannot paſs Judgment upon ſecret Sins, whereas Husbands do more freely accuſe their Wives, and diſcover them to the Prieſts.

The Fifth excuſes thoſe who by their Office are obliged to demand the Death of a Criminal, or to condemn him.

The Sixth ordaineth, that thoſe ſhould be put out of the Church, both Men and Women, that Marry again after a Divorce; but this penalty is not to extend to their Kindred and Allies, except they contributed to that forbidden Marriage.

The laſt Canon contains a Catalogue of the Sacred Books, comprehending all the Books both of the Old and of the New Teſtament, which we now own for Canonical: He rejects the Acts publiſhed under the Names of S. Matthias, S. James the Leſs, S. Peter and S. John, S. Andrew, S. Thomas, and ſuch-like.

The Fourth Letter, without Date, is directed to Felix, Biſhop of Nuceria. Having commended that Biſhop for asking his advice about ſome Doubts; he tells him in the Firſt Canon, That thoſe are not to be admitted into Orders, who voluntarily have diſmembred themſelves. In the Second, That it is forbidden to Ordain ſuch as have been married twice, or have married Widows. In the Third, That thoſe muſt not be Ordained that have been Soldiers; that have pleaded at the Bar, or have born Offices at Court. In the Fourth, That thoſe of the Laity are to be choſen, who are Baptized, of approved Morals, who have ſpent their Time with Clerks, or in Monaſteries, and who have kept no Concubines. Laſtly, in the Sixth, he commands the Obſervation of the Interſtitia; [i. e. the Times between every Ordination, upon any promotion from leſſer to higher Orders,] that they Ordain no Man a Reader, an Acolyth, a Deacon or a Prieſt of a ſudden; that ſo having been long in the inferiour Degrees, his Behaviour and Conduct may be tried.

In the Fifth Letter, directed to Two Biſhops of Abruzzo, he bids them depoſe the Prieſts that were accuſed of having had Children ſince their Ordination, if they be convicted of that crime: He obſerves in the beginning, that a Biſhop ought not to be ignorant of the Canons.

The Sixth is to ſome Biſhops of Apulia: He enjoyns One Biſhop to be depoſed, though he had done publick Penance: He reproacheth them with allowing many things to be done in their Province contrary to the Canons, which might eaſily have been corrected, if Biſhops themſelves were not Authors of ſuch Diſorders.

The Seventh is directed to the Biſhops of Macedonia about Two Biſhops, Bubalius and Taurianus, who had cauſed the Judgment that was given againſt them to be re-viewed again, and falſely boaſted of having a Letter from P. Innocent, written in their behalf.

In the Eighth he exhorteth Florentius, Biſhop of Tivoli, to reſtore to his Brother Biſhop a Pariſh which he had taken from him.

The Ninth declareth, That a Man who married another Woman, while his Wife was in captivity, ought to return to the former; becauſe a Second Marriage cannot be lawfull, except the former Wife be dead, or ſeparated by Divorce.

The Tenth is a Letter of Complement to Aurelius and S. Auguſtin.

The Eleventh to Aurelius is touching the determining of Eaſter-Day the following Year.

The Twelfth directed to the ſame, is upon the choice which they ſhould make of Biſhops; he will have them to be choſen from the Clergy, and not from the Laity.

The Thirteenth is to Juliana, a Lady, whoſe Devotion he commendeth.

The Fourteenth to Bonifacius, and thoſe that follow, were written Anno 413, after Alexander, Biſhop of Antioch, had inſerted again the Name of S. Chryſoſtom into the Diptychs. Innocent writeth to Bonifacius, that he had admitted that Biſhop to his Communion, upon condition that he ſhould not diſturb thoſe that were Ordained by Evagrius, and that he ſhould put S. Chryſoſtom's Name among thoſe Biſhops whoſe Memory was celebrated.

The Fifteenth is directed to Alexander, Biſhop of Antioch; wherein he congratulates their Reconciliation.

In the Sixteenth to Maximianus, he ſaith, that he had not yet communicated with Atticus of Conſtantinople, becauſe he had not performed the Conditions, without which there could be no peace.

The Seventeenth ſubſcribed by Twenty Italian Biſhops, is directed to the ſame Evagrius, whom he commendeth for re-uniting the remainders of Paulinus and Evagrius's Party.

The Eighteenth to the ſame, conſiſts of Three Canons; in the firſt, he extolleth the Dignity of the Church of Antioch, that he may magnifie that of Rome the more; ſaying, That according to the Authority of the Council of Nice, which gives the Senſe of all the Biſhops in the World,

P. Innoc. I. the Church of Antioch had Juriſdiction over a whole Dioceſs; That this Authority was not granted to it, becauſe of the greatneſs of the City of Antioch, but becauſe it had been the firſt Seat of S. Peter; And that it deſerved that the moſt ſolemn Aſſembly of the Apoſtles ſhould be made there: So that it had not given place to the Church of Rome; but only for this reaſon, That the latter had the End and Conſummation of that which the former had but an occaſional enjoyment of: And by reaſon of this Dignity, he tells the Biſhop of Antioch, That as he Ordaineth the Metropolitans by an Authority peculiar to him, he ought not to ſuffer that other Biſhops ſhould be Ordained without his leave and conſent, by writing to the Biſhops that are afar off, and cauſing them that are near to come to him for Ordination.

In the ſecond Canon he ſaith, That two Biſhops are not to be made Metropolitans, when Towns are newly erected into Metropoles at the ſame time, upon the dividing of a Province into Two by the Emperour. He ſpeaketh afterwards againſt the Cuſtom of the Biſhops of the Iſle of Cyprus, who ordained Biſhops without conſulting with the Biſhop of Antioch.

In the Laſt he affirms, That the Arians returning to the Church, are to be admitted with impoſition of hands; but their Clergy are not permitted to continue in the Miniſtry of the Church.

The Nineteenth, directed to Acacius of Berœa, is upon the Reconciliation with Alexander of Antioch.

In the Twentieth, he writes to Lucianus, Biſhop of Signi, to ſtop ſome Meetings of the Photinians in his Dioceſs.

The Twenty-firſt, directed to Martinianus, a Biſhop in Macedonia, is written from Ravenna. He writeth to that Biſhop, that he ſhould not refuſe his Communion to ſome Clerks, who were Ordained by Bonoſus, but had abjured his Error. He ſaith, that he had already written a Letter to Rufus, and other Biſhops of Macedonia; wherein he gave his judgment, That they were to be received to the Communion, and left in poſſeſſion of their Churches.

This Letter is probably the Two and Twentieth, which conſequently ought to be ſet before the foregoing; it beareth date from the Year 414, and is directed to Rufus and other Biſhops of Macedonia. He tells them in the beginning, that he was much ſurprized by a Letter directed to the See of Rome, as the chiefeſt of all Churches, becauſe they conſulted him about things that had no difficulty; and concerning which, he had plainly declared his Opinion. One of thoſe things is the Ordination of ſuch as had married Widows. P. Innocent ſaith, That there is no diſpute that they ſhould not be Ordained; and affirms, that it was the practice of all, both Eaſtern and Weſtern Churches; Nay, he would have thoſe to be degraded, who are found to be in Orders. The Second is concerning thoſe, who having loſt a former Wife, being yet unbaptized, had married a Second after Baptiſm. Some were of opinion, that this kind of Bigamy did not hinder them from being admitted into Sacred Orders. P. Innocent alledgeth ſeveral Reaſons to prove that ſuch a practice is not to be followed.

The Third Rule is touching the Ordinations by Hereticks. P. Innocent ſcruples not to alledge the ſame paſſages, and the ſame expreſſions, uſed by S. Cyprian, to prove the invalidity of their Baptiſm, to ſhow the nullity of their Ordination: For he ſaith, That as many as are thus Ordained, having their Heads wounded with the Impoſition of Heretical Hands, had need of Penance for their remedy; and that ſuch as need Penance, ought not to be Ordained: That Hereticks having not true Orders, cannot conferr Orders: That they cannot make thoſe on whom they lay their Hands, partakers of any thing but of the Condemnation that themſelves are ſubject to. After this Obſervation, he refutes the falſe Principle of ſuch as believed, that a lawfull Biſhop's Ordination remitted all Sins. He ſaith, that the cuſtom of his Church was, to grant Lay-communion, after a ſingle Impoſition of Hands, to thoſe who, having been baptized by Hereticks, deſired to enter into the Church; but that thoſe were obliged to doe Penance, who returned to the boſom of the Church, after they had quitted it, to enter into a Sect of Hereticks. He blameth thoſe who not only doe not put them under Penance, but alſo ſuffer them to continue in their Miniſtery.

Afterwards he frames ſome Objections againſt this Rule. The Firſt is the Law made by Anyſius, concerning thoſe whom Bonoſus Ordained; whereby he permitted, that they ſhould be received into the Church with their Orders. P. Innocent anſwers, That this example is of no conſequence, becauſe they made uſe of this Condeſcenſion in favour of thoſe that were Ordained by Bonoſus, to prevent ſeveral Biſhops from perſiſting to follow his Party. That this particular Exigency of the Church obliged them to tranſgreſs the Rules; but when the Neceſſity ceaſeth, they ought to return to the Law.

The Second Objection is grounded upon the Canon of the Council of Nice, which permits the receiving of the Novatians. P. Innocent ſaith, That this Canon relates to Novatians only, and is not to be extended to other Hereticks. He adds, That in this Canon the buſineſs is about Baptiſm; and that the Council ordains that the Paulianiſts ſhould be re-baptized, becauſe they baptized not in the Name of the Holy Trinity; whereas the Novatians baptized as the Catholicks did, in the Name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. And Laſtly, He declareth that this Rule concerneth thoſe that were baptized by Hereticks; but as to thoſe who were baptized in the Church, and embraced an Heretical Sect, if they recover from their Apoſtaſie, they ought undoubtedly to be put to publick Penance; and having done Penance, they can never come

come into the Clergy. Whence he concludes, That thoſe who left the Church after Bonoſus was condemned, to joyn with him, and received Orders from Hereticks, are not to keep their Dignity, nor to be Ordained, when they return again to the Church. Wherefore he exhorteth the Macedonian Biſhops to reform that abuſe; telling them, That they ought not to allow that in time of Peace, which Neceſſity commanded to be done in time of Trouble; That it often happens that a fault remains unpuniſhed, becauſe a whole People is guilty of it. Upon ſuch occaſions, what is paſt muſt be left to God's Judgment, and care muſt be taken to prevent the like diſorders for the time to come. All this is the conſequence of the ſame Third Canon, though it be divided into Four. P. Innoc. I.

The Laſt Canon is concerning a Biſhop, one Photinus, who had been condemned by the See of Rome with too much rigour. P. Innocent approves of the Admonition of the Macedonian Biſhops; but ſaith, That the See of Rome was miſ-informed and deceived by the Calumnies of his Enemies. He owns him for a Biſhop, and commends the others for informing him better, and deſireth them to ſhew kindneſs to a Deacon called Euſtathius.

The Twenty-third Letter is directed to the Spaniſh Biſhops that were aſſembled in Council at Toledo. It is about particular affairs of the Churches in that Kingdom. The Firſt Canon takes notice of a kind of Schiſm among the Biſhops of Bætica, and of other Spaniſh Provinces, who had given the Communion to thoſe of Gallicia. P. Innocent proves that Lucifer's Severity was not to be imitated, in refuſing to admit converted Hereticks; but, on the contrary, that all poſſible means ſhould be uſed to cauſe them to return into the boſom of the Church.

The Second Canon is againſt two Biſhops who ventur'd to Ordain out of their Dioceſſes.

The Third Canon is concerning one Biſhop John, who by his Deputies had approved the Condemnation of Symphoſius and Dictinius. P. Innocent's Opinion is, That his Caſe ought to be examined, as well as that of the others, to know whether he had acted with Sincerity.

In the Fourth he ſpeaks of irregular Ordinations practiſed in Spain, contrary to the Canons: He ſays, That they are ſo many, that it were impoſſible to apply a Remedy; and ſo he thinks it convenient to leave what is paſt to God's Judgment: But for the future to eſtabliſh a Rule, That whoſoever ſhall Ordain contrary to the Canons, ſhall be deprived of the Sacerdotal Dignity, together with thoſe that received Orders.

The Fifth is concerning a buſineſs of Patruinus, Biſhop of Merida, which, he ſaith, ought to be examined, and thoſe puniſhed that complain of his Ordination, if they had unjuſtly accuſed him.

The Sixth containeth Rules to be obſerved in the choice of fit perſons to be Ordained.

To underſtand well the Three following Letters of Pope Innocent; it is to be noted, That the Biſhops of Africa and Numidia having condemned both Pelagius and Cœleſtius in the Councils of Carthage and Numidia, aſſembled in the Year 416, wrote to Pope Innocent, to give him an Account of the Sentence which they pronounced againſt both thoſe Hereticks, and their Doctrine, that ſo they might add to their judgment the Authority of the See of Rome; and ſo much the rather, becauſe Cœleſtius had thought fit to appeal, and it was reported that P. Innocent countenanced them. And for this reaſon Aurelius and Four more of the principal Biſhops wrote another familiar Letter to him concerning ſome diſadvantageous Reports that had been raiſed againſt him about that buſineſs.

In the Three following Letters, P. Innocent anſwereth the other Three that were brought to Rome by Biſhop Julian; theſe are dated the 27th. of January, 417.

The Firſt is directed to Aurelius and the Biſhops in the Council of Carthage. He commends them at firſt for their Courage in condemning Error, and for their reſpect to the See of Rome, in conſulting with it about what they had decided. From which he takes occaſion to exalt the Authority of the See of Rome; affirming, That it is of Divine Right to have its Opinion in Eccleſiaſtical Matters, before any thing be determined in the Provinces concerning them. It is probable that the African Biſhops did not own that Right, ſince they had definitively judged the Caſe of Pelagius and Cœleſtius, before they acquainted him with it; and they did not write to him as to a Judge, that might diſanull what they had done, but only to get his Approbation of their Deciſions, as a thing which he could not refuſe to doe without being ſuſpected of Hereſie. And indeed this Pope who was ſuppoſed to favour Cœleſtius, having known his Errors could not forbear declaring againſt them; and commending the African Biſhops, who had condemned their Authors. He ſubſcribes to their Judgment, and proves by ſeveral Reaſons the Neceſſity of the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt. The Firſt is taken from Prayer, which ſuppoſeth that we owe to God's Help, and not to our Free-will, the good that we doe. He ſays, That Man being fallen by the Abuſe of his Free-will, muſt be raiſed again by the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt. That our Saviour not only delivered him from Sins paſt, but that knowing his weakneſs, he alſo prepared him Helps and Remedies to preſerve him for the future; and that we muſt of neceſſity be overcome, if we be not ſuccoured by him, who alone can make us Conquerors. Neceſſe eſt, ut quo auxiliante vincimus, eo iterum non adjuvante, vincamur. By which Principles he condemneth all thoſe who affirm that there is no need of God's Grace to doe good, and judgeth them unworthy of the Church's Communion: He ſaith, that refuſing to others God's Succour, they are bereaved of it themſelves, and ought to be cut off from the Church as rotten Members. He ſaith further, That if they acknowledge their Error, and admit of God's Grace, being ſincerely converted, it is

P. Innoc. I. is the Biſhop's Duty to help them, and not to deny them the Grace which the Church grants to thoſe that are fallen, by admitting them to the Communion of the Church.

He ſpeaks much to the ſame purpoſe in that Letter which follows, directed to Silvanus Valentinus, and other Biſhops, who had been preſent at the Council of Milevis. He ſeems to reſtrain that Maxim which he eſtabliſhed, of referring all Church-affairs to the See of Rome only to Matters of Faith: Præſertim quoties fidei ratio ventilatur. He refutes particularly the Pelagian Error concerning Children dying before Baptiſm, whom they pretended to have a ſhare of Eternal life.

The Third Letter of Innocent upon that Subject is his Anſwer to the Five Biſhops, who writ to him, upon the ſuſpicion of his Siding with Pelagius. He tells them, that by his Two former Letters he ſufficiently diſcovered his Opinion concerning the Doctrine of that Heretick; That as to his Perſon, he had received certain Acts, by which it appeared, that he had been heard and abſolved ſince the Council; but that he did not believe them, becauſe it was plain from the Acts themſelves, that he had not clearly abjured his Errors: He concludes with aſſuring them, That he had read Pelagius his Book which they ſent him, and that he had found it to be full of Blaſphemies; that he met with nothing in it that pleaſed him, or rather that he met with nothing there that did not diſpleaſe him.

With this Letter there was a ſhort Letter directed to Aurelius, but there is nothing remarkable in it.

Theſe Letters ſhould be put laſt, being written but a little before the Death of P. Innocent, which was upon the 12th. of March of the ſame Year, and long after thoſe that follow about the buſineſs of S. Chryſoſtom, written in 404.

The Twenty-eighth is a Letter of Conſolation to S. Chryſoſtom, ſoon after his Baniſhment.

The Twenty-ninth is directed both to his Clergy and People upon the ſame Subject. The Thirty-firſt to Theophilus, which is in Greek in Palladius, is the firſt of the Three. In the ſame Author there is another directed likewiſe to Theophilus.

The Thirtieth Letter to the Emperor Arcadius, as well as the pretended Anſwers of that Emperor to Innocent, and to his Brother Honorius, are ſpurious, grounded upon the Fable of Arcadius and Eudoxia's Excommunication. He that forged them, ſuppoſeth, That this Empreſs outlived S. Chryſoſtom; but it is certain from Eunapius, who is quoted by Photius, Vol. 77. of his Bibliotheca, that ſhe died ſoon after S. Chryſoſtom's Baniſhment, and three Years before his Death.

The 32d. 33d. and 34th. Letters of P. Innocent, are written about the Perſecutions exerciſed by John of Jeruſalem againſt S. Jerom.

This Pope was skilfull in the Eccleſiaſtical Laws: He often ſpeaketh in commendation of the Nicene Canons: He was very zealous for the Grandeur of the Roman Church, and inſiſted much upon her Rights and Privileges. He writes indifferently well, and he giveth ſuch an Air to his Notions and Reaſonings as recommends them, though they have not always that ſolidity and exactneſs that might be expected. The Chronological Order of his Letters, which ought to have been obſerved in the Printing of them, is as follows:

In the Year 404.

A Letter to Victricius, Biſhop of Rouën, February 15. which is the	II.
A Letter to Theophilus	XXXI.
A Letter to S. John Chryſoſtom	XXVIII.
A Letter to the People of Conſtantinople	XXIX.

In the Year 405.

A Letter to Exuperius, Biſhop of Tholouſe, February 20.	III.

In the Year 413.

A Letter to Boniface	XIV.
A Letter to Alexander	XV.
A Letter to Maximian	XVI.
A Letter to Alexander	XVII.
A Letter to Acacius of Beræa	XIX.
A Letter to Alexander	XVIII.

In the Year 414.

A Letter to the Biſhops of Macedonia, December 13.	XXII.
A Letter to Marcian	XXI.

In the Year 416.

A Letter to Decentius, Biſhop of Eugubium, March 17.	I.
A Letter to Aurelius, June 1.	XII.
A Letter to John of Jeruſalem	XXXII.
A Letter to S. Jerom	XXXIII.
A Letter to Aurelius	XXXIV.
A Letter to a Council at Toledo	XXIII.

In the Year 417. Jan. 27.

A Letter to the Council of Carthage	XXIV.
A Letter to the Council of Milevis	XXV.
A Letter to Five Biſhops	XXVI.
A Letter to Aurelius	XXVII.

LETTERS without Date, the Time whereof is not known.

A Letter to the Biſhop of Nuceria	IV.
A Letter to Maximus and Severus, Biſhops of Abruzzo	V.
A Letter to Innocent, Agapetus, Macedonius and Marianus, Biſhops of Apuleia	VI.

A Let-

A Letter to Rufus, Gerontius, &c. Bishops of Macedonia VII.
A Letter to Florentius, Bishop of Tivoli VIII.
A Letter to Probus IX.
A Letter to Aurelius and to S. Austin X.
A Letter to Juliana XIII.
A Letter to Laurentius XX.
A Supposititious Letter to Arcadius XXX.

P. Innoc. I.

Saint JEROM.

S. Jerom.

SAint JEROM was Born in the Town of Strigonium (a), Situated upon the Borders of Pannonia and Dalmatia. He came into the World about the 345 Year of Jesus Christ (b). His Father Eusebius (c) took very great Care of his Education: And having made him learn the first Principles of Languages in his own Countrey (d), he sent him to Rome, where he had for his Tutor the famous Donatus (e), under whom he made a wonderfull Progress in Philological

(a) The Town of Strigonium.] This Town is called Strigonium by Pto'omy; some confound it with Strigonium in Istria, others will have it to be different.

(b) About the 345 of Jesus Christ.] The Chronology of S. Jerom's Life is much disputed; Some say, that he was born under the Empire of Constantine; according to some, in the 25th. Year of that Emperor's Reign; and according to others in the 31st. that is, in the 331, or in 337. Prosper observes in his Chronicon, that he died when Theodosius was the Ninth time Consul, and Constantius the Third, which is in the Year 420; and that he lived 91 Years. If this be so, the Year of his Nativity should be 329 Paulus Diaconus, Sigebert, Bede, and the Writers of the Martyrologies, give him 98 Years; which would set the time of his Birth yet seven Years higher, if we depend upon Prosper's Epocha for the time of his Death. Baronius, on the contrary, computes that he lived but 78 Years; so that if S. Jerom dy'd in 420, he was born, according to that Author, in 342. Lastly, Others affirm, That he was born in 348, or 350; and that he dy'd in 427. All that can be done in this diversity of Opinions, is to find out those which agree best with what S. Jerom hath written of himself, and with the Circumstances of his Life. He saith in his Commentary upon the Prophet Habakkuk, Chap. 3. That he was a Child, a Student in Grammar, when Julian the Emperor was killed. Being, saith he, yet a Boy, PUER, and in Grammatical Exercises, at the time that all the Cities of the World were polluted with the Blood of Victims; in the greatest heat of Persecution, on a sudden came the news of Julian's Death. This expression, Dum adhuc essem puer, might intimate that S. Jerom was then but 10 or 12 Years old, if S. Jerom did not often use the same word to signifie an older Age; for in the Apology to Pammachius, he hath the same word when he speaks of his Age when he was at Rome. Dum essem puer Romæ, & liberalibus studiis erudirer, &c. Now it is certain that he was then above 12 Years of Age. In a Letter to Nepotian, speaking of the Time of his retiring, he saith that he was then adolescens, imo penè puer. And yet he was then 30 Years old at the least. In the 15th. Chapter of his Commentary upon Isaiah, making mention of the Earthquake that happened under the Consulship of Valens and Valentinian. anno 365, he saith that he was a Boy, and yet he must be then above 24 Years old. Lastly, In his Preface to the Commentary upon Obadiah, he saith, That he had formerly made a Commentary upon that Prophet, being yet a Child: Quid igitur condemnamus, in quibus pueri lusimus? Baronius affirms, that S. Jerom saith in the same place, that he was 30 Years old when he writ his first Commentary upon Obadiah, and that 30 other Years were gone since: If it is certainly so, there could be no difficulty to fix the Epocha of S. Jerom's Nativity; but he doth not say positively that he was 30 Years old, when he made that first Commentary. It is certain that S. Jerom was ordained Priest by Paulinus, before the Peace was concluded with Meletius, and consequently before the Year 378; but he could not be then less than 30 Years of Age. When he came to Rome, three Years before the Death of Pope Damasus, in 382, he must have been 40 Years old at least. In 392 he composed his Treatise of Ecclesiastical Writers, and he must needs have been then above 50. He began to grow in Years, when he had some differences with S. Augustin; and he treateth that Saint, who was born in 355, as a person much younger than himself. All these things give us Reason to believe, that S. Jerom was born in the Year 340, or 342; That he compleated his Studies at Rome in the 25th. Year of his Age, or thereabouts, towards the Year 365; That he went into the Solitudes of Syria at 30, in 370, or 371; That he was ordained Priest at 35, in 375; That he came to Rome in 382, and went from thence in 385; That he retired to Bethlehem in 386, or 387; That he composed his Treatise of Ecclesiastical Writers in 392, where he mentioneth the Books that he had wrote before; That he writ Letters and Treatises after the Taking of Rome, in the Year 412; That he died about 420, Aged 78, or 80 Years.

(c) His Father Eusebius.] He was of a good Family, and sufficiently rich. S. Jerom says, that he had a great Family. The Name of his Mother is not known. His Aunt by the Mother's side was called Castorina. S. Jerom wrote to her the 36 Letter. He had a Sister that vowed Virginity, and a Brother much younger than himself, called Paulinianus.

(d) The first Principles of Languages, &c.] He gives this Account of his first Studies, in his Apology against Rufinus. Memini me puerum curritasse per cellulas Servulorum, dum feriatum duxisse lusibus, & ad Orbilium sævientem de aviæ sinu tractum esse captivum.

(e) The famous Donatus.] He that writ Commentaries upon Virgil and Terence, as S. Jerom assures us, in the first Book against Rufinus, where he calleth Donatus his Tutor, as well as in his Chronicon.

S. Jerom. Learning (f). But that he might make himſelf yet more perfect, having been baptized at Rome (g), he reſolved to go into Gaul, where were at that time many able Men, who made Learning flouriſh. Having performed that Journey with Bonoſus his ancient Companion (h), and collected all the curious things he could meet with in Gaul, he returned to Rome, where he raiſed a very fine Library, deſigning to ſpend the reſt of his Life in Studies and Retirement: But finding that neither Rome, nor his Native Countrey were fit Habitations for ſuch as intended to lead that ſort of Life, he reſolved to withdraw into a far Countrey, and ſo leaving his Countrey, his Kindred and Eſtate, carrying only his Library, with a Summ of Money to bear the Charges of his Journey, he departed from Italy with Heliodorus (i), Evagrius, Innocent, and Hylas, to go to the Eaſt. Evagrius left him at Antioch, but Heliodorus, Innocent, and Hylas accompanied him to the place of his Retirement. He went firſt to Jeruſalem, and there ſtaid ſome time, afterwards he went thro' the Provinces of the leſſer Aſia; and, Laſtly, having tarried ſome time at Antioch, he went into the diſmal Solitudes of Syria, that were uninhabited, unleſs it were with a few Monks. He ſpent there Four years in Study, and Exerciſes of Piety: He learned the Rudiments of the Hebrew Tongue, and began to write Commentaries upon the Scripture. Heliodorus ſoon left him, Innocent and Hylas died in that Deſart, and himſelf was taken very Sick, and being forced at laſt to quit it, he returned to Antioch. That Church was then divided by the Factions of Meletius, Paulinus and Vitalis, who all aſſumed the Title of Biſhop of that City. S. Jerom made no difficulty what ſide to take. His Baptiſm made him a Son of the Church of Rome, and ſo he was obliged to own him, whom that Church acknowledged for lawful Biſhop of Antioch. Having therefore written upon that Subject to Damaſus, who was then Biſhop of Rome, and having received an Anſwer in favour of Paulinus, he embraced his party, and was ordained Prieſt by him, but upon condition that he ſhould not quit that kind of Life which he had embraced, nor be obliged to perform any of the Functions of his Miniſtery (k): This Ordination was about the Year 375. before the Peace was concluded betwixt Meletius and Paulinus in 378. S. Jerom might be about 35 Years old at that time. As he would not enter into Orders, but upon condition not to be compelled to Exerciſe the Functions of his Miniſtery, ſo he did not think himſelf obliged to have his Name regiſtred, nor to reſide in the Church of Antioch; he left it therefore to go to Bethlehem, which he choſe for his conſtant Habitation. Yet he did not ſtay there long, but went to Conſtantinople, where he converſed with S. Gregory Nazianzen, whom he calls his Maſter, and of whom he profeſſes to have learned to expound the Holy Scripture. Having tarried ſome time with this Saint, he had a Call to Rome about the Affairs of the Church, with Paulinus and S. Epiphanius (l), whoſe intereſt he had Eſpouſed againſt thoſe of the Eaſt; this Journey was in all probability undertaken after the Death of Meletius in the Year 382. Damaſus taking notice of S. Jerom's merit, kept him with him, that he might have a Man that was able to anſwer all Queſtions propoſed from all parts. S. Jerom did not only diſcharge the parts of that difficult Employment moſt worthily, but compoſed ſeveral Books beſides. He was likewiſe charged with the conduct of the moſt conſiderable Ladies of the Town (m), by which means he got many Friends

(f) A wonderful Progreſs in Philological Learning.] He learned the Latin and the Greek Tongues perfectly, and got an exact knowledge of profane Authors: He exerciſed himſelf in publick pleadings and frequented the Bar, as he confeſſeth in the Second Chapter of his Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Galatians.

(g) Having been baptized at Rome.] He ſays ſo poſitively in two Letters to Damaſus, which are the 57th, and 58th, where he obſerves, That he took the Robe of Chriſtianity in the City of Rome.

(h) With Bonoſus his ancient Companion.] S. Jerom ſaith in his Letter to Ruſinus, that they had been bred together, had ſtudied together, and that they went together to Rome, and travelled together into Gaul; but he followed not S. Jerom in his Journey into Syria, but retired into a Deſart Iſland of Dalmatia.

(i) He departed from Italy with Heliodorus.] He would not continue in his Native Countrey for ſeveral Reaſons, but particularly, becauſe of the diſorderly Behaviour of Lupicinus the Biſhop; nor at Rome, by reaſon of the tumult of that great City, that diſturbed his reſt.

(k) He was ordained Prieſt by Paulinus, but upon condition that he ſhould not quit that kind of Life, which he had embraced, nor be obliged to perform any of the Functions, &c.] He ſays in his Apology to Pammachius, that he told Paulinus, Si ſic Preſbyterum tribuis, ut Monachum nobis non auferas, tu viderù de judicio tuo. S. Epiphanius writing to John of Antioch, ſays that S. Jerom and Vincentius, two Prieſts would perform no Functions of their Miniſtery, refuſing ſo much as to offer the Sacrifice. Cum ſancti Preſbyteri Hieronymus & Vincentius propter verecundiam & humilitatem, nollent debita nomini ſuo exercere Sacrificia, & laborare in hac parte Miniſterii, qua Chriſtianorum præcipua ſalus eſt.

(l) He was called to Rome with Paulinus and S. Epiphanius.] He ſays ſo himſelf in his 16th, and 27th Epiſtles. He came thither in 382, and went away three years after, as he obſerves in the Letter to Aſella; he ſpeaks in the 11th Letter, and in his Apology to Pammachius of the Letters, and Anſwers which he writ in Damaſus's Name.

(m) He was charged likewiſe with the conduct of the moſt conſiderable Ladies of the Town.] Theſe Ladies are become famous by S. Jerom's writtings; their Names are Marcella, who being left a young Widow, and having been but ſeven Months with an Husband, refuſed to Marry a Man of the firſt quality called Cerealis, to continue in Widowhood. Her Mother Albina, who came alſo to hear S. Jerom. Melania is not leſs famous by the Praiſes of S. Jerom, than by thoſe of Ruſinus. Aſella, Marcellina, and Felicitas, are alſo of the number of thoſe whom he commended: but his greateſt Affection appeared to be for Paula and her Daughters, Bleſilla, Euſtochium, Paulina, Ruffina, and Toxotium.

S. Jerom.

Toxotium. This is what he ſaith himſelf in his Letter to Aſella, of the Eſteem, which he had gotten among the Women. I have, ſaith he, dwelt three years at Rome, I was often encompaſſed with great numbers of Virgins and Women, I often expounded the Holy Scripture to them, This reading made them conſtant, and their Aſſiduity begot a kind of Familiarity, upon which an ill Opinion was conceived of me, and yet he was not able to prevent wholly evil ſpeaking. The Clergy of that City, whoſe manners he reproved, found fault with his Carriage, accuſed him of too much Familiarity with Paula, and they ſuborned a Footman to tax him with diſorder; but the Fellow being impriſoned, and put to the Rack, diſowned all that he had ſaid before.

and much credit. But as he ſeverely reproved the Miſ-demeanours of the Clergy, and the Vices of the people, ſo he got many Enemies, who endeavoured to render his Behaviour ſuſpected. After Damaſus his Death, S. Jerom who this whole three Years that he was at Rome, longed for his Solitude, took Shipping in Auguſt, 385. to go back to Bethlehem, with a great many Perſons that accompanied him. He paſſed thro' Cyprus, where he ſaw S. Epiphanius; from thence he went to Antioch, where Paulinus received him courteouſly; and from Antioch he went to Jeruſalem, and then into Egypt, where he ſtay'd ſome time with Didymus. Afterwards he viſited the Monaſteries of Nitria, and finding the Monks there adhering to Origen's Opinions, he returned to Bethlehem, whither the Ladies Paula, Euſtochium, and Melania came ſoon after. He continued ſome time in that place in a little Cell. But the number of thoſe that embraced that kind of Life being increaſed, Paula built there a Church and four Monaſteries, one for Men, and three for Women. S. Jerom then enjoying perfectly that Quietneſs which he ſo much deſired, continued his Labours, and there compoſed the greateſt part of his Works upon the Scripture. His reſt was ſomewhat diſturbed by the Quarels which he had with Rufinus, and with John of Jeruſalem, upon the Account of Origeniſm; yet he went on with writing, and defended himſelf with a great deal of Vigour. He died very old in the Year of Chriſt, 420.

This Saint wrote great numbers of Books, full of profound Learning, and written with great Purity and Eloquence. In our Accounts, and Abridgments, we ſhall follow Marianus Victorius's Order, that he uſes in the Edition which he publiſhed of S. Jerom's works.

The Firſt Volume contains the Letters which S. Jerom writ, either to exhort his Friends to Vertue, or to inſtruct them, or to commend them in Panegyricks, or funeral Orations.

The Firſt, directed to Heliodorus, was written by S. Jerom from his Solitude, ſome time after this Friend left him to return into his own Countrey. He exhorts him to come back again, by repreſenting the great Advantages of a retired Life, with great force and Fineneſs, and by anſwering all the Reaſons that might keep him from embracing it with abundance of Art. This Treatiſe is a Maſter-piece of Eloquence in its kind; nothing can be more florid, more agreeable, or more moving. " This Letter, ſaith he, whereof you will find ſome lines blotted with my tears, will put " you in mind of the tears I ſhed, and of the Groans I uttered at your going from me. You " then endeavoured by your Careſſes, to ſweeten the contempt that you caſt upon my Intreaties. .... " I was not able to ſtop you at that time, and now I ſeek after you now you are abſent .... " No, I will uſe no more Intreaties, I will employ no more Careſſes: Love that feels its ſelf of- " fended ought to turn into Anger: You who regarded not my Supplications, will perhaps hear- " ken to my Reproaches. Nice Soldier, what are you doing in your Father's houſe? .... Re- " member that day wherein by Baptiſm you liſted your ſelf a Soldier of Chriſt, then you took " an Oath of Fidelity to him, that you would ſpare neither Father nor Mother for his Service .... " Tho' your little Nephew ſhould hang about your Neck, tho' your Mother ſhould tear her hair, " and rend her clothes to ſhow you the Boſom that carried you, to oblige you to ſtay; and " tho' your Father ſhould lie down upon the Threſhold of the Door to ſtop you, ſtep over your " Father, and follow the Standard of the Croſs with dry Eyes: It is great mercy to be cruel on " ſuch occaſions. I know you will tell me, we have not an Heart of ſtone, nor Bowels of iron... " The love of God, and the fear of Hell break all Chains. The Scripture, you will ſay, Com- " mands us to obey our Parents: Yes, but whoſoever loveth them more than Chriſt, loſeth his " his own Soul. But this, you will ſay, is to be underſtood, when they perſecute us to make " us deny Chriſt. You are miſtaken, Brother, if you ſuppoſe that a Chriſtian can be without Per- " ſecution: He is then moſt violently Aſſaulted, when he thinks himſelf moſt ſecure. Satan our " Enemy is always like a Lyon ſeeking to devour us; ... On the one ſide Pleaſures court us, on " the other Covetouſneſs torments us .... You are not allowed to enjoy your own Eſtate, you muſt " renounce all for Jeſus Chriſt. If you will be Heir to the Goods of this World, you cannot be Co- " heir with Jeſus Chriſt. Do you know the meaning of the word Monk? Why do you remain in " the World, you that ought to be alone? ... But what! you will anſwer me then, are all thoſe " that live in Cities no Chriſtians? You are not in the ſame condition with others. Hear the " words directed unto you by our Saviour; If you will be perfect, ſell all that you have, give it " to the poor, and come and follow me. Have you vowed perfection? A perfect Servant ſhould " have nothing but Jeſus Chriſt. So that if you be deſirous of this World's Goods, you are no " longer in that State of perfection which you have embraced. Perhaps you will alledge the Ex- " ample of thoſe Churchmen who live in Cities; ſhall I find fault with their Reſolutions? " God forbid, that I ſhould ſpeak evil of thoſe that ſucceed the Apoſtles, who conſecrate the " Body of Jeſus Chriſt with their Sacred mouths, who make us Chriſtians, and who holding " the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven in their hands, judge, if I may ſo ſay, before the day of " Judgment,

S. Jerom. " Judgment, and are the Guardians of the Virginity of the Spouſes of Chriſt. It is not with " Monks as with Secular Church-men: Theſe feed the Sheep of Chriſt, and we receive from " them the ſpiritual Food: they live of the Altar, and we ſhould be guilty if we did not bring " our Offerings to the Altar. I am not permitted to ſit down before a Prieſt, and if I ſin he " may deliver me to Satan; if you are ſollicited to take Orders, I ſhall rejoyce with you for your " Exaltation, but ſhall fear a fall ... for as he who worthily diſcharges his Miniſtery, acquires a " degree of perfection; ſo he on the contrary that comes to the Altar unworthily, is guilty of the " Body and Blood of Chriſt. All Biſhops are not Biſhops. If the Example of S. Peter com- " forts you, let that of Judas terrifie you. If you admire Stephen's Sanctity, let the Fall of Ni- " cholas fright you. It is not the Eccleſiaſtical Dignity that makes good Chriſtians.... " It is not eaſie for all men to have S. Paul's Graces, nor S. Peter's Holineſs, who now " are reigning with Chriſt. If a Monk falls, a Prieſt may pray for him, but who ſhall pray " for the fall of a Prieſt? S. Jerom having thus far proſecuted his reaſonings, endeth with theſe Acclamations. " Imitating, ſaith he, thoſe Pilots, who happily ſteered their Ship between Rocks " and Banks of Sand! O Wilderneſs, he cryes out, always covered with the Flowers of Jeſus Chriſt! " O Solitude, where the Stones that are made uſe of to build the City of the great King, ſpoken " of in the Revelations, are to be found! O happy Retirement, where Men may have familiar " Converſation with God! What do you do, Brother, in the World? how long will you " dwell under the ſhadow of Houſes? till what time will you be in the Priſon of ſmoaking " Cities? What are you afraid of in theſe ſolitary places? Is it Poverty? but Jeſus Chriſt calleth " the poor Happy. Do's labour aſtoniſh you? Can he that ſtrives in the publick Exerciſes be " Crowned before he has fought? Do you think of your Diet? a lively Faith fears not hunger. " Do you dread lying upon the naked ground, with your Bodies worn out with Faſting? Re- " member that Jeſus Chriſt reſts there along with you. Are you Scared with the extent of this " hideous Solitude? Paradiſe is open to you. Theſe are ſome of the Arguments which S. Jerom " uſes to perſwade Heliodorus to return to his Retirement.

The Second Letter to Nepotian Heliodorus his Nephew was compoſed by S. Jerom long after the Firſt, as he ſays himſelf at the beginning. " Being, ſaith he, yet young, when I ſtruggled with the " Firſt motions of youth, by the Auſterities of Solitude; I write to Heliodorus your Uncle a " Letter of Exhortation, full of Complaints and Tears, to ſhow how ſorry I was for the ab- " ſence of my Friend. I plaid then ſuitably to my Age, and uſed all the Flowers of Rhetorick " with which my ſelf at that time was full. But now I am Old, and my Forehead is full of " wrinkles, and my Chin covered with a white Beard, I can no longer do what I could do then. And yet, he Diſcourſes here after a manner youthful enough, producing ſeveral Examples taken out of Eccleſiaſtical and prophane Hiſtory, to ſhew that old Men have not the ſame heat nor vigour that young Men have. He addeth, " Expect not therefore from me youthful Declama- " tions, florid Sentences, ſweet Words, poignant or acute Expreſſions at the end of my Periods, " to draw the applauſe of thoſe that hear us; I beg of God only the lights of his Wiſdom.... " Hearken then, as S. Cyprian ſaith, to a Diſcourſe that hath more Strength than Sweetneſs; " Hearken to him that is your Colleague, and your Father by his age.... I know that your " holy Uncle Heliodorus, who is now a Miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt, has taught and do's teach you Ho- " lineſs, and that his Life is an example of Vertue to you: But take from me beſides theſe ſmall " Directions, and joyning this Treatiſe to that which I writ before to your Uncle, learn of this how " to be a perfect Church-man, as the former may inſtruct you, how to be a good Monk. Theſe are the main Precepts which S. Jerom giveth to a Church-man in this excellent Letter. " A " Clerk, ſaith he, that ſerveth the Church of Jeſus Chriſt ought to begin with the knowledge of " what his Name ſignifies; and then Labour to be what is ſignified by it. The Greek word " Κλῆρος ſignifieth a Lot or a Portion: therefore the Name Clerk is given to Church-men, either " becauſe they are conſecrated to the Lord, or becauſe the Lord is their Portion, but whoſoever " belongeth to the Lord, or hath the Lord to his Portion, ought to live as one that poſſeſſeth the " Lord, and in whom the Lord dwelleth: he is to poſſeſs nothing but the Lord.... And ſo " indeed, in ſerving at the Altar, I ought to live of the Altar: but ought to be content with " with what is neceſſary for Food and Raiment; and ſtript of all things, I ought only to follow the " Croſs.... I conjure you therefore, and I admoniſh you, let not Intereſt make you enter into " Chriſt's Service, neither heap up greater Riches in the Eccleſiaſtical State than you did when " you were in the World, leaſt they ſay unto you: Their lot will do them no good: We ſee ſome " men wealthier ſince they have been Monks, than they were before: ſome Clerks have Riches " while they ſerve poor Jeſus Chriſt, which they had not while they ſerved the rich Devil: ſo " that the Church groans to ſee them rich in her Boſom, that were Beggers whilſt they were in " the World. You muſt ſet the Poor and Pilgrims at your Table, and Jeſus Chriſt will be one " of the Gueſts. Avoid thoſe Clerks as a plague who make Merchandice of the Church's Goods, " who become rich and proud, tho' they were poor and contemptible enough before.... Let " Women never come near your Houſes, or at leaſt but ſeldom; have no Familiarity with the " Virgins conſecrated to God, either be acquainted with none, or love them all equally: Dwell not " in the ſame Houſe with them. Truſt not your paſt Chaſtity: you are neither holier than David, " nor ſtronger than Sampſon, nor wiſer than Solomon. Viſit not Women alone, ſpeak not with them " face to face: but avoid whatſoever may beget evil Suſpicion.... This is a thing ſhameful for " us,

" us. The Priests of false Deities, Comedians, Actors, and the basest of men may be Legatees, " only Clergy men and Monks cannot, the Law forbids them; and a Law that was not made " by Emperors who were Enemies to Religion, but by Christian Princes. Yet I complain not of " this Law, but I am sorry that we deserved it.... The Law was enacted out of a prudent " foresight, and yet it is not strong enough to suppress Covetousness. We elude the Law by " Trustees.... The Glory of a Bishop is to give ease to the Misery of the Poor, and it is his " greatest disgrace to apply himself to increase wealth. S. Jerom describes here the Lewdness of some Clergy-men, and the baseness of others to ingratiate themselves with rich Men, that they might make them their Heirs. He adds afterwards, That a Bishop ought to do what he preaches; that his mouth, his hands, and his mind are exactly to agree together. He recommends to Priests Submission to their Bishops, and that they should honour them as their Fathers. But at the same time he warneth Bishops, to remember that they are Priests and not Masters: Sacerdotes se esse noverint, non dominos; And that they are to use Church-men as Church-men, if they themselves would be honoured as Bishops. He blames the Custom of some Churches where Priests were not permitted to speak before their Bishop. He would have a Preacher to excite the tears of his Auditors, rather than their applause. He says, That his preaching ought to be neither Declamatory nor Satyrical, but that he ought to expound the Mysteries of our Religion, and the Morality of the Gospel, with Clearness and Gravity. Afterwards he goes to the manner how Church-men ought to be habited. No Clergy-man in his Opinion should affect either black or white Garments, but avoid Neatness and Slovenliness: theone is a Mark of Effeminateness, and the other is often the effect of a foolish Vanity. As to Alms-deeds, S. Jerom complains that in his time some Bishops and Ecclesiasticks distributed small Alms to the poor, to enrich themselves, by appropriating to themselves considerable Sums under that pretence of those Alms. He tells the Bishops that they ought to take special care whom they intrusted with the Dispensation of Alms. He reproves those who were very careful to see Churches well built, sumptuously adorned with Marble and Gold, and the Altars covered with precious Stones, but took no care to make a good choice of Ministers of Jesus Christ. He forbids Church-men, and particularly Bishops to make any Feasts for Lay-men, but recommends to them Sobriety. Yet he desires them not to proceed to Excess in their Fasts, but that such as they shall observe should be pure, chaste, moderate, simple, and without Superstition. He laughs at those, who refusing to eat Oyl upon Fast-days, inquired after Dainties and Meats not easie to be had; and at those, who forbearing to drink Water or to eat Bread, drank the Juice of pleasant Herbs. He declaims against those Ecclesiasticks, that affected to make a shew of their Mortifications and good Works, to get Glory to themselves. Lastly, he recommends to Clergy-men Charity, Prudence, Discretion, and Modesty. He takes notice at the latter End, that he writes this Letter in his Retirement at Bethlehem, Ten years after the Book of Virginity, which he wrote at Rome. This shews that this Letter is of the Year 393. S. Jerom.

Nepotian to whom this Letter was written, dying not long after, S. Jerom writ the Third Letter to his Uncle Heliodorus, to comfort him for the Death of his Nephew, of whom he makes a Panegyrick. This Letter which is not less florid or less eloquent, is full of Historical passages, collected with much Affectation: He produces the examples of several Heathens who despised Death: and shows that it ought less to be feared by a Christian. That Heliodorus ought to be comforted, since Nepotian was in possession of eternal Happiness. Then he sets forth his Vertues, together with the misfortunes and Miseries of this Life, whence he concludes, that we are to esteem those Happy, who are out of this World. There he makes an elegant Comparison, betwixt the power of Kings and Bishops. A King, says he, Commands men that are obliged to obey whether they will or no; whereas the Bishop hath Dominion over those only that are willing to obey. The Prince brings men under by Terror: The Bishop is bound to serve those that are under his Conduct. The former protects the Bodies which must die; but the latter takes care of Souls to give them eternal Life. All the faithful have their Eyes upon their Bishop, his Family and conduct is observed by every Body, he is to be an example to the whole Church: and there is none but thinks he can do what he does.

Besides, there is in that Letter, an excellent Portraicture of the uncertainty of this Life. We die daily, saith he, We alter continually, and yet we are so foolish, that we live as if we were to abide eternally. The time I spend in dictating, writing, reading over again, and correcting, is so much time towards the shortning of my Life. The stops, and Letters of my Amanuensis, are so many moments to lessen the length of my Life; the only thing that turns to account, is the love which we have for Jesus Christ. Charity never comes to an end, but lives for ever in the Heart, and by it our Brother Nepotian is still present with us after his Death; it is that which unites us, tho' we be separated by a vast space of Land, or Sea.

The Fourth Letter is directed to one Rusticus a Western Monk, to whom S. Jerom gives Rules for that kind of Life, which he was to follow. It begins with this Sentence, None is more happy than a Christian, seeing he hath a Promise of the Kingdom of Heaven: None is to Fight more, since he is in danger of his Life; none is stronger, since he overcometh the Devil: And then he exhorts Rusticus to persevere with Zeal in that profession which he had embraced. He enjoyns him to be respectful to his Mother, but not to be too much tyed to her, nor to hold any Conversation with other Women. He adviseth him to renounce all these things, and to withdraw from the

S. Jerom. World. He warneth him not lightly to take upon him Holy Orders, or to affect to be a Maſter before he had been a Diſciple; and to chuſe rather, to live in a Monaſtery, than to be an Hermit in a Solitude; and he repreſents the Inconveniencies of that kind of Life: "Commonly, ſaith "he, an Hermit becometh proud; he thinks himſelf to be ſome Body, and forgetteth what he "is; he eats what he pleaſes, ſleeps as much as he will, fears no Body, and you ſhall find him "oftner in the Town, than in his Cell. Not, ſaith he, That I find fault with a ſolitary Life, "which I have ſo often commended: but I would have theſe Soldiers come out of Monaſteries "where they have learned their Exerciſes, leaſt the ſevere beginnings of Solitude ſhould amaze "them. S. Jerom recommends to him afterwards the Vertues and Exerciſes of a right Monk, and particularly, working with his hands, Reading and Meditation upon the Holy Scriptures, Prayer, Obedience to Superiours, Chaſtity, Faſting, &c. He blames the Monks that live like Secular, and obſerves, that they uſed to chuſe Monks to make them Church-men. He tells Ruſticus, That he ought not to begin to write early, but Practiſe long before he undertook to teach. At the end of this Letter he praiſes two Biſhops of Gaul, Proculus Biſhop of Marſeilles, and Exuperius Biſhop of Tholouſe; what he ſaith of the latter is very remarkable. This Holy Biſhop, ſaith he, imitates the Widow of Sarepta; he feeds others, and ſtarves himſelf; his face is pale with faſting; nothing but other Mens hunger troubles him; He has given all his Eſtate to the poor, and yet there is none richer than he; He carries the Body of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt in an Oſier Basket, and his precious Blood in a Glaſs Veſſel; one may ſay, That he drove Covetouſneſs out of the Temple of the Lord. Follow, ſaith he, to Ruſticus, at the latter End of the Letter, the ſteps of this good Biſhop, and of other Perſons who imitate his Vertues, thoſe Saints whom the Paſtoral Dignity has made poorer and more humble. And if you deſire to embrace a condition more perfect, get out of your Country, as Abraham did, leave your Kindred, and get you to an unknown place. If you have any Goods, ſell them, and diſtribute the price of them to the Poor. If you have none, you are diſcharged of a great Burden. Strip your ſelf of all things to follow Jeſus Chriſt only. Nudum Chriſtum nudus ſequere. It is hard, I confeſs, it is Great, and it is Difficult, but the recompence is Infinite. He mentions in this Letter, that which he had written to Nepotian, and ſo this was written after the Year 393, perhaps in 394.

In the Fifth to Florentius, who came to Jeruſalem, he commends the Charity of that Holy man: He ſent him a Letter to be delivered to Rufinus, who was to go from Egypt to Jeruſalem with Melania, where he ſpeaks as much to the advantage of that Presbyter, as he ſpoke afterwards ſince to his Diſparagement. I would not, ſaith he to Florentius, have you judge of me by his Vertues, you ſhall ſee in him the viſible marks of Holineſs, I am but dirt and aſhes, and I think my ſelf Happy if my weak Eyes can but behold his Vertues; he his pure and white as Snow, but I am all over covered with Sins. S. Jerom writ this Letter from the Solitudes of Syria about the Year 372.

Florentius having anſwered S. Jerom, this Saint wrote again a Sixth Letter, to tell him, that having read his, he was tempted to go to Jeruſalem, but he durſt not quit his Solitude. He prays him to deſire of Rufinus the Commentary upon the Canticles that was compoſed by Rheticius Biſhop of Autun, that he might take a Copy of it; and to tell him, that an Old man one Paulus, deſired the Copy of Tertullian which he had lent him: He intreats him likewiſe that he would cauſe ſome Books to be tranſcribed for him, which he had not, of which he ſent him a Memorandum: and ſend him S. Hilary's Commentary upon the Pſalms, and his Book of Synods, which himſelf had Copied with his own hand at Triers: and in requital he profers to communicate to him the Books which he had in his own Library.

The Seventh is directed to Læta Wife of Toxotius Paula's Son. This Lady had a young Daughter called Paula, whom her Grand-mother deſigned for a Religious Life. S. Jerom writes this Letter to the Mother of this little Girl, to teach her how ſhe ſhould breed her up, and exhorts her to ſend her as ſoon as ſhe could to his Monaſtery at Bethlehem. Her Grand-father was a Prieſt of Jupiter, but the reſt of the Family were Chriſtians. This made S. Jerom ſay pleaſantly, that it was a ſurprizing thing that this Old man ſhould make much of a Girl that ſung the Praiſes of Jeſus Chriſt, and be compaſſed about with a Family of Chriſtians, which gave him hopes that he would be converted: For, ſaith he pleaſantly, I fanſie that Jupiter himſelf might have believed in Jeſus Chriſt, had he had ſuch a Family as yours; what he ſays afterwards is more ſerious. Tho' he laughs at my Letter, and calls me Fool and Senſleſs, yet I deſpair not of his Converſion, his Son-in-Law did the ſame, before he embraced the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt. No man is born a Chriſtian, but becomes one afterwards..... It is never too late to be converted.

It will not be thought amiſs, that I ſhould ſet down here ſome of thoſe Precepts which S. Jerom gives for the Education of a young Woman, to ſhew that it is no new thing to ſee retired Perſons, and thoſe that are furtheſt from the commerce of civil Life, teach the People of the World how to breed their Children. It is ſtrange that ſuch as have Children to bring up, ſhould be obliged to do it well, and to have recourſe to thoſe that have made a vow never to have Children, or a Family themſelves. "Thus, ſaith S. Jerom, is that Virgin to be Educated, whoſe "Soul is deſigned to be the Temple of God. Let her not hearken to, let her not learn nor diſ"courſe of any thing, but what is proper to inſpire the love of God. Let her never hear filthy "Talk, nor learn profane Songs, but let her Voyce be betimes accuſtomed to the ſinging of Pſalms: "Let no Boys come near her, her Maids and Governeſſes ſhould be wiſe, and kept from the "Company of diſorderly People, leaſt they teach her more evil than they have learned them-

"ſelves.

" ſelves. Let them teach her to read with Box or Ivory Letters, whereof ſhe may remember the Names..... She ought to be made to love Study and Labour, either by promiſing her Reward, or by provoking her by Example. If ſhe be of a ſoft Temper, reprove her not too fiercely; ſhe ought to be encouraged with Commendation to raiſe in her mind a Deſire to excel others, and ſome trouble to ſee her ſelf out-done. Above all, have care that ſhe be not diſguſted with Study, leaſt ſhe come to hate it when ſhe becomes older. Let her read the Sentences of the Holy Scripture, and chuſe for her an able Maſter, a Man of a good Life, who may take pains to teach her to read. Deſpiſe not theſe beginnings as inconſiderable, for the reſt depend upon them. The beginnings of Reading and Pronunciation are not taught alike by a skilful, and by a wary Man: Do not let her uſe her ſelf to ſpeak her words by halves, nor to take Pleaſure in handling of Gold or Purple: The one will hurt her Speech, and the other her Manners. Let her not learn that in her Infancy, which ſhe muſt forget afterwards..... Evil is eaſily imitated, and we often take up their Vices, whoſe Vertues we cannot reach: Her Nurſe ſhould be ſober, no Tatler, nor given to Wine..... Let her clothes be modeſt, convenient for the State for which you deſign her: Let not her Ears be bored, nor her Face us'd to Painting: ſhe ſhould not have her Hair dyed fair, nor her Garments adorned with Gold, Pearls or Jewels, unleſs you deſign her for Hell fire.... When ſhe grows older, let her follow her Parents to the Church, but never go out to return to the Pomps of the World. Let her keep to her Chamber, and never appear at Feaſts, or publick Meetings: but ſhe ought not to uſe too much Abſtinence till ſhe comes to the Age of ſtrength, leaſt ſhe prejudices her Health. Let her take that which helps neceſſity, but not what feeds Luxury: Let her not be at Muſick-Meetings, nor hear muſical Inſtruments, but learn and repeat daily Sentences out of the Holy Scripture; She ſhould never go abroad without her Mother, nor grow very Familiar with any one of her Servants; provide her a wiſe, prudent and vertuous Governeſs, that may ſhow her the way to riſe in the Night to ſing Pſalms, to rehearſe the morning Hymns, and at Tierce, Sext, Nones, and Veſpers. Let her pray, and work Night and Day; let her learn to handle the Diſtaffe, to turn the Wheel and ſpin Wooll; Let her not meddle with Embroidering either of Gold or Silver; let her be modeſtly cloathed, and ſoberly fed; ſhe ſhould not faſt exceſſively, but obſerve Lent regularly, and take no pleaſure in Baths. S. Jerom.

To theſe moral Precepts, S. Jerom adds an Inſtruction for the Studies of young Girls, and adviſes them to read all the Canonical Books, both of the Old and New Teſtaments, not excepting the Canticles. He adviſes them not to read the Apocrypha, but the Books of S. Athanaſius, and of S. Hilary. He concludes by exhorting Læta to ſend her Daughter to the Monaſtery at Bethlehem. This Letter is written from the Solitude of Bethlehem, about the Year 400.

The Eighth Letter was written in the Year 411. after the taking of Rome by the Goths, it is directed to a Virgin of the Firſt quality, one Demetrias, who was retired into Africa, and there had embraced a Religious Life. S. Jerom having commended her Grand-mother Proba, directs her how to maintain her Virginity, by recommending to her ſeveral Exerciſes of Piety, as reading of the Holy Scripture, renouncing the Pomps of the World, exerciſing Penance, moderate Faſting, Obedience, Humility, Modeſty, Alms-deeds, Prayers at all hours of the day, and working with her hands. He adviſes her to ſtick to the Faith of Pope Innocent, and to beware of the Errors of the Origeniſt's, and tells her, that ſhe ſhould chuſe rather to dwell in a Nunnery with other Virgins, than to live alone. But he would have her avoid the Company of the Ladies of the World. He finiſhes his Letter with Commendations of Virginity. It is to be noted, that in thoſe days Virgins conſecrated to God might go out of their Cloyſters, but S. Jerom adviſes them to do it ſeldom. He calleth Penance, a Second Plank after Shipwrack. He obſerveth that Faſting is not properly a Vertue, but the ground of all Vertues; that Chaſtity is a degree to arrive at Perfection, but if it be ſingle, it is not enough to merit the Crown of Heaven. He admoniſhes Virgins not to be lifted up, becauſe of the perfection of their State, but to humble themſelves under the mighty hand of God, who reſiſteth the Proud, and giveth Grace to the humble. But, ſaith he, what is of Grace is no recompence for Works, but a Free-gift, wherefore the Apoſtle writeth, that the good which Man doth is not to be attributed, either to his Will or Labour, but to the mercy of God; and yet to will, or not to will, is in our Power; but what depends upon us, doth not do ſo without God's help. Velle & non velle noſtrum eſt, ipſumque quod noſtrum eſt, ſine Dei miſeratione noſtrum non eſt. At laſt he exhorts Virgins, rather to beſtow their Eſtates upon the Poor, than to beautifie Churches.

The Ninth Letter is directed to a Lady of Quality, one Salvina, who had loſt her Husband Nebridius, Son to the Empreſſes Siſter. Tho' S. Jerom knew her not, yet he writ to her at the requeſt of one of her Friends called Avitus. He begins his Letter with Commendations of Nebridius, whoſe Vertues were the more to be admired, becauſe he had ſpent his Life at Court, and in great Employments; and then adviſes his Widow to render to her Children, what ſhe owed her Husband, by giving them a good Education, exhorting her earneſtly to continue a Widow, and giving Rules for her Behaviour. He exceedingly blames Second Marriages, and looks upon them rather as tolerated to prevent a greater Evil, than permitted as a good. He obſerves in that Letter, that Riches do not hinder a Man from being ſaved, provided he makes good uſe of them; as Poverty doth not make a Man holy or juſt, if he doth not avoid Sin. He calls Penance the Remedy of the miſerable: He ſays that men ſhould have a care of Sinning, out of hopes

S. Jerom. hopes of riſing again by Repentance; that ſuch Wounds ſhould be prevented, as cannot be cured without Pain; that it is a far greater advantage to enter the Haven of Salvation with a ſound Veſſel full fraught with Merchandices, than to be forced to ſwim upon a Plank, in danger of being broken againſt the Rocks, and the Waves of an agitated Sea. Salvina or Silvina, to whom this Letter was written, was the Daughter of that Gildo Governour of Africa, who going about to uſurp the Empire, after Theodoſius his Death, periſhed Anno 398. She was a Widow, and dwelt at Conſtantinople when S. Chryſoſtom was expelled from thence, as we learn from Palladius, who tells us, That S. Chryſoſtom before he went away, entred into the Baptiſtery, and called to him Olympias, the Deaconneſſes, Procla, Pentadia, and Silvina, Nebridius's Widow: So that S. Jerom's Letter might be written about the Year 400. not long after the Death of her Husband.

The Tenth is written to another young Widow named Furia, of the Race of the Camilli. He diſſwades her from Marrying a ſecond time, tho' ſhe had had no Children by her firſt Husband; he tells her, that in this particular, ſhe ſhould not regard neither the Remonſtrances, or threatnings of her Father, but he recommends to her, that ſhe ſhould be ſober, modeſt, conſtant in reading and praying, that ſhe ſhould give Alms, avoid the World, deſpiſe its Pomps, &c. Laſtly, he repreſents the inconveniencies of a Second Marriage very livelily, and ſays at the latter end of the Letter, that he writ it two Years after his Books againſt Jovinian, that were compoſed, ſometime before the Year 392. and ſo this Letter is of 394.

The following Letter to Ageruchia, is upon the ſame Subject: He does ſpeak there with leſs Zeal againſt Second Marriages, than in the foregoing; and yet he profeſſes not to condemn them. He ſays that he had ſeen at Rome a Woman buried by her Twenty ſecond Husband, and a Husband who had buried Twenty Wives. At the end of this Letter he Diſcourſes againſt ſuch as are too much in love with this Life, and the good things of this World. Men, ſays he, build as if they were to live for ever, and they live as if they were ſure of Life next day. There is none ſo aged but promiſes to himſelf, That he ſhall live one year more, and ſo forgets what he is: and when he is come to the age that he deſired, yet does he not think himſelf near Death, and flatters himſelf with the Life of many years to come. He concludes this with a Deſcription of the pitiful condition, the Roman Empire, was reduced to by the Incurſions of the Barbarians, eſpecially in Gaul and Spain, which made him afraid of Rome it ſelf. This ſhews, that this Letter was written ſome time before the taking of Rome, which happened in 410.

In the Twelfth Letter S. Jerom preſcribes to Gaudentius ſome Rules for the Education of his Daughter Pacatula, whom he deſigned for a Religious Life: It contains ſuch Precepts as are in the Letter to Læta; there he bewails the misfortune of the taking of Rome, in 410.

The Thirteenth is directed to Paulinus afterwards Biſhop of Nola, who intending to be a Monk, addreſſed himſelf to S. Jerom, as a Perſon perfectly well skilled in the Exerciſes of a Monaſtical Life, to ask his advice how he ſhould behave himſelf. This Father having with great Humility anſwered Paulinus his Complements, for his living ſo long ſolitary in the Wilderneſs of Bethlehem, Counſels him to retire out of Cities, if he reſolved to embrace a Monaſtick State.

In this Separation from the World, he chiefly places the difference between a Monaſtical, and an Eccleſiaſtical State. If, Says he, you will enter upon the Miniſtery of the Church, and perform the Functions of the Prieſthood, if you are pleaſed with the Epiſcopal Dignity; then keep in Towns, and work out the Salvation of your own Soul by ſaving others: but if you would be a Monk, that is, live Solitarily, what do you do in Towns, which are no Habitations for Monks, but for thoſe that love the World? .... Prieſts and Biſhops ought to imitate the Apoſtles and Apoſtolical Men, to ſucceed them in their Vertue, as they do in their Dignity; as for us, we have for our Commanders, The Pauls, the Antonies, the Julians, the Macarii, the Hilarions; and to come to the Scripture it ſelf, Elias is the firſt of our Order, Eliſha is one of us, the Sons of the Prophets that dwelt in the Fields and Deſart places, and upon the Banks of Jordan, they are our Maſters. The Sons of Rechab, who drunk neither Wine nor Sider, are alſo of this Number. S. Jerom having exalted the Monaſtical State by theſe Examples, preſcribes ſeveral Rules to Paulinus for the Exerciſes which he was to follow in his Retirement. He thanks him afterwards for the Books that he ſent him, in Commendation of Theodoſius, and having commended it, he exhorts Paulinus to apply himſelf to the reading of the Holy Scripture, telling him that if he had but that Foundation, nothing would be more learned, more ſweet, or more acceptable, and better written than his Works. From thence he takes occaſion, to deſcribe the Stile and Character of the Latin Eccleſiaſtical Authors. Tertullian, ſaith he, is full of Sentences, but his Elocution is hard. S. Cyprian's Stile is ſmooth, and like the running waters of a Fountain, which paſſes away quietly, and without Agitation; but having wholly apply'd himſelf to the teaching of Vertue, and being buſy'd by Perſecutions, he writ nothing upon the Holy Scripture: The glorious Martyr Victorinus can hardly tell his meaning. Lactantius is like a River of a Ciceronian Eloquence; would to God he could as eaſily have confirmed our Doctrine, as he overthrows that of other Mens. Arnobius his Stile is uneven, without method or order. S. Hilary hath an high and ſwelling Stile, like the Gallick Tragedies, but intermixing that way of writing with Grecian Flowers, he often writes long Periods and very intricate, which can neither be read nor underſtood by Men of ordinary Capacities. And having thus ſet forth the Character of thoſe ancient Authors, he giveth that of Paulinus in theſe Terms: You have, ſaith he, a great deal of Wit, a wonderful abundance of Expreſſions, a natural pureneſs, and rare prudence. If you add to that Eloquence, the Study and underſtanding of the Scripture, Scripture, I ſhall quickly ſee you the firſt of our Authors. And to this he exhorts him. This Letter was written before Paulinus was ordained, and after his Converſion about the Year 380. S. Jerom.

The Fourteenth Letter to Celantia, is not like S. Jerom's Stile. It is thought to be written by Paulinus Biſhop of Nola. It contains very uſeful Inſtructions, and Precepts for a Lady, to lead a Chriſtian Life in the midſt of Honours, Riches, and the Perplexities of managing her Family.

The Fifteenth Letter to Marcella, is in Commendation of one Acella a Virgin.

The Sixteenth directed to a Virgin, named Principia, is the Panegyrick of Marcella, a Roman Lady, Daughter of Albina, who being left a Widow ſeven Months after Marriage, reſolved to continue ſo, though ſhe was courted by the Conſul Cerealis, and was the firſt of the Roman Ladies that embrac'd a Religious Life. S. Jerom, after a deſcription of her Vertues, commends her for procuring the Condemnation of Origen's Books, and for the Courage which ſhe ſhewed when Rome was taken; he obſerves that ſhe died quickly after, and that he writ this Panegyrick two Years after her Death; which ſhews, that this Letter was written in 412 or 413.

The Seventeenth Letter is from Bethlehem, in the Name of Paula and Euſtochium, to Marcella, whom they invite to come to them, and to viſit the holy Places. It may have been written about the Year 400.

The Eighteenth is written in S. Jerom's Name to the ſame Lady, and upon the ſame Subject.

The Nineteenth is a handſome Letter of Thanks to Euſtochium, for a Preſent of ſome Fruits that ſhe ſent him upon S. Peter's Day.

The following Letter to Marcella is likewiſe to thank him for ſome Preſents, which that Lady had ſent him from Rome.

The Twenty-firſt is written to an Old Man of Spain of 100 Years of Age. S. Jerom congratulates with him, that God had given him a fine Old Age, freed from the ordinary infirmities, common to perſons of thoſe Years; he commends his Vertues, and deſires of him the Commentaries of Fortunatianus, the Hiſtory of Aurelius Victor, and Novatian's Letters, and tells him that he would ſend him the Life of the Bleſſed Paul the firſt Hermite. This Letter may have been written in S. Jerom's firſt Retreat.

The Two and Twentieth is a Treatiſe of Virginity to Euſtochium. Having ſpoken of the Excellency of it, of the Difficulty of preſerving and the Danger of loſing it, he lays down Precepts which a Virgin is to obſerve to keep her ſelf pure. He forbids her to drink Wine; he bids her avoid dainty Fare, Effeminateneſs, Pleaſures and ſuperfluous Ornaments; he recommends Solitude to her, and the Reading of the Holy Scripture, Prayer, Renouncing of the Things of this World, Faſting, Humility, and other Chriſtian Vertues. He ſpeaks againſt ſome Clergy-men who kept devout Siſters in their Houſes; And who (ſaith he) under pretence of Spiritual conſolation, entertained a carnal commerce. He blames thoſe alſo that courted Ladies; and to pleaſe them, condeſcended to do ſeveral things unworthy of their Character. To diſſuade Euſtochium from reading prophane Books, he tells her, That being once too earneſt in reading Cicero, Plautus, and other prophane Authors, he fell into a violent Fever, and by it into a kind of Agony, and then was caught up in the Spirit to the Tribunal of Jeſus Chriſt; where having been ſoundly whipt for reading prophane Authors too much, he was forbidden to read them any more: He aſſures Euſtochium, that this Story is not a Dream, and calls the Tribunal where he appeared, and the Judgment that was given againſt him to atteſt the Truth of what he ſays: Yet when Rufinus upbraided him afterwards, that for all that he had not given over reading prophane Books, he laughs at his Simplicity, and jeſts upon him for taking a Dream for a Truth. Declaiming againſt Covetouſneſs, he ſays, that a Monk of Nitria having got together One hundred Pence which were found in his Cell after he was dead, they buried him with his Money, and with this Imprecation; Let this Money periſh with thee. He obſerves upon that occaſion, that there were Five thouſand Monks in the Solitudes of Nitria, dwelling in ſeparated Cells; and that there were three ſorts of Monks in Egypt, namely the Cœnobites, who lived in common; the Anchorets, who dwelt alone in the Wilderneſs; and thoſe that were called Remoboth, who lived Two and Two together, and maintained themſelves after their own way, with the work of their own hands. He blames this laſt ſort, and deſcribes the manner of living of the Anchorets and Cœnobites at large. After this digreſſion, he concludes with commending the Purity of Euſtochium. In all likelihood this Treatiſe was compoſed at Rome about the latter end of Damaſus's Pontificate, about the Year 385.

The Two and Twentieth is written to Marcella upon the Recovery and Converſion of Bleſilla, Paula's Daughter, and Siſter of Euſtochium. This young Widow, after the Torment of a violent Fever for Thirty days together, had embraced a Solitary life. S. Jerom commends her for that generous Reſolution, and confounds thoſe that blamed her. One may find in that Letter a handſome deſcription of the Habit of thoſe ancient Nuns. S. Jerom ſpeaks there againſt the Finery of Women. This Letter was written at Rome about the Year 383.

The next was written much about the ſame time; it is directed to Paula, concerning the Death of an Holy Nun, one Lea. S. Jerom ſhews, that they ought to rejoyce for her Death, becauſe ſhe enjoy'd Happineſs. He commends her Vertues, and comparing her Death, with that of one deſigned to be Conſul, which happened at the ſame time; he ſhows the vaſt difference betwixt a poor Righteous Man's death, and that of a great, rich, and impious Lord.

S. Jerom. The Four and Twentieth is a Letter of Conſolation to Paula, upon the Death of her Daughter Bleſilla, who departed this Life four Months after her Converſion: S. Jerom ſhows, that we ſhould not mourn for Chriſtians who die in a State of Grace, but rather rejoyce for their Happineſs. He reproves Paula ſeverely, becauſe ſhe had given way to exceſſive Grief. This Letter may paſs for an exact Pattern of Elegant and Chriſtian Conſolation. It was compoſed at Rome about the Year 384.

The Five and Twentieth is likewiſe a Conſolatory Letter to Pammachius, upon the Death of his Wife Paulina, who was alſo one of Paula's Daughters. He ſaith but little of Paulina's Death, but enlargeth much in Commendation of Pammachius, who left the World after his Wife's Death, and had beſtowed great part of his Eſtate upon the Poor, and built an Hoſpital for Strangers in the Port of Rome. S. Jerom ſays at the latter end of this Letter, that ſo great a number of Monks flocked to his Monaſtery at Bethlehem, that he was obliged to ſend his Brother Paulinianus to ſell the reſt of the Eſtate which he had in his own Country, to enable him to ſupport his Undertaking. This informs us that this Letter was written at Bethlehem in 398.

The Twenty-ſixth is a Funeral-Sermon for the famous Paula, whoſe Life he deſcribes, and makes her Panegyrick. It is directed to her Daughter Euſtochium. He ſets down at the latter end ſome Epitaphs which he put upon the Grave and upon the Cave where that holy Lady was buried in Bethlehem, and he ſays that ſhe died Febr. 22d. and was buried the 24th. under the Seventh Conſulſhip of Honorius and Ariſtænetus: That is, after our way of reckoning, the 404th. Year ſince the Nativity of our Saviour: And this proves that Funeral Oration to be of that ſame Year.

The Seven and twentieth Letter to a Spaniard, one Lucinius is very remarkable. S. Jerom exhorts that Man who had embraced a Monaſtical Life with his Wife's Conſent, to proſecute the deſign which he had to come to Jeruſalem. He tells him, that he had given Copies of his works to thoſe whom he ſent to him; That he had not tranſlated Joſephus his Books, nor the Writings of S. Papias, and S. Polycarp; That he tranſlated only ſome Treatiſes of Origen and Didymus; That he had corrected the Verſion of the Septuagint, reſtored the Greek of the New Teſtament, and that he ſent to him part of the Canonical Books, which he reviſed and made conformable to the truth of the Hebrew. He afterwards anſwers two Queſtions, which Lucinius had put to him about Saturday's Faſt, and a frequent Communion. That Anſwer is too conſiderable not to be tranſlated here. As to what you ask me concerning the Saturday's Faſt, whether it ought to be kept; and about the Euchariſt, whether it ſhould be received every day, as is Cuſtomary in the Churches both of Italy and Spain, we have upon that Subject a Treatiſe of Hippolytus, a very Eloquent man, and ſeveral Authors have occaſionally treated of that Matter; for my part, this is the advice I think ought to be given in that Point; That Eccleſiaſtical Traditions, not contrary to the Faith, ought to be obſerved after the ſame manner, that we received them from our Anceſtors: And I am perſwaded, that the Cuſtom of one Church is not to be aboliſhed, becauſe of a contrary one in uſe in another Church. Would to God that we could faſt every day: Do we not read in the Acts of the Apoſtles, that both S. Paul, and they that were with him faſted in the days of Pentecoſt, and even upon Sunday's: Yet for all that they ought not to be accuſed for Manichees, becauſe they did it out of a Spiritual good, before which a Carnal one is not to be preferred. As to the Euchariſt, it is good to receive it daily, provided there be no prickings of Conſcience, and no danger of receiving our own Condemnation. Not that I would have Men faſt on Sundays, or in the Fifty days after Eaſter, but I muſt ſtill return to my Principle, That every Countrey ought to follow its own Cuſtom, and look upon the Ordinances of their Anceſtors as Apoſtolical Laws. This Letter was written about the Year 406.

Lucinius to whom this Letter is directed being dead. S. Jerom comforts his Widow Theodora, in the following Letter, in which he citeth there the Books of S. Irenæus with Commendation.

S. Jerom's Eight and twentieth Letter is a Funeral Oration, in Commendation of a Roman Lady called Fabiola. This Lady had a former very lewd Husband, and having procured a Separation, ſhe was married to another; but having acknowledged her fault, ſhe did publick Penance, and was admitted to the Communion. She built at Rome an Hoſpital for ſick Perſons whom ſhe had aſſiſted with wonderful Zeal, and ſurprizing Charity. S. Jerom commendeth chiefly thoſe generous Actions, and ſpeaks of the Journey which ſhe had undertaken to Bethlehem, where ſhe remained ſome time with him. This Letter was written in 400, two years after the Funeral Diſcourſe for Paulina, and Four years after that for Nepotian, as S. Jerom ſays in the beginning.

The Nine and twentieth is a Note to Theophilus, wherein he excuſeth himſelf, that he had not yet tranſlated into Latin that Biſhop's Book concerning Eaſter, becauſe of the troubles of the Church that had diſquieted him, and Paula's Death which had overwhelmed him with Grief; So that this Letter was written in the Year 404.

In the Thirtieth, S. Jerom comforteth a Spaniard, one Abigaüs, for the loſs of his ſight, he commends his Piety, and deſires him to exhort Theodora, Lucinius his Widow, to continue her Journey to Jeruſalem, this ſhows that this Letter was written after Lucinius his Death, about the Year 408, or 409.

The Thirty firſt is likewiſe a Letter of comfort to another Blind man, one Caſtrutius, who was S. Jerom's Countrey-man. He thanks him for beginning his Journey to come to ſee him, but deſires him, to undertake the Journey next year. The Year of this this Letter is not known. It is probable that it was written very near the same time with the foregoing.

S. Jerom.

In the Two and thirtieth, having administred comfort to Julianus one of his Friends, for the loss of two Daughters, of his Wife and Estate, and for the Discontents occasioned by his Son-in-Law, he adviseth him to give himself to God, and embrace a monastical Life: This Letter is written from the Solitudes of Bethlehem about the Year 408.

In the Thirty third, he exhorteth Exuperantius to forsake the Wars, and the World, and to withdraw himself with his Brother Quintillian to Bethlehem.

The Thirty fourth is to his Aunt Castorina, with whom he had had some difference, he intreats her by this Letter to be reconciled to him, this Letter was in all probability written during S. Jerom's first retreat, and since he tells her, that he had written to her the year before upon the same Subject, this must be of the Year 373, or 374.

The Five and thirtieth was written at the same time. He prays Julian the Deacon to send him News of his own Countrey, and gives him thanks for sending word, that his Sister continued in the resolution not to Marry.

The Thirty sixth to Theodosius and the other Monks, was written by S. Jerom, after his quitting the Desart of Syria in 374. where those Monks dwelt. He desires them to pray, that God would call him back into the Desart.

The Thirty seventh to the Virgins dwelling upon Mount Hermon, is written from the Desart of Syria, about the Year 373. He complains that they had not answered the Letters that he had written to them.

The Eight and thirtieth is certainly not S. Jerom's, and there is nothing in it worth Observation.

In the Thirty ninth he invites Rufinus Presbyter of Aquileia, who was then in Egypt, to come to him in his Solitude of Syria, where he was alone with Evagrius only, after the going away of Heliodorus, and the Death of Innocent and Hylas. This Letter is of 373, or 374.

The Fortieth, Forty first, Forty second, and Forty third, are very near of the same time, they are written to his old Friends at Aquileia. The First to Niceas Deacon of that Town, the Second to Chromatius, Eusebius, and Jovinus: The Third to Chrysogonus a Monk of Aquileia: and the last to another Monk called Anthony. These are of no great Consequence.

The Forty fourth to Rusticus is more useful. He exhorts that Man to do Penance, urging several places of Scripture touching Repentance. He invites him to visit the Holy places. This Letter is not of the same Stile with the rest of this Father's Letters.

The Forty fifth Letter is a biting Satyr against Virgins and Women, who dwelt with Clergy Men that were not of their Kindred.

The Six and fortieth is a Declamation against Sabinianus a Deacon, whose Life had been disorderly both in his own Countrey and at Bethlehem. These Three last are written from the Solitude of Bethlehem. The year is uncertain.

The Seven and fortieth is an Historical Narrative of a Woman of Vercelle, who having been falsly accused of Adultery, and condemned to die, tho' she constantly denied the Fact, was tortured seven times, but could not be put to Death. The Stile of this Letter is florid and childish, tho' S. Jerom writ it when he was well in years.

The Life of S. Paul the first Hermite, is one of S. Jerom's first Works. This man at Fifteen years of Age withdrew himself into the Desarts of Thebais, when Valerian and Decius persecuted the Church, fearing his want of strength to resist the Temptation. He spent there the rest of his Life, which lasted 113 years. S. Jerom gives an account of the manner of his being visited by S. Anthony, and describes several Circumstances of that History that are very hard to be believed.

The Life of S. Hilarion is full of Miracles of that Holy Anchorete S. Anthony's Disciple. S. Jerom places it in his Catalogue, amongst those Books which he wrote after his Return from Rome to Bethlehem. Likewise he makes mention there of the History of a Monk in the Desart of Chalcis called Malchus, who having quitted the Monastery to return into his Countrey, was taken and carried away Captive by the Saracens.

This Volume endeth with his Book of the Famous men, or Ecclesiastical Writers, written in Latin by S. Jerom, and translated into Greek, as it is supposed, by Sophronius (n). He did it at the request of Flavius Dexter, Præfectus Prætorio, in imitation of Suetonius, and other profane Authors, who writ the Lives of Philosophers, and other Famous men. He confesses that Eusebius his Books did him much Service: He intreats the Authors of his own time, whom he doth not mention, not to take it ill; he declares that he did not intend to conceal their Works, but that they had never come to his hands; but however, if their Writings make them Famous, his silence will not long prejudice them. Lastly, he observes that this Treatise confounds Celsus, Porphyry, Julian, and the other sworn Enemies of the Church, who reproached it as having no Philoso-

(n) By Sophronius.] Erasmus published this Version under Sophronius's Name upon the credit of a Manuscript. None doubted at first, but that it was his. Mr. Vossius the Father owned it, but M. Isaac Vossius his Son, contradicted that Opinion in his Notes upon S. Ignatius's Epistles: where he boldly affirms, that this Version is not Sophronius's: that it is very bad, that he that made it did not understand Greek; that it is visible that it was written by an Impostor. Huetius in his Book, De optimo genere interpretandi, refutes Vossius, and doth not doubt but that Translation was made by Sophronius.

phers,

S. Jerom. phers, no Orators, or learned Men; by proving to them that it was eſtabliſhed, uphield and adorned by very great Men. This Book comprehends the Catalogue of Eccleſiaſtical Authors, and Writers, from Jeſus Chriſt to S. Jerom's time. It concludes with a Catalogue of the Works which this Father had compoſed to the Fourth year of the Emperor Theodoſius, which is the Year 392, of Jeſus Chriſt.

The Second Tomb, which is in the ſame Volume contains the Letters, or rather the Diſcourſes of Diſpute and Controverſie.

The Firſt is his Treatiſe againſt Helvidius, of the perpetual Virginity of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary. That man had written a Book wherein he pretended to ſhew by Teſtimonies of the New Teſtament, and the Opinions of ſome ancient Fathers, that after the Birth of Chriſt the Virgin Mary had Children, by Joſeph her Husband. The firſt paſſage of Scripture which Helvidius cites for his Opinion is that of S. Matthew, ch. 1. The Virgin being eſpouſed was found with Child, before Joſeph and ſhe came together: Helvidius concluded from this place, that therefore they came together afterwards. S. Jerom anſwers him, That this Conſequence doth not follow, becauſe that a thing is often ſaid to have been done before another, which other is never to be done: and that when it is ſaid ſuch a one died before Penance, it doth not follow, that he, of whom this is ſpoken, does Penance in the other World; ſo likewiſe from what S. Matthew ſaith, That ſhe was found with Child before Joſeph knew her, it doth not follow, that he knew her after ſhe was with Child. The Second paſſage quoted by Helvidius is another of the ſame Evangeliſt, Joſeph knew not his Wife till ſhe had brought forth her Son; Helvidius concludes from this paſſage as from the former, therefore he knew her after ſhe was delivered. He maintained that the word until always ſignifyed in Scripture a fixed time, after which the thing would come to paſs. S. Jerom ſhews him, that tho' this is often true, yet there are ſeveral paſſages where it ſignifies an unlimited time, as it is ſaid of God, I am, till you are grown old, or until that, which can never deſcribe the Term, or the end of God's exiſtence, ſeeing he is for ever. And when Jeſus Chriſt ſaith in the Goſpel, I am with you to the end of the World; it were ridiculous to conclude, Wherefore he will be no more after the World's end.

Helvidius's Third Objection is grounded on the Title of Firſt Born given to Jeſus Chriſt, Luk. ch. 2. S. Jerom affirms, that it doth not ſuppoſe that he had younger Brethren, for in the Language of the Scripture, every Child of the firſt lying in of a Woman is called Firſt-born, theſe words being Synonymous, Adaperiens vulvam and Primogenitum, as appears, Numb. 18. Exod. 13. Levit. 12. Luk. 2.

The laſt Objection is taken from what is ſaid in Scripture that Jeſus Chriſt had Brethren; now among his Brethren, ſaid Helvidius, are reckoned S. James, and Joſes Son of Mary: as it is ſaid, Matt. 27. Mark 15. Luk. 24. That Mary the Mother of James and Joſes was preſent at the Paſſion, and at the Burial of Jeſus Chriſt, but this Mary, ſaid he, is the Mother of the Lord; for it is not likely, that ſhe ſhould forſake him upon that occaſion. S. Jerom anſwers, that it is very certain by S. John's Teſtimony, that Mary the Mother of God was near the Croſs of Jeſus Chriſt at his Paſſion, ſince he recommends her to that Evangeliſt; but that Mary the Mother of James, and Joſes is different from the Mother of the Lord, ſeeing that of the two Apoſtles called James, one was Son of Zebedee, and the other of Alpheus. But it cannot be ſaid that the Lord's Mother was married to either of theſe two Perſons. He maintains then, that Mary the Mother of James and Joſes was the Wife of Alpheus, and Siſter to the Mother of our Lord, and is alſo called Mary Cleophe. The Conjecture not being very certain, S. Jerom gives this general Anſwer, That the word Brother is equivocal, and is taken Four ways, a Brother by Nature, by Nation, by Relation, and by Affection; but ſticks to the Brother-hood by Blood, ſhewing by ſeveral places of Scripture, that Couſins, and near Kindred are called Brethren.

Having thus with much Wit and Learning, refuted the falſe Conſequences that Helvidius drew from thoſe paſſages of the New Teſtament: S. Jerom oppoſes to Tertullian, and Victorinus whom Helvidius had quoted, the Authority of S. Ignatius, S. Polycarp, S. Irenæus, S. Juſtin, and other ancient Apoſtolical Authors, who had written againſt the Hereticks Ebion, Theodorus of Byzantium, and Valentinus, whom S. Jerom pretends to have been of Helvidius his Opinion. But the Error of thoſe Hereticks was far more intolerable, and we do not read that the Fathers quoted by S. Jerom, did preciſely refute Helvidius's Error. However S. Jerom rejects Tertullian's Authority, by ſaying, That he was not of the Church; and as for Victorinus Patarionenſis, he ſaith, That his Teſtimony hath no greater difficulty than that of the Scripture, ſince he ſpeaks of Chriſt's Brethren, but does not ſay that they were the Sons of Mary. In the latter part of this Diſcourſe, he ſpeaks like an Orator of the inconveniencies of Marriage, and the Advantages of Virginity. This Treatiſe was compoſed at Rome, about the Year 383.

In his Treatiſe againſt Jovinian, he further defends the Excellency of Virginity. This Jovinian had aſſerted in a ſmall Diſcourſe publiſhed at Rome, That Widows and married Women were not to be leſs regarded than Virgins, if they have the ſame Vertues; This was the firſt Error of this man. The Second was, That a Chriſtian baptized could not fall from Righteouſneſs. The Third, That Abſtinence from certain Meats was unprofitable: The laſt, That the glorified Saints are all equally Happy. S. Jerom refutes the firſt of theſe Errors in the firſt Book. He explains at firſt S. Paul's Notions concerning Marriage and Virginity; afterwards he takes notice of the Examples of the Old and New Teſtament, which Jovinian had brought to prove, that the greateſt Saints and moſt excellent men of all Ages had been Married. S. Jerom ſhews that he has multiplied thoſe Examples too much: He affirms that the Apoſtles left their Wives, after their Call to the Apoſtleſhip, and that S. John being called before he was Married, always lived in Celibacy: He anſwers thoſe places of Scripture alledged by Jovinian, and diſcourſes of the Celibacy of Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons. He condemns ſecond Marriages with much ſeverity, and produces ſeveral Examples of Heathen Women that either kept their Virginity, or continued in Widowhood. S. Jerom.

greateſt

In the ſecond Book he refutes Jovinian's other errours. He ſhews againſt the ſecond, that the holieſt of Men may fall from Baptiſmal Grace. Againſt the third, that tho' God is the Creator of all things fit for Man's uſe, yet it is good to faſt, and uſe abſtinence, and that it is very dangerous to indulge one's Senſes, and ſatisfie greedineſs. Laſtly, that as there are various degrees of Vice, and Vertue here in this life, ſo there are likewiſe in the other ſeveral degrees of felicity and pain. Theſe Books were not compleated by S. Jerom when he writ his book of famous men tho' he mentions theſe two books there: and ſo they are of the year 392.

Theſe Books being publiſhed at Rome, ſeveral perſons found fault with the hard terms which S. Jerom made uſe of in ſpeaking of Marriage. Pammachius having ſent word of it to S. Jerom hinting withall at the principal Paſſages excepted againſt. This Father expounds them in the apology directed to him, declaring that it was never his intention to condemn Matrimony.

He found himſelf obliged a ſecond time to defend himſelf from the ſame accuſation againſt a Monk; and this he does in the Letter intituled the fifty firſt to Domnion.

The fifty ſecond Letter to Pammachius was joyned to the apology directed to him. He thanks him for ſecuring the Copies of his Books againſt Jovinian; but he tells him that it was impoſſible to ſuppreſs them: that he had not the good fortune to be able always to correct his own Works, as ſome had; becauſe he had no ſooner compoſed them, but they were made publick even againſt his Will. He inſults over thoſe that found fault, challenging them to write againſt him. He adviſeth him to read the Commentaries of Dionyſius, Rheticius, Euſebius, Apollinarius, and Didymus, who expounded that paſſage of the Epiſtle to the Corinthians, and ſpoke in the behalf of Virginity more powerfully than himſelf. He ſends him Word, that he had Tranſlated out of the Hebrew, the Books of the Prophets, of Job, and that he had written Commentaries upon the twelve Minor Prophets, and upon the Book of Kings. He obſerves that if his Tranſlation of Job be compared with the Greek, and the old Latin Verſion, there will be found ſuch a difference as is betwixt truth and falſhood.

The fifty third Letter is directed to Riparius a Presbyter in Spain, who deſired to know his opinion of a Book of Vigilantius a Presbyter of Barcelona; who condemned the Veneration of Relicks, and the Worſhip of Saints. S. Jerom exclaims againſt that errour, and prayeth Riparius to ſend him his Book that he might refute it at large, and this he does with great earneſtneſs in the Treatiſe that followeth this Letter, written two years after, as he himſelf affirms. He taxeth Vigilantius, with reviving Jovinian's errours, and wonders that any Biſhops ſhould be of his mind. If, ſaith he, the name of Biſhops may be given to ſuch as will Ordain no Deacons, except they are Married: what will the Churches of the Eaſt, thoſe of Egypt, and even of the See of Rome, which do not admit into the Clergy any but ſuch as are unmarried, or who, being married profeſs to live as if they were not?

Having made this occaſional remark concerning the celibacy of Clarks, he particularly undertakes Vigilantius's errour about Relicks and the Invocation of Saints. This Man maintained that the Bones of the dead were not to be honoured, and that the Saints could not hear our Prayers. S. Jerom puts himſelf into a great heat to prove the contrary, and falls upon Vigilantius with a great deal of reproachful Language. In that Treatiſe he likewiſe defends the Feſtivals of Saints, the Solemnities practiſed upon their Eves, Pilgrimages to Jeruſalem, the Monaſtick State, and the uſe of lighted Torches only in the Night; for he owns, that in his time they lighted none in the Day. We, ſaith he, do not light Torches in the day time, as you accuſe us, but only in the Night, that their Light may afford joy and comfort in the Obſcurity of the Night. This Treatiſe was written long after the Book of famous Men, about the year 406.

The fifty fourth Letter to Marcella, is againſt the errours of the Diſciples of Montanus. He not only lays them open, but accuſeth them, 1. Of owning but one perſon in God. 2. Of condemning ſecond Marriages, as adulterous. 3. Of holding the obligation to keep three Lents. 4. That they did not acknowledge Biſhops to be the Apoſtle's Succeſſors, and the firſt of the Hierarchical Order, but that there were two degrees of Perſons above them. 5. That they were very rigid in impoſing of Penances, and never granted Abſolution. 6. That they believed the prophecies of Montanus, Priſca, and Maximilla. Laſtly he ſays that they were accuſed of celebrating Criminal Myſteries with the Blood of a Martyred Child; but declares that he had rather believe that this was not true. This Letter is written about the year 400.

In the fifty fifth Letter to Riparius, he ſays that Ruffinus, whom he calls his Catiline, had been expelled out of Paleſtine.

In the fifty ſixth he commends Apronius for oppoſing the errors of the Origeniſtes, and invites him to come to Jeruſalem. Both theſe Letters are written under the Pontificate of Anaſtaſius, about the year 400.

S. Jerom.

The two following Letters are written to Pope Damaſus, out of the Deſarts of Syria. S. Jerom asks his advice, what he ſhould do about the diſputes then in the Eaſt. I am, ſaith he, tyed to your Holineſs's Communion, that is to S. Peter's Chair; I know that the Church is founded upon that Rock. Whoſoever eateth the Lamb out of that Houſe, is a prophane Man. Whoſoever is not found in that Houſe ſhall Periſh by the Flood. But foraſmuch as being retired into the Deſart of Syria, I cannot receive the Sacrament at your hands, I follow your Collegues the Biſhops of Egypt: I do not know Vitalis; I do not communicate with Meletius; Paulinus is a ſtranger to me. He that gathereth not with us, ſcattereth. He gives an account afterwards of the occaſion of thoſe Diviſions. After the deciſion of the Council of Nice, after the Decree of the Council of Alexandria, enacted with the conſent of both the Eaſtern and Weſtern Biſhops, they yet ask of me that am a Roman a new Confeſſion of Faith, to acknowledge three Hypoſtaſes. It is an Arian Biſhop, and the Montaniſts who require that of me..... We ask what ſignifies this Word Hypoſtaſis, they ſay, that it ſignifies a ſubſiſting perſon; we anſwer that if it be ſo, we are of that opinion; They are not ſatisfied with our profeſſing that Sence, but they require further that we own theſe Terms. There muſt be ſome Poyſon hid under theſe words. We ſay openly, if any one owns not three ſubſiſting Perſons, let him be Anathema; but becauſe we do not uſe the Terms which they require we are accuſed of being Hereticks..... Order me if you pleaſe what I ſhould do, I will not be afraid to ſay, that there are three Hypoſtaſes, if you command me ſo to do. Yet he is afterwards of opinion, that this way of ſpeaking is not to be approved of, becauſe the Term Hypoſtaſis is for the moſt part equivalent to that of Subſtance.

The fifty eighth Letter to Damaſus is much upon the ſame Subject, and he asks his advice with whom he ought to communicate, Meletius, Paulinus, or Vitalis. Theſe Letters are of 374.

The following Treatiſe is a Dialogue betwixt an Orthodox Chriſtian and a Diſciple of Lucifer Calaritanus. This Man defends the Conduct and Opinions of thoſe of his Sect, maintaining, that thoſe are not to be owned as Biſhops that Communicated with the Arian Biſhops, and that ſuch as were Baptized by Hereticks ought to be Baptized again. The Orthodox Chriſtian affirms the contrary. S. Jerom introduces the Orthodox Chriſtian relating the Hiſtory of the Council of Ariminum, and the diſſentions that troubled the Church, and ſhewing that it was a reaſonable thing to Pardon thoſe Biſhops that had been ſurprized. There is in that Treatiſe a curious paſſage about Tradition, which he proves by the cuſtom of impoſing of Hands, and the Invocation of the Holy Ghoſt, after the adminiſtration of Baptiſm. He adds, That many other things are obſerved in the Church upon the account of Tradition without being authorized by a written Law; as, ſaith he, the dipping of the Head three times in Water at Baptiſm, the giving Milk, and Honey to the Baptized: not bowing the Knee upon Sundays, nor all the time betwixt Eaſter and Whitſontide. The Luciferian advances this Propoſition; and the Orthodox Chriſtian agrees to it, confeſſing that the Biſhop alone lays his Hands upon the Baptized, to cauſe the Holy Ghoſt to come down upon them: that he only conferrs the Sacrament of Confirmation. But he ſays that this Cuſtom was introduced rather for the honour of the Prieſthood, than through any neceſſity; That however the Holy Ghoſt deſcends upon them that are Baptized tho' they receive not the impoſition of hands from the Biſhop. This Treatiſe was written at Rome about the year 384.

The 59th. Letter to Avitus, contains any numeration of thoſe errours which S. Jerom had found in the Books of Origen's Principles, Tranſlated by Rufinus; which Pammachius had ſent him ten years ſince: which ſhows that it was written about the year 407.

The 60th. is a Tranſlation of S. Epiphanius's Letter to J. of Jeruſalem, concerning the Ordination of Paulinianus, whom S. Epiphanius had ordained Deacon and Prieſt, in a Monaſtery of S. Jerom's, which John of Jeruſalem pretended to be under his juriſdiction. This Letter is very cunningly written. He complains of the anger which John of Jeruſalem had ſhewed for that ordination, repreſenting to him that ſuch behaviour was contrary to the Spirit of the Church; and that inſtead of being angry that he had ordained a Prieſt in a Monaſtery of ſtrange Monks that were not of his Dioceſs, he ought to ſhow much ſatisfaction, becauſe there ought to be no Diſſention among Prieſts, when no other thing is aimed at but the good of the Church. " That though all Biſhops have every one " their Church committed to their Charge, and whereof they ought to take Care, and that no " Man is to Incroach upon another's Juriſdiction, yet Chriſtian Charity which hath no Bounds is " to be preferred in all things; and that the Action is not to be conſidered in its ſelf, but reſpect " ought to be had to the Circumſtances of Time, Place, Perſons, and Occaſions. He urges afterwards ſuch things as might excuſe his Ordination by ſaying, that there being but two Prieſts in their Monaſtery, Jerom and Vincentius, who would not perform any Function of their Miniſtery, he thought it his Duty to give them a Prieſt; and having met with Paulinianus, who ſo declined the Prieſthood, that John could not ſeize upon him to put him into Orders, he cauſed him to be taken by Force and Ordain'd a Deacon: and that afterwards he Ordained him Prieſt, againſt his Will, when he waited at the Altar, and that however the Ordination was performed in a Monaſtery and not in a Pariſh of his Dioceſs. He adds that the Biſhops of Cyprus, were much more ſimple, and careleſs in the Sence of John of Jeruſalem; for they were ſo far from finding Fault, that their Fellow-Biſhops Ordained out of their Dioceſſes, thoſe Perſons that declined the Prieſthood; That on the contrary they Exhorted them to do it. He ſpeaketh next againſt Origen's Errors, and deſireth John of Jeruſalem to Condemn them. He reduceth them to Eight principal Heads, which are theſe. 1. That the Son of God does not ſee his Father. and that the Holy

Holy Ghoſt doth not ſee the Son. 2. That Men's Souls were ſent from Heaven to the Earth for their Sins, and ſhut up in Bodies as in ſo many Priſons. 3. That the Devils ſhall repent one day of their Faults, and ſhall reign with the Saints in Heaven. 4. That Adam and Eve had no Fleſh before they committed ſin: and that the Skins wherewith they are ſaid to have been covered, ſignifie their Bodies. 5. That man ſhall not riſe again with Fleſh and Bones. 6. That the earthly Paradiſe is to be underſtood Allegorically. 7. That the Waters, which the Scripture ſpeaks of above the Firmament, are the Angels, and that thoſe which are ſaid to have been under the Earth are the Devils. 8. That by ſin Man loſt the Image of God. The latter part of this Letter is concerning a Veil whereon was painted the Image of a Man, which S. Epiphanius had found in a Countrey Church near Jeruſalem, and had cauſed it to be torn in Pieces, becauſe he condemned that Practiſe as contrary to the Cuſtom of thoſe times. We have ſhewed in another place, that this Letter was truly written by S. Epiphanius in 392, and tranſlated by S. Jerom in 393. S. Jerom. [See S. Epiphan. Vol. II.]

John of Jeruſalem ſeeing himſelf thus accuſed by S. Epiphanius, made an Apology, which he ſent to Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria, and cauſed it to be publiſhed every where, and chiefly in the Weſt. Pammachius having ſeen it at Rome, wrote to S. Jerom, to let him know that Men were divided about that matter, and deſired him to write to him about it. S. Jerom did not deſerr to put Pen to Paper, and directed to him in 393. the Sixty firſt Letter, wherein he obſerves, that S. Epiphanius having by his Letter, laid Eight Articles of Origen's Errors to John of Jeruſalem's Charge, he had juſtified himſelf but from Three, without ſo much as mentioning the other Five. Thoſe three Articles are about the knowledge of the Son of God, the Pre-exiſtency of Souls, and the quality of Bodies after the Reſurrection. As to the firſt head John of Jeruſalem had cleared himſelf, by declaring that he was no Arian; but S. Jerom pretends that he had not juſtified Origen. He had explained his Opinion very obſcurely upon the Second and the Third. S. Jerom relates Origen's Opinion upon thoſe three Articles, and refutes them with much Earneſtneſs. Then he enlarges upon the Quarrel betwixt S. Epiphanius and John of Jeruſalem: He complains, that the latter had addreſſed himſelf to Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria; and that he had ſaid in the beginning of his Apology, that he was charged with the care of all the Churches. "You, ſaith he, directing his "Diſcourſe to John of Jeruſalem, who make your boaſt of following the Rules of the Church, and "obſerve the Canons of the Council of Nice, and go about to appropriate to your ſelf the Clergy "that depend upon other Biſhops, tell me I pray, Is Paleſtine under the Juriſdiction of the Biſhops "of Alexandria? If I miſtake not, it was decided in the Council of Nice, that Cæſarea was "the Metropolis of Paleſtine, and Antioch of all the Eaſt. You ought therefore either to ſend "to the Biſhop of Cæſarea with whom you knew, we Communicated; or if a Judge was to "be ſought for further off, you might have ſent your Letters to Antioch. But I gueſs what it "was that kept you from ſending to Cæſarea, or Antioch; I perceive what you were afraid of, "and were willing to avoid: You choſe rather to apply your ſelf to a pre-ingaged Perſon, than "to yield your Metropolitan that deference which you owe him. After that he accuſeth Iſidore, whom Theophilus had ſent to the place to inform himſelf of the ſtate of things, of being corrupted by John of Jeruſalem, of following his Paſſion, and declaring abſolutely for him; of being concerned in Compoſing the Apology, and then undertaking to carry it himſelf. "So that, "ſaith he, He that dictated the Letter was he that carried it. At laſt S. Jerom ſays, That the Original of that Quarrel was not Paulinianus's Ordination, but the accuſing of Origen's Errors. And this he ſets forth ſpeaking againſt John of Jeruſalem with all poſſible Vehemency. By this Letter it appears, that both S. Jerom, and the other Monks of Paleſtine had great Differences with him.

But leſt Theophilus perſwaded by John of Jeruſalem's Letter, ſhould come to eſpouſe his Intereſt, S. Jerom directs the Sixty ſecond Letter to him, in defence of his own Cauſe. This Biſhop had ſent him a Letter by Iſidore, whereby he exhorted him to Peace. S. Jerom declares in his Anſwer, That he was deſirous of nothing more; but that ſuch as could alone procure it, were contented only to make a ſhow of being for it. That the Peace which he would have, was a true Peace, the Peace of Jeſus Chriſt, a Peace without Enmity, a Peace without War. That there could be no Peace, when one would uſurp Dominion and Empire, when he Excommunicated true Catholicks, when Men were forced to communicate with an Heretick, and to receive the Body of Jeſus Chriſt at his hands, and when violence was uſed. Theſe things he Charges upon John of Jeruſalem, and complains of the injurious Treatment wherewith he uſes him in his Letter. And as for that which John of Jeruſalem upbraided him withal, that he had formerly tranſlated Origen's Books, which this Author ſo much condemns; Now he anſwers, That he was not the only Man that did it: that before him S. Hilary the Confeſſor had done it: but that imitating him he had expunged what was dangerous in thoſe Writings, and tranſlated what was good and uſeful; and however he had always commended Origen for his Ability in expounding the Scriptures, yet he had always condemned him for his Errors. That he owned there was a vaſt difference betwixt the Apoſtles Writings, and thoſe of other Eccleſiaſtical Writers, ſince the former wrote nothing but what was true, whereas the latter were ſometimes deceived. Afterwards he juſtifieth the Ordination of his Brother Paulinianus, ſaying, That S. Epiphanius did not ordain him in the Dioceſs of John of Jeruſalem, ſince the Monaſtery where that Ordination was performed, belonged to the Dioceſs of Eleutheropolis, and not to that of Jeruſalem: That he had done very ill in aſſerting that S. Epiphanius had ordained a Child, ſince Paulinianus was then Thirty years old: That John himſelf was not older when he was ordained Biſhop.

in

S. Jerom

S. Jerom having thus pleaded for himſelf, doth in his turn likewiſe accuſe John of Jeruſalem. He ſays, That this Biſhop was the Author of all this trouble, and a Fomenter of the Diviſion: that pretending to be for Peace, he proſecuted a cruel War: That he requeſted, and obtained his Baniſhment. Here he crys out in this manner: The Church of Chriſt, ſaith he, was eſtabliſhed by ſufferings, and ſhedding of Blood. Perſecutions have increaſed it, and by Martyrdom it came to be Crowned. If our Enemies were not of this Diſpoſition; if they had rather perſecute than be perſecuted; In this Countrey there are Jews and Hereticks of all ſorts, and particularly infamous Manichees, who hindred them from falling upon theſe; Their Spleen is againſt us, we are the only Perſons whom they intend to drive away.... One Monk, I ſpeak it with griet, One Monk who boaſteth of being the Biſhop of an Apoſtolick See, threatneth another Monk, deſires he ſhould be baniſhed, and accordingly 'tis done; but God be praiſed, adds he, Monks are not frighted with Perſecutions, they wait for the Blow without Trouble, and without offering to defend themſelves. For every Monk being out of his own Country is alſo out of the World. What need is there of the Prince's Authority, or of written Orders? Let them give us the leaſt Summons, and we will depart immediately, knowing what we are, and being perſwaded that the Earth is the Lord's, and that Jeſus Chriſt is not ſhut up in any place. He tells us of going to Rome to communicate with that Church, from which we ſeem to be ſeparated; but this we need not do, we are as much in Communion with the Church of Rome in Palæſtine as if we were at Rome, we communicate with its Prieſts which are in the Town of Bethlehem. At laſt S. Jerom profeſſes that he is ready to be reconciled to John of Jeruſalem, provided he would put on a charitable Spirit, and prove the ſame towards him as he had been before. We know, ſaith he, what we owe to the Biſhops of Jeſus Chriſt; but let them be contented with Honour and Reſpect, and know that they are Fathers and not Maſters; and particularly with relation to thoſe who deſpiſing Ambition, preferr reſt and quietneſs before all other things.

After S. Jerom's 63d. Letter follows Ruffinus's Preface to his Tranſlation of Origen's Principles. He ſaith in that Preface, That ſeveral perſons deſirous of learning the Holy Scriptures wiſhed that Origen might be made to ſpeak Latin: That his Collegue and Brother, S. Jerom, having tranſlated two Homilies of this Author upon the Book of Canticles, had ſo much exalted him in his Preface, that Men were very deſirous to ſee his Works: That he had given this advantageous Teſtimony of him, That he exceeded all others in his Commentaries, but had ſurmounted himſelf in his Homilies upon the Book of Canticles: That this ſame S. Jerom had promiſed to tranſlate the other Works of this Author, but he thought it afterwards more glorious to write himſelf and to be an Author rather than an interpreter. We therefore proſecute and compleat a thing which he has both approved and began, but we cannot render Origen's Words with the ſame Eloquence. And he adds, That this very thing had kept him from undertaking that Tranſlation; but at laſt he yielded to Macarius's earneſt Intreaties; however that in this Verſion he had followed the Rule of thoſe who had tranſlated that Author before him; and that he had imitated S. Jerom, by cutting off thoſe things which ſeemed diſagreeable to the Doctrine of the Church; and ſo much the rather, becauſe in Origen's Works there were Notions quite contrary: That the Reaſon of that ſeeming Contradiction might be found in the Apology that Pamphilus had written for Origen, and which himſelf had tranſlated; and that he pretended to ſhew, by undeniable Proofs, that Origen's Works had been corrupted in ſeveral places by Hereticks or Men of ill deſigns; and that for this very Reaſon he had either omitted or altered in the Tranſlation of that Treatiſe, thoſe Articles wherein he ſeemed to ſpeak otherwiſe than he did in his other Books. This Preface was written in 397. when Ruſinus publiſhed his Verſion of the Books of Origen's Principles at Rome.

It was no ſooner publiſhed, but Oceanus and Pammachius ſent it to S. Jerom, obſerving that they had found ſtill ſome Errors there, notwithſtanding that great part was expunged: intreating him, that to ſecure them in the Truth, he would make a Faithful Tranſlation of that Work. The Note which they writ to him about that Buſineſs, is the ſixty fourth Letter.

S. Jerom thinking himſelf indirectly affronted by Ruſinus's Preface, intimating that he had formerly commended Origen, which might inſinuate that he then approved his Errors, and approved them ſtill, fell inſtantly to writing, to let the World know in what Sence he had commended Origen: He owns that he did it in two places of his Works, namely, in the Prologue of his Tranſlation of the Homilies upon the Canticles, dedicated to Damaſus, and in the Preface to his Treatiſe of Hebrew Names. But he affirms, that in both theſe places, he had not ſpoken either of his Doctrine or of his Opinions. I have commended him, ſaith he, as an able Interpreter, and not as a man whoſe Dogm's ought to be followed; I have admired his Parts without approving his Doctrine, I have valued his Philoſophy, and not his Preaching. He adds, That if any man would know what his Opinion has always been concerning Origen's Books, let him but read his Commentaries upon Eccleſiaſtes, and his three Volumes upon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, whereby it will appear that he hath conſtantly contradicted Origen's Opinions. Huetius is not perfectly ſatisfied with this Excuſe of S. Jerom: He ſays that it doth not appear by the Commentaries which he citeth, that he hath contradicted Origen's Notions, tho' he hath filled them with that Author's Dogm's without quoting him. If he believed them falſe, ſays he, ought he not to have cenſured them? Why did he not think it an Honour to Copy them, as he affirms in the Preface to the ſecond Book of his

Commentary

Commentary upon the Prophet Micah? Why hath he asserted in his Preface to the Book of Hebrew Names, That none but an ignorant man could deny that Origen was one of the Masters of the Church, after the Apostles. " These Reasons made Huetius say, That Rufinus was in the right " in accusing S. Jerom of being an Origenist, and upbraiding him in his first Invective, that the " Name of a Master of the Church cannot be given to an Heretick; that S. Jerom's Excuse is " pitiful; that Rufinus thoroughly proves that he commended Origen's Doctrine; and that at " last this Father is obliged to confess that his Opinions were altered as to Origen: That Sulpi- " tius Severus had a great deal of Reason to find fault, that S. Jerom having at first followed " Origen, did of a sudden condemn all his Works: That S. Augustin did justly accuse him of " Inconstancy and Lightness; and that Pope Pelagius the II. is not to be blamed for putting " him amongst Origen's Disciples. That, in a word, tho' this Holy Doctor acted the part of a good Catholick in abjuring Origen's Errors after he had owned them; yet it were to be wished he had been more constant and moderate, and that he had not so much indulged the Motions of his inflamed Choler, so as to be carried away unto contrary Notions, according to the different Circumstances of Time, and outrageous railing against the greatest Men of his Age. For this must be acknowledged, that Rufinus reproved him often with Reason, and that he often blamed Rufinus without Ground. This is the Judgment which the Learned Huetius, now nominated to the Bishoprick of Soissons, doth with much Reason and Justice make of the Parts and Conduct of S. Jerom. I willingly subscribe to it, and do not doubt but that as many as have ever read this Father, will be of the same Mind*.

S. Jerom.

[* By this it will appear that things are not always to be approved or disapproved upon S. Jerom's Word. In his management of his Quarrel he is deserted by the Papists, because they condemn the Errors of Origen as well as he, and therefore they cannot with any Decency excuse his Carriage towards Rufinus; but in his Controversies with Jovinian and Vigilantius, concerning Virginity, and Invocation of Saints, he is applauded by them; only the wiser men amongst them are a little out of Countenance at his Heat: It is a Misfortune that Jovinian's and Vigilantius's Books are lost; and there is Reason to believe from those other Disputes wherein S. Jerom was ingaged, that if we knew what they said for themselves, instead of thinking them Hereticks, we should esteem them illustrious Defenders of the Christian Religion against that Superstition which an immoderate Zeal for a Monastical Life, did at that time introduce into the Church. Jovinian indeed is accused of maintaining, That a Christian who is baptized cannot fall away from Grace, which is a very great Error; but it had no relation to his other Opinions, and since Obstinacy is necessary to make a man a Heretick, it would be rashness to call Jovinian a Heretick of whom we know nothing, but what we have from his Enemies.]

And now to return to our Subject: S. Jerom going on to justifie himself of those things which they reproached him withal, namely, of commending Origen, sets forth some Examples of great Men that might be commended for their Learning, who did hold very remarkable Errors. " S. Cyprian, saith he, took Tertullian for his Tutor, as appears by his Writings, and yet did " not approve the Dreams of Montanus and Maximilla as he did. Apollinarius hath written " very convincing Books against Porphyrius; and Eusebius writ a most useful History of the " Church. The former erred concerning the Mystery of the Incarnation, and the latter defends " the Opinions of Arius. He owns that he was Apollinaris's Disciple, Didymus's Scholar, yea; that he hath had a Jew for his Master; that he collected carefully all Origen's Works, and read them exactly, but affirms, that he never followed his Errors. Lastly, to make short, he saith, that if he may be believed, he never was an Origenist, and that tho he had been, yet now he ceaseth to be so. Upon this Principle he exhorts others to imitate him, and to condemn his Errors; after that, he gives Origen high Commendations, rejecting his Opinions. He refutes what Rufinus had asserted, that the Errors which were found in Origen's Works had been added; and laughs at the Liberty which he had taken to expunge what he thought fit. Last of all, he affirms, that the first Book of the Apology for Origen, which bore the Name of Pamphilus, was not that Martyrs, but Didymus's, or at least some other Author's. This Letter is written near 150 years after Origen's Death, that is, in the year 399.

The Sixty sixth Letter to Rufinus, wherein he complains of his Preface, is written at the same time. He speaks to him as to a person with whom he would not quite fall out; he telleth him, that he knew not with what Spirit he writ that Preface, but that all the World saw how it was to be understood; that he might have been even with him, by commending him after the like malicious Manner, but that he chose rather to justify himself of the Crime laid to his Charge than offend his Friend; that he intreated him to cite him no more after the same manner; that he undertook to write to him about it as to his Friend, rather than to ingage with him publickly. To let him know that he would do nothing that might check that sincere Reconciliation which he had made with him, he exhorts him on his part to do the same, least, saith he, that biting one another we do not mutually consume one another.

Rufinus, who was not of a Temper to lie still without replying, immediately put pen to Paper to write against S. Jerom. Paulinianus, who was then in the West, having found a Way to get the Extracts of Rufinus his Book before it was quite published, sent them to his Brother, who besides was informed by Pammachius and Marcellinus, of the principal Heads contained in Rufinus's Answer, and so he composed immediately his first Apology divided into two Books.

In the First he answers Rufinus's Calumnies. The First was, that he had translated into Latin the Books of Origen's Principles without altering.

S. Jerom. S. Jerom anſwers that he did it, to ſhow the falſity of Rufinus his Tranſlation, and to ſhew Origen's Errors, and ſo his Tranſlation could hurt no body, ſince it appeared that it was made only to condemn the Errors of that Book.

To juſtifie Origen's Doctrine about the Trinity, Rufinus had quoted the Firſt Book of Pamphilus's Apology. S. Jerom affirms, that it was not compoſed by that Martyr.

Rufinus laid before him the Praiſes which he had given to Origen. He anſwers as he did before, that he had commended his Learning but not his Doctrine, as he had commended Euſebius and Apollinaris without approving their Errors.

Rufinus charged him with publiſhing Errors, and Contradictions in his Commentaries. He ſays that he did it without approving of them; that he has collected in his Commentaries, the Notions and Words of others, obſerving that ſome underſtood thoſe paſſages in one Sence, and others in another, that ſo the prudent Reader may chuſe what is truth, and reject what is falſe; and that in this Caſe none can Tax him with Errors, and Contradictions, who barely relates the Notions, and different Expoſitions of others. This he proves by the Example of the ableſt Commentators of profane Authors.

Rufinus had found fault, that he had variouſly tranſlated the Twelth Verſe of the ſecond Pſalm, where the vulgar Tranſlation ſaith, Embrace the Diſcipline, by rendring it according to the Hebrew, ſometimes worſhip the Son, ſometimes worſhip ye only. S. Jerom tells him, That he had kept to the Sence rather than to the Letter, tranſlating the Hebrew word Naſhecu, which ſignifieth, Kiſs or Embrace, by this term Worſhip ye; That as to the other word Bar, which hath ſeveral Significations, (for it ſignifies the Son, or a handful of pickt Ears of Corn,) he had followed the former Signification in his Commentary, and that in his Verſion, to prevent the Jews accuſing Chriſtians of falſifying the Holy Scripture, he adher'd to the latter Signification, which both Aquila and Symmachus followed.

Rufinus found fault likewiſe with ſeveral paſſages in S. Jerom's Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, in which he had abridged the Commentaries of Origen. S. Jerom defends himſelf, by ſaying that he produced Origen's Opinions without approving of them, ſince he obſerves at the ſame time, that thoſe Explications were not his own.

Laſtly Rufinus upbraided S. Jerom, that he was naturally given to Calumniating, and ſpeaking evil of every Body: That he reproved other Mens works out of Envy: Yea, he laid Perjury to his Charge; becauſe having proteſted before the Judgment Seat of Chriſt (as he ſays in his Book of the Inſtruction of Virgin's,) that he would read no more the Books of profane Authors, yet it did appear, that he had not left off reading of them. S. Jerom juſtifieth himſelf from the former Accuſations; but as to the laſt he thinks it an Honour to follow the Study of learned Books, and declares, that whatſoever he hath ſaid in the Treatiſe concerning the Inſtruction of Virgins, was only the Deſcription of a Dream.

Towards the latter end of this Letter, he aſſerts that what he had ſaid in the Eighty third Epiſtle to Oceanus, That Baptiſm remits all Sins, that it blots out even the very ſpot of Bigamy: So that a Man might be ordained after a ſecond Marriage, if the former was before Baptiſm. This Deciſion is contrary to that of Pope Innocent I.

S. Jerom having thus pleaded for himſelf againſt Rufinus's accuſations, anſwers the Apology which he had made to ſatisfie Pope Anaſtaſius who had Condemned him, and to juſtifie himſelf of thoſe things that they Reproached him withall. He made Profeſſion of the Faith of the Church, and of the Myſtery of the Holy Trinity at firſt. S. Jerom anſwers that this is not the Queſtion, for now all Mankind was perſwaded of that Principle concerning the Incarnation. S. Jerom asks him what he thought of the Soul of Chriſt, whether it was Created before or at the Moment of his Conception. He chargeth him that he did not ſpeak plain enough about the Reſurrection of the Body, and further he pretends that Rufinus did not ſufficiently explain himſelf upon the Eternity of the Devil's puniſhment. Concerning the Origination of the Soul he had ſaid that there were three different Opinions; Some held that one Soul begat another, as Tertullian and Lactantius. Others that God Created them after the Forming of the Body, and ſo they came in by Infuſion; and laſtly ſome imagined that they were made when God Created the World of nothing; that this was Origen's Opinion, and that of ſome other Greeks: For his part, he was at no certainty about it, but left it to God, and to thoſe to whom it ſhould pleaſe God to Reveal it: But that he believed what the Church openly profeſſed, that God was the Creator of Souls, and Bodies. S. Jerom torments himſelf much about the laſt Point, and tho' he doth not ſay that any of theſe three Opinions are decided, yet he enveigheth much againſt Rufinus, becauſe he would not Condemn Origen's Opinion. He endeavours afterwards to Refute the Reaſons which he alledged to juſtifie himſelf for Tranſlating the Books of Origen's Principles: He finds fault that he ſhould ſtrike out ſome of the Errors and leave the reſt. He anſwers thoſe Conjectures which he brought to ſhow that Origen's Books were Corrupted; and ſince he had aſſerted the ſame thing of the paſſages in the Works of the ancients, as in S. Clemens, Dionyſius of Alexandria, and which did not ſeem to be agreeable to the Doctrine of the Church, of the Myſtery of the Holy Trinity: He denies that that can be reaſonably ſaid, obſerving that if ſuch Conjectures may take place, the greateſt Hereticks ſhould thereby be eaſily excuſed, as Marcian, Manichæus, Arius, Eunomius. But as Rufinus might have preſſed upon S. Jerom by asking him, Why then were there any Errors in their Works, and whether he would call them Hereticks upon that Account? S. Jerom prevents

prevents that Objection by ſaying, That perhaps they were in an Error, or the expreſſions they made uſe of had another Sence, or their Works might be Corrupted by Tranſcribers; or laſtly, that Writing before the Arian Hereſie appeared, they did not take the neceſſary Precautions againſt it. S. Jerom.
When S. Jerom made theſe remarks, he did not conſider, that Ruſinus might uſe them to defend Origen, as he did to excuſe the Ancients: and perhaps this way of juſtifying him had been more Solid than that which he made uſe of, by ſaying that thoſe Errors had been added. This S. Jerom oppoſes with all his Might, and endeavours to ſhow, that all the Examples of falſification of the Fathers Works alledged by Ruſinus, have no Relation to thoſe that are ſuppoſed to be in Origen's Books. In the reſt of the Letter he juſtifies himſelf from that Calumny, that he blamed the Verſion of the Septuagint. He declares, that he was ſo far from Condemning it, that he had Corrected it himſelf, and ſpake much in its Commendation. But he aſſerts that this Tranſlation was not Compoſed by the LXX in diſtinct Cells, and he defends thoſe that have recourſe to the Hebrew Text.

Ruſinus was much ſurprized to ſee an Anſwer to a Book that was not yet publiſhed, and he Writ immediately to S. Jerom about it, and ſent him withall an intire Copy of his firſt Anſwer. This Father who was not wont to leave any thing unanſwered that was againſt him, wrote immediately the third Book of his Apology, which contains nothing but Perſonal Quarrels, or Repetitions of what had been ſaid before: which commonly proves the end of all diſputes that continue long betwixt learned Men.

Pelagius having made his Errors publick. S. Jerom, who ſuffered no New Opinion in the Church to paſs unpuniſhed, fell upon him Vigorouſly in his Letter to Cteſiphon.

The firſt Maxim of Pelagius, which he oppoſes, is that of Apathy, that is, Freedom from Paſſions, which this Heretick thought Men could attain unto; and that having once got thus far, they might be without Sin.

The Second is concerning the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, whereof Pelagius denyed the Neceſſity, affirming that Mens Salvation depended upon the Power of their free Will. S. Jerom, as well as S. Auguſtin oppoſes this Error, by ſhewing the neceſſity of Prayer, and of good Works. If ſaith he, the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt dependeth upon our Will, if we need only a free Will, and none other help is required, to what purpoſe ſhould Prayer be made to God? Wherefore do we endeavour to move his Clemency, and call upon him for Succour, to obtain daily that which is in our own Power? ..... We muſt therefore remove faſting alſo and Continence: For why ſhould I Labour to get that by my Induſtry, which always depends on my ſelf? He adds that this Conſequence follows ſo Naturally upon this Heretick's Principles, that one of his own Party could not forbear reaſoning after this manner in a Commentary, ſaying; That if there is need of Foreign help to do good, then Liberty is deſtroy'd. " S. Jerom ſaith againſt this Error, That we have nothing but what is the Gift of God: " That indeed it is Man's part to run and to will, but he hath need of God's aſſiſtance, to do it: " That it is not enough, that God ſhould once give us his Grace, he muſt give it Conſtantly: " If we would obtain we muſt ask for it, and having obtained it, there is need of asking again: " And yet this Grace does not deſtroy free-will, neither does it follow upon theſe Principles, that " it is impoſſible to keep God's Commandments.

The Third Maxim of Pelagius refuted by S. Jerom in this Letter, is a Conſequence of the former. He held, that Man could be perfect, and freed from Sin, without God's help. S. Jerom proves the contrary by ſeveral places of Scripture, which ſhew that Man cannot be delivered, but by the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt. This Letter is of the Year 411.

He handleth the ſame Queſtions in the Dialogue againſt the Pelagians, where he introduces a Pelagian, under the Name of Critobulus, diſcovering and eſtabliſhing his Errors; and a Catholick under the Name of Atticus confuting them particularly, by Teſtimonies of Holy Scripture. This Dialogue is divided into two Books, and was written ſome time after the Letter to Cteſiphon about the Year 415.

The Sixty ſeventh Letter is a Tranſlation of a Letter from Theophilus to S. Epiphanius, whereby he deſires that Biſhop of Cyprus to aſſemble a Synod in that Iſland, to Condemn Origen, as he had done in Egypt. This Letter is of the Year 399.

The Sixty eighth is a Letter of S. Jerom's to Theophilus, who had ſent him Word, that he ſhould be exact in the obſervation of the Canons. S. Jerom thanks him for his admonition, and exhorts him to uſe his Authority againſt the Origeniſts, ſince Patience and Meekneſs could not reclaim them from their Error. This Letter is of the Year 398.

The Sixty ninth is from Theophilus to S. Jerom, giving him notice how he had driven away the Monks of Nitria who were accuſed of Origeniſm. S. Jerom returns him Thanks for that Noble Action by the Seventieth Letter. And he commends him again in the Seventy firſt Letter for what he had done againſt Origen. And in the laſt Place Theophilus acquaints him by the Seventy ſecond that he had cleanſed the Monaſteries of Nitria of Origeniſm.

The Seventy third is from S. Epiphanius to S. Jerom, giving him notice of the Judgment given by Theophilus againſt Origen: and he ſends him the Letter written by that Biſhop, and prays him to Publiſh what he had written in Latin upon that Matter.

The Seventy fourth is a Note to Marcella.

The Seventy fifth is againſt Vigilantius, who had accuſed him of Origeniſm, he uſes the ſame Arguments for his defence, that he had done in his other Letters, and treats Vigilantius very ill. This Letter was written, about the Year 397.

The

S. Jerom. The Seventy ſixth is of the ſame time. He repeats there what he had written in ſeveral places, that Origen deſerves to be commended for his Learning, but that his Principles are not to be followed.

The Seventy ſeventh to Mark the Presbyter was written by S. Jerom from the Deſart of Syria, about the time when the Eaſtern Biſhops tormented him, to oblige him to own Three Hypoſtaſes, about the Year 373.

The Seventy eighth to Pammachius and Marcella, is about Origen's Condemnation. He gives them an Account of what Theophilus had decreed. He ſends them a Copy of his Letter, and the Acts of his Judgment, and deſireth them to have it confirmed at Rome, by Pope Anaſtaſius. This Letter is of 399.

The Seventy ninth is the laſt Letter of S. Jerom's, to S. Auguſtin. S. Jerom ſent it by Innocent the Prieſt, who in the Year 419, was ſent from Africa into Egypt to look after the Copies of the Council of Nice. It is not directed to S. Auguſtin alone, but to him and Alypius. He congratulates their overthrowing of Hereſie, and tells them, That he had not had time yet to Anſwer what Anianus, Pelagius's Diſciple had written againſt him, but he would doe it very ſoon if God gave him Life: He ſpeaketh of Euſtochium's Death, who was alive when Palladius wrote his Hiſtoria Lauſiaca, in 419, which ſhews that this Letter was written in the Year 420.

The Eightieth Letter wherein he commends S. Auguſtin for the Reſolution and Courage, wherewith he had oppoſed Pelagius's Hereſie, was written ſome years before. He exhorts him to go on, praiſing him in this manner, You are commended in Rome; The Catholicks look upon you as the reſtorer of the ancient Faith, and what is yet a more honourable thing for you is, That the Hereticks hate you.

The Eighty firſt is a Note written about the time of his falling out with John of Jeruſalem, after the Condemnation of the Origeniſts, about the Year 404.

In the Eighty ſecond Letter, S. Jerom Anſwers the Queſtion about the Origination of Souls, propoſed to him by Marcellinus Governour of Africa. He does not decide the Queſtion, but ſaith, That he had delivered his Opinion in his Books againſt Ruſinus, and adviſes him to conſult S. Auguſtin, who would clear that Point to him: He adds, That he could not yet compleat the Commentary upon Ezekiel, becauſe of the Barbarian's Incurſions. This Letter is of the Year 410.

The Eighty third to Oceanus concerneth a Point of Diſcipline, whether a Perſon twice married, but once before Baptiſm, is to be looked upon as a Bigamiſt, and ſo to be kept from ſacred Orders: S. Jerom maintains the Negative with abundance of Wit.

In the Eighty fourth to Magnus, S. Jerom proveth by the Examples of S. Paul, and of the moſt famous Chriſtian Authors, that a Chriſtian Author, may, as he did, make uſe of prophane Examples, and prophane Authors. This Letter was compoſed about the Year 400. In this Letter there is a Catalogue of almoſt all the Chriſtian Authors to S. Jerom.

The Eighty fifth is an Invective againſt one who would have Deacons preferred before Prieſts. S. Jerom exalts the Prieſtly Dignity which ſeems too high, when he compares them with Biſhops, " I am informed, ſaith he, that one was ſo impudent as to preferr Deacons before Prieſts: be- " fore Prieſts, I ſay, who may be compared with Biſhops; For when S. Paul plainly teaches that " Prieſts are Biſhops, who can endure that thoſe who ſerve Tables and Widows, ſhould by " Pride exalt themſelves above thoſe, who by their Prayers conſecrate the Body and Blood of " Jeſus Chriſt? Then he produces paſſages out of the Apoſtolical Epiſtles, where they give to meer Prieſts the Name of Biſhops, and adds, " That it was to prevent Schiſm, that in Pro- " ceſs of time, one was choſen to be preferred before others, leaſt every one preſuming to aſcribe " to himſelf the Pre-eminence, the Church of Jeſus Chriſt ſhould be perpetually divided. For, ſaith he, in the See of Alexandria, from S. Mark the Evangeliſt to the time of Heraclas and Dionyſius, the Prieſts choſe one of them, whom they placed in a Seat higher than the reſt, and called him Biſhop, much after the ſame manner, as an Army chuſes an Emperor, or as Deacons chuſe one of themſelves to make him Archdeacon: And indeed, what doth a Biſhop doe, that is not done by a Prieſt, if you except Ordination? We are not to believe, that the Church is otherwiſe at Rome, than in other Cities of the world. Gauls, Britains, Africans, Perſians, Indians, and all other Nations worſhip the ſame God, and have the ſame rule of Faith. If Authority be required, the World is bigger than a City. Let a Biſhop be the Biſhop of what Town you pleaſe, he is neither more or leſs a Biſhop; whether of Rome, or Eugubium, whether of Conſtantinople or of Rhegium, Alexandria or Tunis, it is ſtill the ſame Dignity, and the ſame Function. Power and Riches do not make a Biſhop greater, Poverty and want of Credit do not render his Station more vile. All Biſhops are Succeſſors of the Apoſtles. But, you will ſay, how cometh it to paſs, that at Rome a Prieſt is not ordained, except a Deacon gives him his Teſtimonial? Why is the Cuſtom of one only Town objected to me? Why is the ſmall number of Deacons ſo exalted, as if that were the Law of the Church? All that is rare is moſt eſteemed. The ſmall number hath made Deacons valued, and the great number hath rendred Prieſts contemptible. However, Deacons ſtand before the Prieſts, even when the Prieſts are ſate down, and this is obſerved even in the Church of Rome: Tho' I have ſeen a Deacon ſitting in the ſame rank with Prieſts, in the abſence of the Biſhop, and give the Bleſſing in the Preſence of the Biſhop, ſuch is now the Corruption of Manners! But let ſuch as undertake theſe things know, that they are againſt Order; Let them hear theſe words of the Apoſtle. It is not juſt that we ſhould leave the word of God, to ſerve Tables; let them learn wherefore Deacons were eſtabliſhed, let them read the Acts of the Apoſtles, and remember their condition. The Name of Prieſt or Presbyter denotes Age, and that of Biſhop, Dignity; wherefore in the Epiſtle to Timothy, mention is made of the Ordination of Biſhops and Deacons, but not of that of Prieſts, becauſe Prieſts are compriſed under the Name of Biſhops. Laſtly, to ſhew that a Prieſt is above a Deacon, one needs only obſerve, that a Prieſt is made of a Deacon, but not a Deacon of a Prieſt. S. Jerom.

words

This Letter was written after his going from Rome, the Year is not known, but it was in all probability about the Year 387. What he ſaith of Biſhops, may have a good Sence, if we conſider his deſign in this place, which was to exalt the Dignity of the Prieſthood, by comparing them with Biſhops, not that he thought them equal in Dignity, ſince he poſitively excepteth the Power of Ordination, (and that of Confirmation in his Dialogue againſt the Luciferians:) but ſince Prieſts have a ſhare in the Government of the Church, they may in that Senſe be called Biſhops. Like Expreſſions may be ſeen in S. Jerom's Commentary upon the Epiſtle to Titus, and in many Authors that have followed him.

The Eighty ſixth is a Letter from S. Auguſtin, to S. Jerom, whereby he thanks him for the Anſwer to his, and intreats him in the Name of the whole African Church, to tranſlate the Greek Authors that had writ Commentaries upon the Scripture. He ſays, That he was very deſirous that S. Jerom would tranſlate the Sacred Books after the ſame way, that he had tranſlated Job, by ſetting down the differences of the Verſion of the LXX, which had great Authority in the Church. Now becauſe S. Auguſtin did not underſtand Hebrew, he could not apprehend that there ſhould be ſo much difference, betwixt the Hebrew Text, and the Tranſlation of the LXX, and doth not approve of any departing from it. For, ſaith he to S. Jerom, either thoſe paſſages are clear, or they are dark. If they are dark, you may be miſtaken, as well as the Seventy; If they are clear, can any Man believe, that thoſe learned Men did not underſtand them? This Letter which was written about the Year 395, not being carried, S. Auguſtin wrote another to S. Jerom upon the ſame Subject in 397. But the Perſon to whom he had given it to deliver to S. Jerom, gave out ſome Copies of it which were ſpread in Rome, ſo that it was publick before S. Jerom ſaw it. This ſecond Letter is here the Ninety ſeventh. S. Auguſtin asketh of S. Jerom the true Title of his Book of Eccleſiaſtical Writers; afterwards he reproves what S. Jorom had ſaid, That S. Peter, and S. Paul, pretended to have a difference, tho' they were agreed. He pretends that this Opinion is of very great Conſequence, and may have dangerous Effects, becauſe if we admit of an officious Lye in the Holy Scripture, it ſeems to give Men a handle to doubt of all. He therefore exhorts him to alter that paſſage in his Commentary. At the latter end, he prays him to add to his Book of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, the Errors of ſome Hereticks of whom he ſpeaks, or to make a Book purpoſely on that Subject. S. Auguſtin having no Anſwer, becauſe neither of thoſe two Letters were delivered to S. Jerom, wrote a Third by Cyprian the Deacon, wherein he requireth an Anſwer to the two former, adding in this, That he found fault with his writing a new Tranſlation of the Bible, pretending that it would cauſe Diſturbances and Scandals, if it were publickly read in the Church: as it really happened in a Church of Africk; where a Biſhop having publickly read the Prophecy of Jonas, according to S. Jerom's Tranſlation: the People hearing other Terms than they were wont to hear, accuſed their Biſhop of falſifying the Scripture. This Letter was written ſome years after the foregoing, about the Year 403.

S. Jerom having received theſe Three Letters by Cyprian the Deacon, thought himſelf affronted by S. Auguſtin's demands, and anſwered him with ſome Loftineſs in the Eighty ninth Letter. He repeats all the Queſtions that had been put to him by S. Auguſtin, and endeavours to give him Satisfaction. He telleth him, 1. About the Title of his Book of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, that it ought to be Entituled, the Book of Famous Men, or of Eccleſiaſtical Writers.

2. He defends his Expoſition of S. Paul's Epiſtle to the Galatians, about the Action of S. Peter, and S. Paul, by the Authority of Origen, Didymus and other ancient Authors, whoſe Commentaries he only tranſlated, as he had ſaid before in the Preface. That if he is in an Error, he had rather err with thoſe Great men, than flatter himſelf with having the Truth only on his ſide. He adds Reaſons to Authority, ſhewing by the Hiſtory of the Acts, That S. Peter could not but know, that Chriſtians were freed from the Burden of the Law; That on the other ſide S. Paul had himſelf practiſed that very thing whereof he here accuſeth S. Peter, by obſerving the Ceremonies of the Law; from whence he concludes that both theſe Apoſtles, being of the ſame Opinion, had agreed to raiſe that ſmall Diſpute to inſtruct both Jews and Gentiles by that pious Artifice. Afterwards he refutes S. Auguſtin's Opinion, and ſtrives to anſwer the Reaſons which he had produced.

Laſt of all he gives him Reaſons for the Notes, that were in his Tranſlation of the Scripture. He anſwereth S. Auguſtin's reaſoning, to prove that he had not done well in Tranſlating the Bible a new, very pleaſantly, by retorting the ſame upon him. " You cannot be ignorant, ſaith he, " that the Pſalms have been expounded by ſeveral Commentators, Greek and Latin, who wrote " before you. Pray tell me, how you durſt undertake to give a new Expoſition of them, after thoſe " Great men? You believed that thoſe places which you explained were either clear or obſcure: " If they were clear, it is probable (to uſe your own way of reaſoning) that they did underſtand them, and if they are obſcure, and they did not well underſtand them, it may " be thought that you might be miſtaken as well as they. And laſtly, he makes " himſelf ſport with their Quarrelling with the good Biſhop for reading his Tranſlation of

S. Jerom. Jonas, ſhewing that the occaſion of it was ridiculous, becauſe the Queſtion was about one ſingle word only, namely the term Gourd; which he had rendred Ivy. This Letter is of the Year 404.

S. Jerom being ſometime without anſwering this Letter, S. Auguſtin wrote to him, that he was informed that he had received his Letters, and expected an Anſwer, and whereas there was a Diſcourſe that he had ſent a Book to Rome againſt S. Jerom, he aſſures him that he had not. This Letter is of the Year 402. It is here the Ninetieth.

S. Jerom in anſwer to it ſaith, That he ſaw a Letter wherein he reproved a paſſage of his Commentary upon S. Paul, and adviſed him to retract it; but not being ſure that this Letter was from him, he had not anſwered it yet, becauſe he had been diſturbed by the Sickneſs of Paula. Afterwards he upbraids him for the Liberty he had taken; and Taxes him with ſeeking after Glory, by attacking Great men, telling him that he ought to examine his own Strength, and not compare himſelf with a Man that was grown old in Studying the Holy Scripture, and much leſs provoke him to a Combat. And at laſt deals with him, as with one whom he did not much value, and whom he judged not worthy of his Anger. This Letter is of the Year 402.

The Ninety ſecond is written by S. Jerom with the ſame Spirit. Again he complains that S. Auguſtin's Letter was publiſhed. He writes him word, that his Friends ſaid that he had not Acted innocently in that particular, but ſeemed to go about to eſtabliſh his own Glory, by the ruin of another Man's: That if he would Diſpute, there were young and able Men at Rome of his own ſtrength; As for himſelf, he might, like a Veteran Soldier commend the Victories of others, but not engage in the Fight; That he would not ſo much as read his Books to find fault; That he had ſeen nothing of his, but his Soliloquies, and ſome Commentaries upon the Pſalms, and that if he would examine them, he could ſhow him how he departed from the Expoſition of ancient Authors. This Letter is of the Year 403.

S. Auguſtin having received both theſe Letters, anſwered him with much Civility and Moderation, yet without ſubſcribing to his Opinions. He ſpeaks of the Quarrel which he had with Ruſinus, and laments that Diviſion, repreſenting to him, that he had not ſhewed that Meekneſs and Charity which he might have done. This Letter is written very Artificially. It is the Ninety third. He directed it to Preſidius, to ſee it conveyed to S. Jerom, as appears by the Ninety fifth.

S. Jerom contented with S. Auguſtin's Complements and Satisfaction, writ to him ſome time after the Ninety ſixth Letter, whereby he excuſes himſelf for having anſwered him, and tells him, that he earneſtly deſired there ſhould be no more Diſputes betwixt them.

S. Auguſtin having received this Letter by Firmus, returned an Anſwer by the Ninety ſeventh Letter, to what S. Jerom had written to ſatisfie his Requeſts, and defended his Opinions with great Clearneſs and Moderation. This Letter is here the Ninety ſeventh, and was written as well as the foregoing in the Year 403.

After this time there was no more ſaid of the Queſtions that were betwixt them, and they never writ to one another but with Civility. This may be taken Notice of in the Letters we have already ſpoken of, and in the Ninety fourth, where S. Jerom thanketh S. Auguſtin, for Dedicating and ſending to him, by Oroſius, the Books concerning the Origination of Souls; and he tells him, That he ſpake honourably of him in the Dialogue, which he wrote againſt Pelagius. This Letter is of the Year 406.

The Ninety eighth is a Complement from S. Jerom to S. Auguſtin of the Year 397.

The Ninty nineth Letter to Aſella was written by S. Jerom, at his going from Rome; he defends himſelf very warmly from the falſe Rumours, which his Calumniators had ſpread againſt him; becauſe of the Familiarity which he had had at Rome with ſome Roman Ladies. This Letter he writ when he was Embarking to return into the Eaſt, in 385.

The Hundredth Letter is a Satyr againſt one Bonoſus, who had taken, what S. Jerom had writ in general againſt all Vices, as particularly deſigned againſt himſelf, it is probably of the ſame time with the foregoing.

[Eraſmus's Edition which Dr. Cave follows calls him Bonaſius, which ſeems to be the truer Reading by the Letter it ſelf, wherein S Jerom, quibbles upon his Name, and plays upon his Noſe, and tells him, That tho' his Name be lucky, yet upon that Account he has no Reaſon to value himſelf.]

The Hundred and firſt to Pammachius, Concerning the beſt Method of tranſlating, is about the Tranſlation, which he made Two years before of S. Epiphanius's Letter to John of Jeruſalem. He was accuſed of not having done it faithfully. To juſtifie himſelf, he proves by the Examples of the beſt Tranſlators both Eccleſiaſtical and Prophane, that to tranſlate well, one is not to follow the words, or terms, but the Sence and Conceptions of his Author. He ſaith, that this Treatiſe was compoſed Two years after the Tranſlation of S. Epiphanus's Letter, of the Year 303, which ſhews that it is of 395.

In the Hundred and ſecond to Marcella, he argues againſt thoſe who accuſed him, of corrupting the Text of the Goſpel, becauſe he had corrected the faults of the Latin Tranſlation according to the Greek Original; and he reproveth thoſe that found fault with him, for blaming the Virgins frequenting Men's Company. This Letter was written likewiſe ſometime after his Departure from Rome, in 385, or 386.

Theſe are S. Jerom's Letters, and Treatiſes contained in the Second Volume.

The

The Third contains the Critical Letters and Works upon the Holy Scripture.

The Firſt directed to Paulinus, is not upon that Subject only; for he exhorts him not only to the Reading of the Holy Scripture, but alſo to retire, and to vow Poverty. But the Principal Subject of that Letter is Precepts, and a Method which is to be obſerved both in Reading and underſtanding the Holy Scripture. He ſhews at firſt that no Man ought to enter upon that Study, without a Skilful Guide to ſhew him the Way. He complains that all other Arts, and Sciences, are exerciſed by none but Men of that Profeſſion, but that every one pretends to be Skill'd in the underſtanding of the Scriptures. S. Jerom.

To ſhew that Men are deceived, and that the Scripture is not ſo eaſily underſtood, as they imagine, he reckons up the ſeveral Books, and takes notice of the great difficulty of finding the true Sence and Spirit of them, and he draws up in ſhort very curious Obſervations upon every Book of the Scripture, and upon the Character of their Authours.

The Second Letter in Number one hundred and four to Deſiderius, is a Preface to his Verſion of the Pentateuch. He ſheweth how neceſſary, and withall how difficult it is to undertake it after the Tranſlation of the LXX, and that this is defective.

The hundred and Fifth Letter is a Preface to the Book of Job.

The hundred and Sixth is a Preface to the Books of Kings, where he ſets down the number of the Canonical Books, of the old Teſtament, according to the Jewiſh Catalogue.

The hundred and Seventh is a Preface to the Chronicles directed to Chromatius.

The hundred and Eighth is another Preface to the Chronicles.

The hundred and Ninth is a Preface to Ezra and Nehemiah.

The hundred and Tenth is the Preface to Tobit.

The hundred and Eleventh to Judith.

The hundred and Twelth to Eſther.

The hundred and Thirteenth to Job.

The hundred and Fourteenth is another Preface to Job.

The hundred and Fifteenth is a Preface to the Books of Proverbs, Eccleſiaſtes, and the Canticles.

The hundred and Sixteenth is a particular Letter concerning his Tranſlation of Eccleſiaſtes.

The hundred and Seventeenth to Iſaiah.

The hundred and Eighteenth to Jeremiah.

The hundred and Ninteenth to Ezekiel.

The hundred and Twentieth to Daniel.

The hundred and Twenty firſt to the Twelve Minor Prophets.

The hundred and Twenty ſecond to Joel.

The hundred and Twenty third is a Preface directed by S. Jerom to Damaſus upon the new Tranſlation of the four Evangeliſts.

The hundred and Twenty-fourth is a Letter from Damaſus to S. Jerom, wherein he asketh him five Queſtions about the Holy Scripture. The Firſt, what is the meaning of thoſe Words Geneſis Chap. 4. Whoſoever Slays Cain, Vengeance ſhall be taken on him ſeven-fold. The ſecond, if all that God did was very good, as it is ſaid in Geneſis wherefore is mention made of Clean and unclean Creatures? The third why God ſaid to Abraham, that the Children of Iſrael ſhould go out of Egypt in the fourth Generation; and yet it is ſaid in Exodus that it was the fifth Generation which came out of Egypt. The fourth why Abraham received Circumciſion as a Seal of Faith. And the fifth why Iſaac Bleſſed that Son whom he deſigned not to Bleſs.

S. Jerom makes no anſwer to Damaſus about the ſecond and fourth Queſtion, becauſe they were handled at Large by Tertullian, Novatian, Origen and Didymus: But he explaineth the reſt. He ſaith to the firſt concerning thoſe Words of Geneſis, Whoſoever ſlays Cain Vengeance ſhall be taken on him Sevenfold; That they ſignifie, that whoſoever killeth Cain, ſhall undergo the ſeven ſorts of Revenge, or Puniſhment wherewith he was threatned. He reſolves the Third, by obſerving that we are not to Read in Exodus, that the Children of Iſrael went out of Egypt at the Fifth Generation, as it is in the Tranſlation of the Seventy, but that they went out Armed, as it is in Aquila's Tranſlation: Laſtly he anſwereth the fifth, ſaying that Iſaac did that good thing for the Family, in Bleſſing Jacob by a particular Effect of God's Providence without knowing it: He cites afterwards a Paſſage out of Hyppolitus, which gives an Allegorical Senſe to that Action, affirming that Eſau was a Type of the People of the Jews, and Jacob that of the Church. He approves this Expoſition, and ſo he eaſily anſwers Damaſus his Queſtion.

In the hundred and Twenty fifth Letter to Evagrius, he examineth who Melchiſedeck was: He rejects that Man's Opinion, who held that Melchiſedeck was the Holy Spirit. As alſo Origen's and Didymus's who ſaid that Melchiſedeck was an Angel. He produces the Opinions of Hyppolitus, S. Irenæus, Euſebius, and Euſtathius, who believed him to have been a Canaanite, King of a City called Salem, and a Prieſt of the Lord: He likewiſe takes Notice of the Jewiſh Opinion that it was Sem Noah's Son, and he ſeems not to diſapprove it. He obſerves that the City of Salem, was not Jeruſalem as Joſephus and moſt of the ancients believed, but another City near Scythopolis, called, as he ſays, Salem even in his time.

The following Letter to Fabiola, is a moral Explication of the Forty Encampings of the Iſraelites, from their going out of Egypt to the Land of Promiſe. He looks upon that Journey

S. Jerom. as a Repreſentation of the way to Heaven, and to every decamping he applies a moral Inſtruction. The like Reflections are made in the Hundred and twenty eighth Letter upon the Habits, and Sacerdotal Ornaments of the Prieſts under the old Law.

He ſhews in the Hundred and twenty ninth, that what is ſaid of the promiſed Land, is to be underſtood ſpiritually of eternal Glory, and as he makes uſe particularly of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews to prove his Aſſertion, ſo he affirms, that tho' the Greek Churches will not own it no more than the Revelations of S. John, yet the Latins receive both, becauſe they are quoted by the Ancients.

In the Hundred and thirtieth to Marcella, he tells her what the Ephod and Teraphim were.

The Hundred and thirty firſt Letter to Rufinus, contains an Allegorical Expoſition of the Hiſtory of the two Women that were judged by Solomon, who were, as he pretends a Figure of the Church and of the Synagogue.

In the Hundred and thirty ſecond, he anſwers an Hiſtorical difficulty about the years of Solomon and Ahaz. It is ſaid of Solomon that he began to Reign at twelve years, that he Reigned fourty years, and that his Son Roboam Succeeded him being fourty one years old. It ſeems by that, that Solomon had a Son at eleven years: The ſame is ſaid of King Ahaz. He is ſaid to have begun his Reign at twenty years of Age, that he Reigned ſixteen years, and that his Son Hezekiah Succeeded him at the Age of twenty five, which alſo intimates that Ahaz had him at Eleven years of Age. This ſeems Extraordinary and Incredible. S. Jerom anſwers that it might poſſibly be, but that the difficulty might be ſalved thus, that the Reigns both of Solomon and of Ahaz, may have had a double beginning: When they began to Reign with their Fathers, and when they began to Reign by themſelves. This being ſuppoſed, the anſwer is at Hand, when it is ſaid that Solomon began to Reign at twelve, and Ahaz at twenty years of Age, is to be underſtood of the beginning of their Reign with their Fathers, whereas when it is ſaid in another Place, that they died after having Reigned, one fourty, and the other ſixteen years, that is to be underſtood of the Time when they began to Reign alone. Whence it follows that they might then be of Age to have Children. He confeſſes at the Latter end of this Letter that there are ſeveral Chronological difficulties in the Hiſtory of the old Teſtament: Eſpecially about the years of the Kings of Iſrael and of Juda, but he would have no Man trouble himſelf much to Explain them.

The Hundred and thirty third Letter to Marcella is a Critick upon the Commentary upon the Canticles, that was made by Rheticius Biſhop of Autun. He obſerves ſeveral Faults in that Author, which were mentioned in the ſecond Volume of this Bibliotheca.

The Hundred and thirty fourth to Sophronius containeth Notes upon the Pſalms. He ſaith that ſome divide them into Five Books, but that he Comprehended all in one Volume, following therein the Authority of the Jews and the Apoſtles. He affirms that they are written by thoſe whoſe Names are found at the beginning of every Pſalm. He ſpeaks afterwards of his Latin Tranſlation of the Pſalms, and of Sophronius's deſign to Tranſlate it into Greek.

The Hundred and thirty fifth Letter to Sunia and Fretella, is a Critick upon thoſe paſſages of the Pſalms where the Greek of the Septuagint, and the Latin Verſion differ. S. Jerom layeth this down for a Rule, That when there is a Difference betwixt the Latin Copies of the New Teſtament, they ought to go to the Original: So likewiſe when there is any Difference between the Greek and the Latin of the Old Teſtament, to find out the Truth, the Hebrew Text ought to be conſulted. By this Rule he explains all thoſe paſſages of the Pſalms where the Greek of the Seventy, and the Verſion then in uſe did not agree.

In the Hundred and thirty ſixth to Marcella, he expounds the ten ſeveral Names given to God in the Hebrew Tongue.

In the Hundred and thirty ſeventh to the ſame, he gives the Signification of the Terms Halleluja, Amen, Maranatha. Halleluja, according to him, ſignifies praiſe the Lord. Amen is a Word which ſignifies that Credit is given to a thing, deſiring that it may be ſo; and which may be rendred, So be it. Maranatha is a Syriack Word, which S. Jerom tranſlateth, Our Lord comes.

In the Hundred and thirty eighth Epiſtle to the ſame, he ſhows the Meaning of the Hebrew Selah, which the Greeks tranſlate Diapſalma, a Word very frequent in the Pſalms. He ſaith that ſome have ſaid that the Diapſalma was an Alteration of the Verſe; and others, that it ſignified a Pauſe; others, a Change of the Tune: He is not of their mind, but ſaith with Aquila, that Selah ſignifies always.

The Hundred and thirty ninth, to Cyprian, is an Expoſition of the Eighty ninth Pſalm according to the Hebrew Text.

The Hundred and thirtieth, to Principia, is an Expoſition of the Forty fourth Pſalm.

The Hundred and forty firſt containeth certain Remarks to underſtand the Hundred and twenty ſixth Pſalm.

The Hundred and forty ſecond, and Hundred forty third, to Damaſus, clears the Hiſtory of Uzziah, ſpeaks of the Seraphim, the Holy, holy, holy, and the reſt of Iſaiah's Viſion deſcribed in the ſixth Chapter of his Prophecy.

The Hundred and forty fifth Letter to Pope Damaſus, explains the meaning of the Word Hoſanna, rejecting S. Hilary's Opinion, who thought that it ſignified The Redemption of David's Houſe; as alſo that it ſignified Glory: To expound it he appeals to the Hebrew Text, and pretends, that Hoſanna, whereof they have made Hoſanna, ſignifies Save us Lord.

The

The Hundred and forty ſixth to the ſame, is an allegorical Expoſition of the Parable of the prodigal Son, whom he ſuppoſes to be a Figure of the Gentiles converted to the Faith. S. Jerom.

In the Hundred and forty ſeventh to Amandus, he gives a literal Explication of three paſſages of the New Teſtament, of theſe Words of Jeſus Chriſt, Matth. ch. 6. Take no thought for the morrow; ſufficient unto the Day is the evil thereof. Of thoſe of S. Paul, 1 Cor. 2. He that committeth fornication ſinneth againſt his own body: and of that other of S. Paul, 1 Cor. 15. where he ſaith, that all things are ſubject to the Son of God, and that he is ſubject to him who hath put all things under him. At the latter end he moves the Queſtion, whether a Woman having left her Husband becauſe he was an Adulterer, or given to unnatural Luſts, may be married to another; and if, having done it, ſhe might be admitted to the Communion? He anſwers, That ſhe cannot marry without ſinning, and ought not to be admitted to the Communion but after Penance, and having renounced the ſecond Husband.

In the Hundred and forty eighth, he reſolves five Queſtions, which Marcella put to him upon ſeveral paſſages of the New Teſtament. The firſt is, How S. Paul could ſay, that eye hath not ſeen nor ear heard, neither have entred into the heart of Man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. Since he ſays in another place, that God hath revealed them by his Spirit. S. Jerom anſwereth that in the former place S. Paul ſpeaks of the things which the Eyes and Ears of Fleſh may apprehend, and what may be comprehended by humane Underſtanding without Revelation. The ſecond Queſtion was about the Expoſition which S. Jerom had given of the Parable of the Goats and of the Sheep, which are at the right, and at the left Hand of God; whereby he underſtood the Jews and the Gentiles, and not good and evil Men. Here S. Jerom refers to what he had ſaid in his Books to Jovinian. The third Queſtion was concerning thoſe of whom the Apoſtle ſaith, that they ſhall be carried alive into the Air at the Day of Judgment to meet Jeſus Chriſt. S. Jerom ſticks not to ſay, that this is to be underſtood literally, and that ſuch as ſhall be found alive then ſhall not die, but their Bodies ſhall become incorruptible and immortal. The fourth is about thoſe Words of Jeſus Chriſt to Mary Magdalen, Touch me not. This is the Sence of them according to S. Jerom, You deſerve not to fall down at my Feet and worſhip me, ſeeing you doubted of my Reſurrection. It is more natural to expound them after this other manner, Do not make haſte to embrace and to hold me, I am not yet aſcended into Heaven, I will abide for ſome time upon Earth, and you may do it at leiſure. The laſt Queſtion is to know whether Chriſt being upon Earth after his Reſurrection, was likewiſe in Heaven at the ſame time? S. Jerom anſwereth, that it is unqueſtionable that the Word of God was every where; but he does not anſwer the Queſtion propoſed preciſely, which was not concerning the Divinity, but the Humanity of Jeſus Chriſt.

In the Hundred and forty ninth Letter he propoſeth to himſelf one of the chiefeſt and moſt conſiderable Difficulties of the New Teſtament; namely what is the Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, and in what Sence it is unpardonable. But he doth not go to the bottom of the Queſtion, ſhewing only by the bye, againſt Novatian, that it is not the Sin of Idolatry.

The Hundred and fiftieth to Hebidia, and the Hundred and fifty firſt, to Algaſia, contain Solutions of three and twenty Difficulties about particular Paſſages of the New Teſtament, which theſe Ladies had put to S. Jerom. They are very curious Queſtions, and S. Jerom's Anſwers are very juſt and learned.

To theſe Works we ought to join the Treatiſes which are at the latter end of the eighth Volume, which likewiſe are Critical Letters. Namely,

The Book of the Names of the Cities and Countries mentioned in the Bible, tranſlated out of Euſebius.

An Expoſition of the Hebrew proper Names in the Old and New Teſtament.

The Hundred and fifty firſt Epiſtle is an Explication of the Hebrew Alphabet, written whilſt he was at Rome.

A Collection of Traditions, or rather Jewiſh Expoſitions upon Geneſis; a moſt curious and uſeful Work for the right Underſtanding of the Text of the Scripture; where he takes Notice of all the Differences betwixt the Hebrew Text and the Tranſlation of the Septuagint.

The Hundred and fifty ſecond Letter, to Minerius and Alexander, upon theſe Words of S. Paul, 1 Cor. 15. We ſhall not all die, but we all ſhall be changed: wherein he gives a particular Account of the different Expoſitions of this Place by the ancient Commentators. He quoteth Theodorus of Perinthus, Diodorus of Tarſus, Apollinaris, Acacius of Caſarea, and Origen. This Letter is of the year 406.

In the ſame place is the Hundred and fifty third Letter to Paulinus, written about the ſame time; he anſwereth two Queſtions put to him. The firſt, how one could reconcile to Free-Will, what is ſaid in Geneſis, that God hardned Pharaoh's heart; and what S. Paul ſaith, That it is neither of the Will, nor of the Endeavours of Men, but of God who maketh Man to act. The ſecond why S. Paul calleth the Children that are born of baptized Parents, holy, ſince they cannot be ſaved, but by receiving and preſerving the Grace of Baptiſm. For the former, S. Jerom referreth him to what Origen ſaith upon that Subject in the Book of Principles newly tranſlated by S. Jerom. And to the ſecond, he anſwereth, with Tertullian, that the Children of Chriſtians are called holy, becauſe they are as it were Candidates for the Faith, and have not been defiled with Idolatry; adding, that the Scripture gives the Name of holy to things that are pure; and that in this Sence the Veſſels of the Temple are ſaid to be holy.

Laſtly, There is in the ſame place the Hundred fifty fourth Letter to Deſiderius and Sereniſla, whom he invites to come to Bethlehem. It is written after the Treatiſe of Famous men, about the Year 400.

We are to reckon likewiſe amongſt S. Jerom's critical Works upon the Bible, the Corrections and Tranſlations which he made of the Books of the Scripture. At firſt he corrected the Greek Text of the Seventy, and reformed the common Edition, by Origen's Hexapla. He made a new Tranſlation (o) of them, wherein he mark'd by two Hooks, thoſe paſſages of the Septuagint that were not in the Hebrew Text, and added the Verſion of what was in the Hebrew Text, which was not in the Tranſlation of the LXX, noting thoſe Additions with a Star, ſo that in this Tranſlation one might ſee at once, both what was added, and what was wanting in the Verſion of the LXX. This Tranſlation of S. Jerom's of the Books of the Prophets, is joyned to his Commentaries.

This was the firſt Labour of S. Jerom upon the Bible, which he undertook when he was but young in his firſt Retirement.

Afterwards having attained to a more perfect knowledge of the Hebrew Tongue, he conceived that it would prove a conſiderable Service to the Church, if he ſet forth an entire Tranſlation of his own from the Hebrew Text. Wherefore he fell upon that Work, and publiſhed a new Latin Verſion of all the Books, which the Jews own to be Canonical (p), and of the Books of Judith and Tobit, ſetting before the beginning of each Book the Prefaces already mentioned.

This new Tranſlation of S. Jerom was but ill received in the Church at firſt. Men were very much pre-poſſeſſed in favour of the Septuagint, and S. Jerom's enterprize was looked upon as a raſh and dangerous Innovation: S. Auguſtin himſelf diſliked it, and ſent him word, as we have ſeen, that he would have done better if he had been contented with the Tranſlation of the Septuagint, and not have gone about a new one, which would certainly cauſe ſome Scandal and trouble in the Church. Rufinus and others of S. Jerom's Enemies, went yet further, and accuſed him of perverting the Scripture, and deſpiſing the Authority of the Apoſtles, by rejecting the LXX's Tranſlation which they had made uſe of, to introduce a new one, borrowed, in ſome ſort from the Jews. All theſe reproaches did not hinder S. Jerom from publiſhing his new Tranſlation. He ſhews the injuſtice of his Accuſers in moſt of his Prefaces. Sometimes he complains of the ingratitude of Perſons in his Age, who inſtead of acknowledging the good Services he had done to the Church, reckoned it as a Crime in him: Sometimes he declares, That he did not undertake that new Tranſlation to condemn the Septuagint which he commends, and approves, and which he corrected and tranſlated in his Youth, and that his deſign barely was, to do an uſeful Work. Sometimes he ſaith, That he was obliged to make a new Tranſlation, becauſe the Septuagint had been corrupted. But for the moſt part he affirms openly, That the main reaſon which put him upon making a new Tranſlation, was, the want of Exactneſs in that of the Seventy, and the ſmall Conformity which it had with the Hebrew Text; which, he believes ought to be depended upon, as the true Original. And for this reaſon, almoſt as often as he ſpeaks of it, he gives it the Name of the Hebrew truth. He alledgeth alſo political Reaſons for his undertaking. The Jews accuſed us in their Diſputes with us, that we did not faithfully quote the Holy Scripture, they continually urged that the Hebrew Text was not conformable to what was cited to them out of the Tranſlation of the LXX. The Chriſtians who were ignorant of the Hebrew, and beſides had no Tranſlation from the Hebrew, were extremely perplexed, and were forced, either to remain Speechleſs, or to have recourſe to the Rabbins. He ſheweth how neceſſary it was, that a Chriſtian learned in the Hebrew Tongue, ſhould make a Tranſlation conformable to the Hebrew Text. S. Jerom had another Argument to recommend his Tranſlation to the Latins, and that was point of Honour.

The Greeks, ſays he, boaſt that the Latins have the Holy Scripture only thro' their Channel; it is good to beat down their Pride, and to let them know, that the Latins have no need of them, but could go to the Fountain-head themſelves. Intereſt and Conveniency, were Conſiderations, that S. Jerom alſo made uſe of to bring his Tranſlation into credit. There were a great many different Greek Tranſlations; and ſeveral Editions of the Seventy quite different one from the other; It was impoſſible to compare them together without great pains, and much labour, and to have them without a great deal of Money. And after all, that Variety brought in great Confuſion, and rendred the Scripture almoſt unintelligible, to thoſe that did not underſtand the Hebrew Text. How neceſſary then was it to deliver the World out of that perplexity, by ſetting forth a Tranſlation conformable to the Original, which ſhould make all the reſt almoſt uſeleſs.

(o) He made a New Tranſlation.] He ſpeaks of this Verſion as wholly his own in the Eighty ninth Letter, to S. Auguſtin; yet it is likely, that he made uſe in ſeveral Books of the Scripture, of the ancient vulgar Tranſlation, which he only corrected. It is certain that he made a new Tranſlation of the Pſalms, as he ſays himſelf in this Epiſtle to Sunia and Fretela; He alſo tranſlated anew the Book of Job, as appears by the two Prefaces to that Book, and to thoſe of Salomon, as it is obſerved in the Second Book of the Apology againſt Rufinus.

(p) The Books which the Jews own to be Canonical.] He did not tranſlate the Books that were not in the Canon of the Hebrews, except Tobit, and Judith; and ſo the Tranſlations of the Books of Wiſdom, Eccleſiaſticus, Maccabees, Baruk, and Jeremiah's Letter, and the Additions to the Books of Heſter and Daniel, are not S. Jerom's.

How

How good ſoever theſe Reaſons were in themſelves, yet they were not ſtrong enough to make S. Jerom's Tranſlation welcome to the Latins at firſt; they kept for the moſt part to the ancient vulgar Verſion, being unwilling that any thing ſhould be altered it: But by little and little S. Jerom's got ſome credit; tho' the ancient vulgar was ſtill in uſe; ſo that in S. Gregory's time both theſe Tranſlations were followed, and this Father obſerves, that himſelf uſed ſometimes one, and ſometimes the other. Since that time S. Jerom's Tranſlation got the upper hand, and was received and read publickly in the Churches of the Weſt, excepting the Tranſlation of the Pſalms, and ſome Mixtures of the ancient vulgar Tranſlation (q), ſome paſſages whereof have been preſerved in the vulgar Latin. S. Jerom.

As for the New Teſtament, S. Jerom did not undertake to make a new Tranſlation, but contented himſelf with comparing the old one with the Greek, and to correct the principal paſſages where it diſagreed with the Text, as he ſaid himſelf in the Preface of the Goſpels to Damaſus, in a Letter to S. Auguſtin, and in his Book of Eccleſiaſtical Writers. This work was much better received than the new Verſion of the Old Teſtament from the Hebrew, and hardly any Body was offended at it, becauſe the Greek Tongue being eaſily underſtood, it was not difficult to diſcover the Alterations that might be made in the Greek Text, which could not be done in the Hebrew which was underſtood by the Jews only.

S. Jerom's Commentaries upon the Scripture, have great Relation to his other Studies, and thoſe Writings that we have hitherto ſpoken of. Firſt of all he ſets down the ancient vulgar Tranſlation, and with it joyns commonly his New Tranſlation: Secondly, He enquires after the Sence of the Hebrew Text exactly, and compares it with the ſeveral Greek Verſions. He cites the other places of Scripture which have any Relation to that which he expoundeth. In making theſe Obſervations, he clears the literal Sence of the Scripture, and diſcovers the Prophecies, by ſhewing their Accompliſhment. And in the laſt place, he adds myſtical Explications, and ſhort Allegories, which moſt commonly are only Etymologies, and Turns of Wit about words. He confeſſeth, that very often, he barely tranſlated ſome paſſages of Origen's Commentaries, and other Greek Authors without naming them: Wherefore he pretends, that the Errors and Contradictions in his Commentaries are not to be imputed to him; becauſe he only related the Opinions of others without approving them: that if he condemned them not, yet he did not intend to defend them, but would ſpare the others Reputation: And laſtly, That this Moderation ſhould give his Enemies no occaſion to Calumniate as they did, and to accuſe him of upholding ſuch Errors, that he was ſo far from, and which he refuted in other places.

Theſe Remarks may give a General Idea of S. Jerom's Commentaries upon the Bible, eſpecially upon the Books of the Prophets, wherein he followeth this method now deſcribed exactly, and inſiſts particularly upon the Expoſition of the Hiſtorical Sence of the Prophecies. He divided his Commentaries into ſeveral Books, and intermix'd here and there ſome Prefaces, in which he explains in general, the ſubject of his Commentaries, and then anſwers the Calumnies that were raiſed againſt him.

The Fourth Volume contains his Commentaries upon the Four great Prophets, namely eighteen Books of Commentaries upon Iſaiah, Six upon Jeremiah, Fourteen upon Ezekiel, and one upon Daniel.

The Fifth Volume contains the Commentaries upon Eccleſiaſtes and the Twelve minor Prophets.

In the Sixth Volume are S. Jerom's Commentaries upon the Books of the New Teſtament, after theſe there is a Preface to Damaſus upon the Four Evangeliſts, a Canon, or a Table of the Harmony of the Four Evangeliſts: Four Books of Commentaries or Notes upon S. Matthew's Goſpel; wherein he explains very clearly the Letter of the Goſpel, only adding now and then ſome moral Reflections, but he doth not inlarge upon Allegories. He obſerveth very near the ſame method in his Commentaries upon S. Paul's Epiſtles to the Galatians, Epheſians, Titus and Philemon, which are in the ſame Volum, with the Tranſlation of Didymus's Book of the Holy Ghoſt.

(q) Excepting the Tranſlation of the Pſalms, and ſome mixtures of the ancient vulgar Tranſlation.] It is certain that our vulgar is not the ancient Tranſlation that was made from the Septuagint. It is certain alſo that it was made from the Hebrew, but none of the Fathers underſtood Hebrew beſides S. Jerom, and ſo the Body of that Tranſlation cannot be attributed to any Body elſe: Beſides, the Tranſlations of the Books of the Bible which are in his Commentaries, are almoſt wholly conformable to our vulgar. We find alſo in the other Books a great many of thoſe Alterations which S. Jerom profeſſes to have made in his Tranſlation. It is certain that the vulgar Tranſlation of the Pſalms is not S. Jerom's. It was not made after the Hebrew, but after the Septuagint, tho' it is in ſome places conformable to the Tranſlations of Theodotion, Aquila, and Symmachus, and different from that of S. Jerom, which is yet extant among his Works. The Additions to the Books of Heſter, and Daniel, are not of S. Jerom's Tranſlation, no more than that of the Books that were not in the Jewiſh Canon. In ſhort, in our vulgar Latin are many places, which are remains of the ancient Tranſlation mingled with the new, for there are ſeveral places agreeable to the Tranſlation of the LXX, and differing from the Hebrew Text, as well as from the Obſervations, and Tranſlation of S. Jerom, who ſcrupulouſly tyed himſelf to the Hebrew Truth.

Theſe

S. Jerom. These Commentaries were not written by S. Jerom in the ſame order as they are ſet down in this Edition. Thoſe upon the New Teſtament were compoſed firſt, not long after he was returned from his Journey to Rome towards the Year 388. About the ſame time he writ his Commentaries upon Eccleſiaſtes, and undertook afterwards thoſe upon the minor Prophets, beginning at Micah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai. Theſe Works were completed before the Year 392. The Commentaries upon the others held him till towards the Year 400. Afterwards he wrote upon Daniel, and having done that, he undertook the Commentary upon Iſaiah, which was ended in 409; in 410. he compoſed that upon Ezekiel. The laſt of all are the Commentary upon Jeremiah, as it is obſerved in the Preface. If we add to theſe Works already mentioned, the Tranſlation of Origen's two Homilies upon the Canticles, that are in the Eighth Volume, of the Nine Homelies upon Iſaiah, of Fourteen upon Ezekiel, and of Fourteen upon Jeremiah, which are among Origen's Works, and the Verſion of Euſebius's Chronicon, we have all the Genuine Works of S. Jerom, the reſt being ſpurious as we ſhall ſhew afterwards.

As for the Chronicon it ſhould not be looked upon as a mere Tranſlation of Euſebius, S. Jerom having added many things to it, as he ſays in his Preface, where he obſerves that what is there from Ninus and Abraham to the taking of Troy, is a faithful Tranſlation of the Greek: that from the taking of Troy, to the 20th. Year of Conſtantine, he had added and altered many things, which he had collected out of Suetonius and other Latin Authors; and laſt of all, That he continued Euſebius his Chronicon from the 20th. Year of Conſtantine, to the Sixth Conſulſhip of Valens, and the Second of Valentinian, that is to the Year 378. of the vulgar Æra.

We have loſt a Commentary of S. Jerom upon the Tenth Pſalm, and the Six following, divided into ſeven parts, which he mentions in his Catalogue. Notes upon all the Pſalms, which he ſpeaks of in the firſt Apology againſt Rufinus; and a Treatiſe upon the Book of Job, which he mentions in the Commentary upon the Fifth Chapter of Amos. S. Auguſtin in his Treatiſe of Hereſies to Quodvultdeus, ſaith, That he had heard that S. Jerom had compoſed a Treatiſe upon the ſame Subject, but that he could not find it. The ſame Saint ſpeaks in the Two hundred and ſixtieth Epiſtle to Oceanus, of a Treatiſe of S. Jerom's which Oroſius had brought to Oceanus, wherein he treated of the Reſurrection. Caſſiodorus names ſome other Works of this Father, as a Letter to Antius, where he ſaith, That he has explained great Difficulties: An Expoſition upon Salomon's Judgment: Notes upon all the Prophets; and a Commentary upon the Revelations. Trithemius mentions a moral Commentary upon the Four Goſpels, and another upon the Canonical Epiſtles; but theſe Treatiſes are not extant: neither is it very certain, that they were S. Jerom's.

I have omitted ſome Books that are in this Volume now mentioned, becauſe they are not S. Jerom's, tho' they bear his Name; Here is the Catalogue of them, and a Critick upon them.

The Queſtions upon the Book of Chronicles, and the Books of Kings, which are rejected by moſt of the Criticks, as being not S. Jerom's. Firſt, Becauſe when S. Jerom makes a Catalogue of his Works, he ſpeaks only of his Queſtions upon Geneſis, but ſays nothing of his having written the like work upon the Chronicles, or the Kings. 2. Becauſe the ſubject and the ſtile of theſe latter Queſtions ſeems different from that of the former. In his Queſtions upon Geneſis, S. Jerom ſets down often the Hebrew words of the Text, and the Greek terms of the Tranſlations, of which he examines the differences: but in theſe there is nothing like it. In the Queſtions upon Geneſis, he ſeriouſly ſearcheth into the Sence of the Scripture, and makes ſolid and uſeful Reflections: Theſe on the contrary are full of uſeleſs, trifling, and fabulous Remarks. Wherefore Lyranus thinks they are unworthy of S. Jerom; and aſcribes them to ſome newly converted Jew: For my part I would not affirm ſo poſitively, that they are not S. Jerom's. They were compoſed by a Man that underſtood Hebrew, who kept to the Letter of the Holy Scripture, who was acquainted with Jewiſh Traditions: all which Characters belong to S. Jerom: the ſtile of thoſe Books is very like his, and no Man ought to wonder that in a Treatiſe of this Nature he hath followed ſome of the Jewiſh Fancies.

This will not hold of the ſmall Treatiſe which contains the Explication of the Countries, and Towns ſpoken of in the Acts: it being evidently written by ſome other Author beſides S. Jerom, ſince he quotes this Fathers Treatiſe when ſpeaking of Smyrna. It is among Bede's Works, who probably may be the Author of it.

The Commentary upon the Lamentations of Jeremiah is a Collection by Rabanus of the thoughts of ſeveral Fathers, and particularly of S. Gregory. It is among that Author's Works, and it is cited under his Name, by Bonaventure, in his Commentary upon the Lamentations.

The Commentary or Book of Annotations upon S. Mark's Goſpel, is altogether unworthy of S. Jerom, both for the ſtile and for the matter. The Author knew neither Greek nor Hebrew, nor ſpake very good Latin. He is guilty of ridiculous Errors, as when he ſaith, That Paſcha ſignifies Paſſage in Latin, and that Phaſe ſignifies the offering of a Victim, and when he Remarks that Nardus Piſtica, is as much as to ſay Myſtical. He confounds Mary Magdalen, with Mary of Bethany; an Opinion refuted by S. Jerom in his Commentary upon the Twenty ſixth Chapter of S. Matthew. Speaking of the Croſs, he repeateth ſeveral Verſes out of Sedulius, who writ long after S. Jerom.

The Commentaries upon the Pſalms have not fewer Marks of their being Suppoſititious, for 1. The Author of them had no knowledge of the Hebrew and Greek Tongues. 2. His Method in Expounding the Scripture is quite different from S. Jerom's, for whereas S. Jerom keepeth to the Historical and Literal Sence, he uses only Moral and Mystical Expositions. 3. His Remarks are contrary to S. Jerom's; as when he Expoundeth the Hundred and fourth Psalm, he saith that Cynomia is a Dog-fly. But S. Jerom rejects that Notion, at the latter end of his Letter to Sunia and Fretella. Upon the Eighty sixth Psalm, he observes that according to the Hebrew, it must be Nunquid Sion, dicet Homo? S. Jerom renders it, Ad Sion, dicet Homo. He denies that the Eighty ninth Psalm is written by Moses, tho' S. Jerom ascribes it to him, in his Commentary upon the thirteenth Psalm. He saith that a Passage of Scripture cited by S. Paul in the third Ch. of the Epistle to the Romans, is taken out of Deuteronomy, and S. Jerom shews that it is out of Isaiah. 4. This Authour's Stile is far from the Elegancy of S. Jerom's, nay it is very full of Faults, Repetitions, and Solecisms. 5. This Authour's Commentary is made up of common Places, and moral Exhortations. 6. He quoteth S. Eucherius upon the Sixteenth Psalm. 7. It is manifest that these Commentaries are not Notes explaining the Letter of the Scripture; but Instructions, and Conferences (as appears by the Expositions of the Eighty ninth, Hundred and eleventh, and Hundred and fifteenth Psalms) whose Conclusions are in the form, of an Homily; and by several Expressions, discovering that the Author spake to others. And this has made it be believ'd, that they are the Discourses of some Monk, who expounded the Psalms to his Brethren, by collecting the Expositions of some Commentators. Wherefore it is no wonder to find in the Commentary upon the Ninety third Psalm a passage which S. Augustin citeth in his Epistle to Fortunatianus, under S. Jerom's Name, and in the Commentary upon the Fiftieth Psalm, another passage quoted under S. Jerom's Name by S. Gregory, in his Exposition of the Fourth penitential Psalm.

in

S. Jerom.

The Commentary upon Job, having been made, as appears by the Conclusion, at the request of Victorius an English Bishop, who lived in Bede's time, cannot be S. Jerom's, but very likely Bede's himself. Some attribute it to Philip a Priest and Monk, S. Jerom's Disciple, to whom Gennadius ascribes Commentaries upon Job. But this Commentary of Philip's is that which is attributed to Bede, and this is rather Bede's, being very like the Commentary upon the Proverbs of Solomon, which is undoubtedly his, as Trithemius assures us: These Commentaries do very much differ from S. Jerom's, both as to the Stile, and the Matter: The Author citeth the Scripture according to our Vulgar Translation; he quotes S. Augustin, S. Gregory, and S. Jerom. In the Commentary upon the Twenty fifth Chapter of Job, there is a passage cited by Faustus Rhedonensis under S. Jerom's Name: It is likely that the Author of that Work had taken it out of this Father.

The Commentaries, or Notes upon all S. Paul's Epistles are not S. Jerom's, but a Pelagian Authour's, who openly teacheth his Errors in several places, and particularly upon the Seventh Chapter of the Epistle to the Romans. It is certain, that Pelagius made a Commentary upon S. Paul's Epistles, which S. Augustin quoteth in several places of the Third Book of Merits, and Remission of sins. This same Commentary of Pelagius is likewise cited by Marius Mercator, and there are most of the passages quoted by both these Authors. Yet two or three are not there; which might give occasion of doubting, whether it were perfectly the same, if Cassiodorus had not informed, us that he struck some places out of it.

The Epistle to Demetrias the Virgin which is the first Book of S. Jerom's Ninth Volume, belongs likewise to Pelagius, as S. Augustin assures us, in his Book of the Grace of Jesus Christ, where he refuteth the Errors therein contained.

The Second Epistle of the same Volume is a Letter of S. Augustin's to Juliana, Demetrias's Mother, against the foregoing Letter.

The Third directed to Gerontius's Daughters, is of the same stile with the First; and the Author seems to be of the same Opinions. He commendeth S. Paulinus as his Contemporary and his Friend.

The Eighth Letter of the knowledge of God's Law, seems to belong to the same Author, and perhaps Pelagius, who was S. Paulinus's Friend, and had written a Letter to him.

The Fourth Letter to Marcella, the Fifth to a Banished Virgin, the Ninth of the Three Vertues, the Twelfth of the Honour due to Parents are written in the same stile. Marianus thinks that the former belong to S. Paulinus. The Sixth, and Seventh are of the same Author: In this last there is some Discourse of the Worship of Relicks, and of discovering the Bodies of S. Gervasius, and S. Protasius by S. Ambrose. Some ascribe both these Letters to Maximus Taurinensis.

The Tenth Letter of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, is written by some Latin Author who lived when the East was infected with the Errors of the Eutychians; as he observeth himself, long after the Death of S. Jerom, and Sophronius, to whom some have attributed this Letter. He that writ it set it out under S. Jerom's Name, that what he saith of the Blessed Virgin Mary, might be more valued. And the better to colour his Cheat, he pretends to direct it to Paula and Eustochium. Altho' he enlargeth much upon the Commendations and Prerogatives of the Virgin Mary, yet he saith that it was not certain, whether she was risen again, and her Body carried up into Heaven. This Treatise tho' suppositious, was inserted into the Offices of the Church by Paulus Diaconus, and Alcuinus, in Charlemaign's time: And since it hath made up part of the Lessons for the Feast of the Assumption, in the old Breviaries of France and Italy.

The Eleventh is likewise upon the same Subject, and perhaps written by the same Author.

The Book of the Seven Ecclesiastical Orders, falsly supposed to be directed to Rusticus Bishop

S. Jerom. of Narbon, who lived at the ſame time with S. Leo, belongs to a Modern Author in compariſon of S. Jerom, who lived after Iſidore of Seville, from whom he hath taken many things. Yet he is older than Micrologus, or than Biſhop Hincmar, who quote this Work under S. Jerom's Name; which ſhows that this Author wrote about the ſeventh Century.

The fourteenth Letter is a Commendation of Virginity; where he deſcribes the Danger of Loſing it, and the Enormity of the Crime committed by a Virgin conſecrated to God, when ſhe violateth her Vows. This likewiſe is a Work of an Author younger than S. Jerom, as well as the thirteenth Letter, where ſome Expreſſions which the Scripture makes uſe of after a Manner ſuitable to the Weakneſs of our Underſtanding, are explained. An ordinary Skill may diſcover that none of theſe pieces are S. Jerom's.

The Creed attributed to Damaſus, which is the fifteenth piece of this Volume, is a Confeſſion of Faith copied out, partly from that in S. Gregory Nazianzen, and in Vigilius Tapſenſis, which we attributed to Gregory of Bætica: but this was brought to the Form it now has, long after Damaſus; for there is the Article that the Holy Ghoſt proceedeth from the Father and the Son. which was not in all the ancient Creeds.

The Explication of the Creed dedicated to Damaſus, immediately after this Confeſſion of Faith now ſpoken of, is that Confeſſion of Faith which Pelagius ſent to Pope Innocent, that is condemned by S. Auguſtin in his Book of the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, where he produces ſome Extracts out of it, which are word for word in this.

The eighteenth Tract is a third Confeſſion of Faith, ſuppoſed to be directed to S. Cyril, and compoſed by ſome Modern Author, as appears by his Method of Expounding the Myſteries.

The following Treatiſe upon the Creed goes under Ruſinus's Name, who without diſpute is the true Author of it.

The Treatiſe to Præſidius is a Declamation compoſed by ſome mean Imitator of S. Jerom, who affects to ſpeak of the Deaths of Valentinian and Gratian, as happening in his time, for I cannot believe that the trifles and impertinences that occurr in that Work are S. Jerom's: they are far more worthy of an Impoſtor.

The Treatiſe of the Circumciſion to Theraſia, is a more genuine and an Ancienter Monument.

The Twenty firſt Epiſtle is a Letter of S. Auguſtin to Januarius, which was formerly the One hundred and nineteenth, and now the Fifty fifth among this Father's Epiſtles.

The Authour of the two following Treatiſes is not known, which are, the one a Declamation againſt a Virgin called Suſanna, that was fallen into ſin; and the other a reproof to Evagrius, for refuſing to comfort a Churchman that had ſinned.

The Twenty fourth Letter is written by Paulinus.

The other Pieces in the firſt part of this Volume are mean, and flat Sermons upon divers Subjects.

The Thirty ſixth concerning the Obſervation of the Eves of Holidays is aſcribed in the Third Volume of F. Dachery's Spicilegium, to Nicetius Biſhop of Triers, who lived about the year 535: there may be poſſibly ſeveral other Sermons of the ſame Author.

The Fortieth and laſt, is a Letter upon the Parable of the Prodigal Son, which belongs to ſome Pelagian Author, and perhaps to Pelagius himſelf.

The Second part of this Volume containeth certain Diſcourſes very like S. Jerom's, though they bear the Names of their Authors. Theſe are, a Letter of S. Paulinus to Sebaſtian the Hermit, the Tranſlation of Pamphilus his Apology for Origen, a Treatiſe of Ruſinus concerning the falſification of Origen's Books, the Tranſlation of Origen's Principles by Ruſinus, with his Prologue, Ruſinus his Apology to Pope Anaſtaſius, this Pope's Letter to John of Jeruſalem: Both the Books of Ruſinus againſt S. Jerom. Three Letters of S. Auguſtin to S. Jerom, which formerly were the Twenty eighth, Twenty ninth, and One hundred fifty ſeventh, amongſt S. Auguſtin's, and now the One hundred ſixty ſixth, One hundred ſixty ſeventh, and One hundred ninetieth, and the Homily of the Paſtors which is in the Ninth Volume of the ſame Author. The Epiſtle attributed to Valerius addreſſed to Ruſinus, which comes after theſe Treatiſes of S. Auguſtin, is the Work of ſome Impoſtor.

Gennadius his Book of Famous Men, is a continuation of S. Jerom's: but the Catalogue of ſome Eccleſiaſtical Authors, which is found alſo in this Volume, is a ſad piece, and ſo are two Letters going before it, and two others immediately following, falſely aſcribed to S. Jerom and to Damaſus.

The Rule for Monks is a Collection of Sentences and Precepts taken out of S. Jerom, compoſed by Lupus General of the Monks that ſtiled themſelves of the Order of Hermits of S. Jerom, and approved by Pope Martin V.

The Dialogue, of the Origination of the Soul, betwixt S. Auguſtin and S. Jerom, is the Fiction of ſome ignorant Perſon, who drew out of both theſe Fathers Works ſome Paſſages of his Dialogue.

It is not eaſy to gueſs who was the Author of the ſmall Treatiſe of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt; but it is eaſy to gueſs, that he that compoſed it was well vers'd in the Doctrine of the Fathers: The ſame may be ſaid of the Author that wrote the Homily upon the Parable of the importunate Neighbour who asked a Loaf of his Friend. Luk. chap. 11.

The third part of this Volume contains ſuch Treatiſes as Marianus judged unworthy to be ranked among Pieces of any Value. He might have joined to them thoſe which he ſet down in the firſt and ſecond Rank, whereof ſome are even more contemptible than thoſe in the third.

He

He begins with three Epistles which some Impostor composed under S. Jerom's Name. But the Imposture is discovered by the Meanness of the Expressions, and the little Exactness in the Thoughts, which discover the Cheat. The first is a comforting Letter to Tyrasius upon the Death of his Daughter. The second an Exhortation to Oceanus, how Injuries are to be endured. The third to the same, concerning the Lives of Clergy-men. It is a strange thing that Baronius durst affirm this to be really S. Jerom's, it being manifest that the Stile is very different from S. Jerom's; besides that he speaketh of S. Martin, whom he calleth Blessed, and of his Life composed by Sulpitius Severus. We have already given our Judgment of the Catalogue of Ecclesiastical Authors that is inserted here, and of the precedent and following Letters. S. Jerom.

The Rule for Nuns is written by some simple and unlearned Monk.

The Letter of Chromatius and Heliodorus to S. Jerom, and the Answer under this Father's Name, upon the Virgin Mary's Life, are fabulous Fictions wholly unworthy of Credit.

Lastly, S. Jerom's Life, supposed to have been written by his Disciple Eusebius, S. Augustin's Letter to S. Cyril in S. Jerom's Commendation, and S. Cyril's to S. Augustin about his Miracles, are rejected by every body, as miserable Pieces, full of Fables, Falsities and Ignorance. Can there be a grosser one than what the Pseudo-Cyril saith, That S. Jerom's Miracles convinced Silvanus the Heretick, who taught, That there were two Wills in Christ? as if either S. Cyril or S. Jerom had lived in the Time of the Monothelites, or had approved of those Hereticks Doctrines.

S. Jerom, doubtless, was the Learnedest of all the Fathers; he understood Languages very well, and was well skilled in Humanity and Philological Learning. He was well vers'd in Ecclesiastical and Prophane History, and very skilful in Philosophy. Poets, Historians, Orators, and the Greek and Latin Philosophers were equally familiar to him; he throughly understood them, and filled his Writings with their finest Strokes. His Way of Writing is clear and lively. He affects not that lofty Eloquence of the Barr, which is supported by high Terms and a handsom Turn of a Period; but he excelleth in that other kind of Eloquence that is necessary for those that commit their Thoughts to Writing, which consists in the Nobleness of Expressions and Thoughts. His Discourse is enlivened by a wonderful Variety of lively and surprizing Turns, and adorned with an infinite number of different Colours, sometimes he brings in Flowers of Rhetorick; sometimes he dexterously employs Logical Subtilties. He often makes apt Allusions by the finest passages of the Poets, and constantly calleth to his Assistance the Thoughts and Maxims of the Philosophers. In a word, he collects the finest things in all Arts and Sciences, and adapts them so exactly to his Discourse, that they seem to be there in their natural Place. So that his Style may be compared to those in-laid Works, where the Pieces are so artificially pieced together that they seem to have been made one for the other. Yet it must be confessed that he affecteth this Way of Writing too much, and overchargeth his Discourse with Quotations. He gives a diverting and chearful Air to the rougheſt Questions, and explains the most intricate Difficulties with great Clearness. His Commentaries upon the Scripture are written in a Style very different from his other Works. Those Flowers, and that Ornament before named, are banished from them, and the Text is explained with Simplicity and Clearness, as he says himself in several places: For he saith in his Questions to Damasus, He that treateth of the holy Scripture, should not borrow Aristotle's subtle Reasonings, nor use Tully's Eloquence, or the Flowers of Quintillian to refresh his Reader with his Declamations. His Discourse should be plain and vulgar. It is not necessary that it should be composed with Care; it is sufficient that it expounds the Things, and discovers the Sence of the Scripture and clears its Obscurities. Let others be eloquent, and by that get Commendations and Applause; let them thunder out great Words in a plausible Harangue, for my part I am satisfied to speak so as I may be understood, and discoursing of the holy Scripture, I strive to imitate its Simplicity. So much of his Style. His Genius was hot and vehement; he fell upon his Adversaries with fierceness, made them ridiculous by his Jests, trampled upon them with Terms of Contempt, and made them blush with Reproaches. Though he was very Learned, yet there is infinitely more liveliness and Vehemency in his Exhortations and Polemical Works than Exactness and Solidity. He knew a great deal, but he never argued upon Principles, which made him sometimes contradict himself. He often carries his Subject too far, being transported with his ordinary Heat, he commends, blames, condemns and approves of things according to the Impression which they make upon his Imagination. He is more moderate and just in his Commentaries, but not always exact, because he did not think enough, but contented himself with dictating to his Amanuenses (as he owns himself) either what he had read in other Mens Commentaries, or learned from the Jews. He often sets down the Expositions of different Commentators, without altering any thing, and without naming those from whom he took them: Nay, he introduced such Explications as he did not approve himself, though without refuting them; being persuaded that it was enough that he had given notice to his Reader, that in his Commentaries there were several Explications which he copied out of others. Thus he excused himself of some Errors that were imputed to him, because they were found in his Commentaries. This Advertisement may serve also to vindicate him from several Errors and Contradictions which may be found in his Commentaries. In this manner he justifieth himself against Rufinus, who upbraided him for teaching in his Commentary upon the Epistle to the Ephesians, Origen's Opinions of the Resurrection,

S. Jerom. Reſurrection, the Præ-exiſtence of Souls, and of the Deliverance of Devils and Damned Men. He does not deny that theſe Opinions are in his Commentaries; but he aſſerts, that they are ſet down in Origen's Name, and not in his own; and conſequently, that they ought not to be imputed to him. It is an extraordinary thing however, that having produced theſe Opinions of Origen without declaring againſt them, he ſhould afterwards look upon them as Criminal in Origen, and condemn them as very dangerous Errors. But what may ſeem yet more ſtrange, is, that himſelf hath uttered ſomething like it in his Commentary upon the 66th. Chapter of Iſaiah; where he really acknowledges, that the Puniſhments of Devils, Infidels, and impious Men, that know not God, are never to end; but he ſaith, That as for Sinners and impious Men that are Chriſtians, whoſe Works are to be tried and purified by the Fire, the Judge's Sentence will be moderate, and temper'd with Clemency. I know this place is underſtood of Purgatory and Venial Sins; but S. Jerom's Words ſeem to imply ſomething more, ſince the name of Impious Chriſtians cannot be given to thoſe who are guilty of Venial Sins only, and deſerve no more than Purgatory. Several ſuch things may be found in the Commentary upon the 4th. Chapter of Amos, in the firſt Book againſt the Pelagians, and in the Commentary upon the Prophet Nahum, where he ſays, That God granted pardon to thoſe that periſhed in the Flood, as well as to the Sodomites, Egyptians, and other Sinners, who were puniſhed in this World for their Crimes; according to this Rule of the Prophet, That God will not puniſh twice for the ſame Sin. Several other particular Opinions of Origen, are to be met with in this Father's Commentaries, which he ſeems to approve of. He teaches in his Treatiſe of the Prodigal Son, that the Angels may ſin. Upon the Epiſtle to Titus, he affirms that they were before the Creation of the World. Upon the Prophet Micah, That they ſhall be preſent at the laſt Judgment. Upon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, That Chriſt died for them. Upon Eccleſiaſtes, That the Sun and the Stars have Souls; and many other Notions of this kind which he rejected himſelf when he refuted Origen.

In S. Jerom's Commentaries there are alſo ſeveral Opinions that ſavour of Jewiſh Superſtitions, or the too great credulity of the firſt Chriſtians: As when he aſſerteth in the Commentaries upon the Prophets, Daniel and Micah, That the World ſhall laſt but One thouſand years; or, when he ſaith in his Commentary upon the Prophet Habakkuk, That God's particular Providence extends only to Men; and that all other Creatures are governed by a general Providence, without God's having a diſtinct knowledge of each Event: Or, when by too much ſcrupuloſity he condemns all Oaths, as he doth in his Commentary upon the 5th. of S. Matthew, and upon the 2d. Chapter of Zachary: Or, when he forbids Chriſtians to pay Tribute to Heathen Princes, upon S. Matthew, Chapt. the 7th. Or, when he pretends that the Name of Father is to be given to no Man, in the Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Galatians, l. 2. But if he is too ſcrupulous in theſe places, in others he ſeems to be a little too free; as, when in his Commentary upon Jonas, he adviſes and approves the Action of ſuch as kill themſelves to preſerve their Chaſtity. Perhaps ſome perſons will not think him leſs to blame in his Commentary upon the 23d. of S. Matthew, where he diſapproves the Action of ſome devout Women, who, in imitation of the Phariſees, bound about their Necks, Books of the Goſpel, or Croſſes, or other Marks of Devotion *. Laſtly, He ſometimes giveth Allegorical Sences to things which are to be underſtood literally; as, when in the Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, he ſaith, That Jacob's Wreſtling with the Angel, is not to be underſtood literally of a corporeal and viſible Combat, but myſtically of an inviſible and ſpiritual Fight: Yet he is angry that Men ſhould ſay that Hell-fire is not a real fire, and that the Scripture makes uſe of that word by a Metaphor; or, that what is ſaid of the Earthly Paradiſe, is not to be underſtood Literally, but Allegorically. Theſe are ſome of the Faults that have been taken notice of in S. Jerom's Commentaries, and which crept in by the too great precipitation with which he wrote them.

[* If ſome Perſons will think S. Jerom to blame, others, upon much better grounds, will commend him for diſapproving Practices that are ſo very ſuperſtitious, and that cannot any manner of way tend to the advancement of ſolid Piety and Holineſs.]

His Polemical Treatiſes are written with more care. But as he indulges his ordinary heat too much, ſo he falleth into thoſe extreams for which he hath been often blamed. As for example; when he diſputeth with Helvidius, he commendeth Virginity to that exceſs, that it was thought, he deſigned to condemn Matrimony; and his Book having ſcandalized many, himſelf was obliged to apologize for it, and moderate the terms which he had uſed before. When he undertakes to abate the pride of Deacons, who would make themſelves equal with Prieſts; he ſo exalteth the Dignity of the latter, that he ſeems not to think them inferior to Biſhops. He diſcourſeth after ſuch a manner of Virginity, as would almoſt perſwade Men that it is neceſſary to lead that ſort of life to be ſaved. Labour, Faſtings, Auſterities, with other Mortifications, Solitude and Pilgrimages, make up the ſubject of almoſt all his Advices and Exhortations. His delight was to write and hear of the Lives of Monks and Hermits, and he eaſily believed whatſoever was told him upon that ſubject, though never ſo extraordinary.

Moſt of S. Jerom's Writings being either Critical or Moral, there is very little Dogmatical concerning the main Points of Chriſtianity to be met with in them: Beſides, he flouriſhed in a time wherein the Diſputes concerning the Trinity and Incarnation were over: The Arian and Apollinarian Hereſies having been rejected, and thoſe of Neſtorius and Eutyches not being yet riſen.

The

the Pelagian Hereſie brake out towards the latter end of this Father's Life, which he undertook to refute immediately, with as much vigour, as he could have done in his earlier years. He ſhewed the Neceſſity of Chriſt's help, and the Impoſſibility of living in this World without Sin; and free from Paſſions, againſt that Heretick: However, he doth not weaken the ſtrength of Free-will, which conſiſted, in his Opinion, in a free choice, either to follow or to reject God's Call. He went no further into the Nature of Grace, or other Difficulties about Original Sin and Predeſtination. He ſeems to think that God hath predeſtinated or reproved Men, becauſe of his Eternal fore-knowledge of the Good or Evil they ſhould doe. This he teacheth in his Apology againſt Ruſinus, by oppoſing Origen's Principle, which grounded Predeſtination or Reprobation upon paſt Merits. He ſaith upon the 121ſt. Pſalm, that the Prayer of Jeſus Chriſt did not always obtain what he deſired. S. Jerom.

I ſhall conclude theſe Remarks with ſome Paſſages of S. Jerom, that expreſs his Thoughts upon the Sacraments of the Euchariſt and Penance. You ask (ſaith he in his Letter to Hedibia, Queſt. 2.) how thoſe words of our Saviour in S. Matthew are to be underſtood: I ſay unto you, that henceforth I will drink no more of the fruit of the Vine, untill I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom. Some grounding their Opinion upon theſe words, have invented a fabulous Reign of a Thouſand years; wherein, they pretend, that Jeſus Chriſt ſhall reign corporeally, and drink of a ſort of new Wine, whereof he has not drunk from the time of his Paſſion, to the end of the World. But not to trouble our ſelves about ſuch Fables: Let us acknowledge, that the Bread which our Saviour brake, and gave to his Diſciples, is the Body of the ſame Saviour. If then the Bread that came down from Heaven is the Lord's Body, and if the Wine which he gave to his Diſciples is his Blood, let us reject thoſe Jewiſh Fables, and go up with the Lord into that great and high Room [which is the Church;] let us receive at his hand the Cup, which is the New Covenant. Moſes gave us not the true Bread, but our Lord Jeſus Chriſt did; he invites us to the Feaſt, and is himſelf our Meat; he eats with us, and we eat him. We drink his Blood, we daily tread in the Sacrifices, the Grapes that are red with his Blood. He tells us again upon the ſame Subject, in his Commentary upon the firſt Chapter of the Epiſtle to the Corinthians, That Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God hath given his Blood to redeem us, but that this Blood of Jeſus Chriſt may be taken, either for his Spiritual and Divine Fleſh; whereof he ſaith himſelf, My Fleſh is Meat indeed, and my Blood is drink indeed: Or for his Fleſh that was crucified, and his Blood that was ſpilt in his Paſſion with the Soldier's Lance. The Author of the Book of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, that goes under Bertram's Name, quotes this laſt paſſage, which doth not prove, as ſome pretend, that the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt is not really in the Euchariſt, but only that it is not there after a viſible, paſſible, and corruptible manner, as it was upon the Croſs. The Compariſon, added by S. Jerom, of the Fleſh of the Saints, explains his meaning. There may be found (ſaith he) a variety of Fleſh and Blood in the Saints; ſo that the Fleſh which ſhall one day ſee the Salvation of God, ſhall be different from the Fleſh that ſhall be incapable of poſſeſſing his Kingdom. Thus, as the Fleſh of Saints, in the next Life, is the ſame Fleſh, though impaſſible and incorruptible; ſo the ſame Fleſh of Chriſt, which was corruptible, and capable of ſuffering upon the Croſs, is impaſſible and incorruptible in the Euchariſt. There is another paſſage, the Expoſition whereof is much controverted in the Commentary upon the Twenty-ſixth Chapter of S. Matthew, where he ſaith, That the Lord having celebrated the Old Paſſover, which was a Figure of the New, paſſed to the true Sacrament of the Paſſover, that as formerly Melchiſedeck, High-prieſt of the Almighty God, offering Bread and Wine, drew out before-hand the Figure of this Myſtery; ſo Jeſus Chriſt, to fulfill the ſame, ſhould repreſent the Truth of his Body and Blood. Theſe laſt words are variouſly rendred: The Proteſtants will have the word repræſentare to ſignifie only to repreſent. The Church of Rome, on the contrary, maintains, that repræſentare implies as much as to make preſent. This latter Sence is confirmed by the following Words: The fatted Calf which is offered, to obtain the Salvation of Repentance, is the Saviour himſelf, whoſe Fleſh we daily eat, and whoſe Blood we daily drink. The Reader, who is one of the Faithfull, underſtands as well as I doe, what this nouriſhment is, which filling us with its abundance, makes us put forth outwardly Praiſes and holy Thanksgivings. This ſacred Feaſt is daily celebrated; The Father receiveth his Son every day, Jeſus Chriſt is continually offered upon the Altars. In the Epiſtle to Pope Damaſus, he ſaith, That there is as much difference betwixt the Loaves they offered to God in the Old Law, and the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, in the Euchariſt, as betwixt the Shadow and the Body, betwixt the Image and the Truth, and betwixt the Types and the Things they repreſent. Laſtly, In the Epiſtle to Heliodorus, ſpeaking of Prieſts, he ſaith, That they make the Body of Jeſus Chriſt with their ſacred Mouth: Qui Chriſti corpus Sacro ore conficiunt. In his Commentary upon Zephaniah, he ſeems to doubt whether wicked Prieſts conſecrate it: But 'tis probable, that he ſpeaks thus rather to terrifie them, than to eſtabliſh a Propoſition, whoſe Conſequences would prove very dangerous.

[Theſe words, which is the Church are not in S. Jerom.]

I add an excellent Paſſage of this Father concerning the Sacrament of Penance, taken out of his Commentary upon theſe Words of the 16th. Chapter of S. Matthew: Whatſoever ye ſhall bind on Earth, ſhall be bound in Heaven; and whatſoever ye ſhall looſe on Earth, ſhall be looſed in Heaven. Some (ſaith he) Prieſts and Biſhops of the New Law, underſtanding not the ſence of theſe words, doe imitate the pride of the Phariſees, by aſcribing to themſelves a power to condemn the Innocent, and to abſolve the Guilty. But God doth not ſo much conſider the Sentence of the Prieſt, as the Life of the Penitent: And as the Levites did not cleanſe the Lepers, but only ſeparated thoſe that

S. Jerom. were cleanſed from thoſe that were not, by the knowledge which they had of the Leproſie: Even ſo the Biſhop, or the Prieſt, doth not bind thoſe that are innocent, and looſe the guilty; but having heard the difference of Sins, he knows whom to bind, and whom to looſe, in the diſcharge of his Miniſtery.

In this place, we may take notice, 1. Of the Cuſtom of declaring Sins to the Prieſt. 2. The Power which Prieſts had to Abſolve. 3. The uſe Prieſts were to make of the Keys, and the care they were to take not to Abſolve, but ſuch as were truly penitent*.

[*After what has been already ſaid of S. Jerom, one can hardly eſteem him a Perſon, upon whoſe Authority Points of Doctrine or Matters of Diſcipline can ſafely be eſtabliſhed. He may however give the Sence of the Church in his own time, in Matters wherein he perſonally was not concerned, in which we have Reaſon to think that he gives a faithfull Account of things: And therefore ſince we have no Cauſe to disbelieve what he ſays of the Euchariſt, and of (what the Church of Rome calls the Sacrament of) Penance; but, on the contrary, may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that he ſpake the Sence of the Church. The Paſſages themſelves are to be examined. Of thoſe concerning the Euchariſt, we are to conſider, 1. That he keeps himſelf to the Language of the New Teſtament in his Anſwer to Hedibia's Queſtion, and only confutes the Millennaries, but ſays nothing of the Modus of the Preſence of the Body and Blood of Chriſt in the Sacrament. 2. That his Interpretation of thoſe Words in S. John, My Fleſh is Meat indeed, and my Blood is Drink indeed, of the Spiritual and Divine Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt, ſhews that he underſtood them Allegorically; for he diſtinguiſhes that from the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt, which ſuffered upon the Croſs: Now there is equal Reaſon to believe, that what our Saviour ſays in the 6th. Chapter of S. John, concerning Eating his Fleſh, and Drinking his Blood, is literally to be underſtood, as what he ſays in the Inſtitution of the Sacrament of the Euchariſt: And if one is Allegorically to be interpreted, then they are both. 3. That the Myſteries of Religion were as nicely examined in that Age, as in any ſince Jeſus Chriſt declared it to the World; and when every thing elſe that was Myſterious was controverted, this ſingle Article of the Real Preſence, as defined by the Council of Trent, which is contrary to that Reaſon, that the other Diſputes concerning the Trinity and the Divine Decrees are properly above, was never debated. This is ſo ſtrange (if we ſuppoſe the Doctrine of the Church of Rome to have been then receiv'd) that it is incredible; eſpecially when we conſider, 4. That the generality of the Fathers, at that time, interpreted every thing in Scripture Allegorically, to which they could not aſſign a convenient Literal ſence. This the People were uſed to: This was S. Jerom's practice very often; and he had learnt it of Origen, whom he ſeems ſincerely to have follow'd, till he quarrelled with Ruſinus: So that we have great Reaſon to think, that Men ſo accuſtomed to Allegories, as the Teachers and the People were in this Age, would not be at a Loſs to interpret our Bleſſed Saviour's meaning in any of his Words, which Literally interpreted, would contradict and do Violence to that Reaſon by which they were capacitated to underſtand any part of his Law.

The Paſſage produced in favour of Auricular Confeſſion proves nothing leſs; S. Jerom ſays, That after the Prieſt had heard the difference of Sins, he knew whom to bind and whom to looſe; that is very true; but that is no Reaſon for Men to reveal all their Sins to the Prieſt; becauſe the Church, in that Age, put Men under Penance only for publick Sins; thoſe that had committed private ones of ſuch a Nature, as would, if diſcovered, have made them unfit to come to the Sacrament, were exhorted to put themſelves under a voluntary Penance; and if they did ſo, they were obliged to declare why they did it, that ſo the time of their Penance might be regulated; but this ſeems to have been left to themſelves, which makes it quite another thing from the practice of the Church of Rome.]

S. Jerom's Works were publiſhed by Eraſmus, and printed in ſix Volumes at Baſil, from the Year 1516, to the Year 1526. In 1530, they were again printed at Lions by Gryphius, and at Baſil, by Froben, in 1553. The Firſt Edition of Marianus was at Rome, by Manutius, in the Years 1565, 1571, and 1572. The Second at Paris, by Nivelle, in 1579. The Third at Antwerp, in 1579. The Fourth at Paris, with Gravius his Notes, in 1609. The Fifth is of 1624, at Paris. The Laſt was printed in 1643. Theſe are the Collections of all this Father's Works. There are ſeveral of them printed by themſelves, as the Letters in Octavo, printed at Rome by Manutius in 1566, at Antwerp in 1568, with Gravius's Notes, and at Mentz in 1470, at Venice in 1476, at Paris in 1583, at Dilingen in 1565, at Louvain in 1573. The Book of Famous Men, at Louvain and Helmſtad in 1611, at Colen in 1580, at Lions in 1617, at Antwerp in 1639. The Epiſtles to Theophilus at Paris in 1546, and 1589. The Book of Virginity at Rome in 1562. The Treatiſe of Hebrew Names at Wirtemberg in 1626. I ſay nothing of the Editions of the Chronicon, becauſe they were mentioned in the Account of Euſebius his Works.

[Dr. Cave mentions an Edition of S. Jerom's Works at Frankfort in 1684, in 12 Volumes in folio, with all the Scholia, Cenſures, Index's, and Collections of all ſorts that had been printed, till that time, upon S. Jerom; which are all comprized in the three laſt Volumes.]

The Benedictines of the Congregation of S. Maura will ſoon undertake a new Edition of S. Jerom. There is reaſon to hope that it will not be inferior either in Beauty or Exactneſs to thoſe of S. Auguſtin and S. Ambroſe, which are almoſt compleated by the Labours of thoſe Illuſtrious Monks, who make ſo good uſe both of their Time and Watchings, to enrich the Church with ſuch glorious Works.

RUFI-

RUFINUS.

Rufinus.

RUFINUS, Sir-named by ſome Toranus, or Tyranius (a), a Prieſt of Aquileia (b), was famous in S. Jerom's time; and after he had been one of his beſt Friends (c), he proved afterwards one of his greateſt Enemies. He embraced a Monaſtick life (d), and was baptized in a Monaſtery about the Year 370. He went out of Rome with Melania in 372, to go into Egypt (e), to viſit the Monks in the Deſert of Nitria; they came out of Egypt into Paleſtina, and dwelt 25 Years in Jeruſalem, where the Houſe of that famous Widow was the Reſort and Harbour of all the Pilgrims that came to viſit the holy Places. She received them with joy, kept them at her own Charges, and gave great Gifts to the Church of Jeruſalem. All this time Rufinus ſpent his Life in the Study and Exerciſes of Piety. Becauſe he underſtood the Greek and Latin Tongues very well, he undertook to Read and Tranſlate the Works of Greek Authors, and eſpecially of Origen: He conceived ſo high an Eſteem for that Author, that he undertook his Defence againſt all Accuſers. This made him fall out with S. Jerom, who took the contrary ſide: However, they were reconciled before Rufinus (f) left Paleſtina to return to Rome. But this Peace did not laſt long. Rufinus and Melania having tarried 25 Years in the Eaſt, reſolved to go back to Rome: They took Shipping in the Year 397; and having paſſed by Nola, where they were very well received by S. Paulinus, Biſhop of that place, they came to Rome. Sometime after Rufinus publiſhed the Tranſlation of the Firſt Book of the Apology for Origen, which went under Pamphilus's Name, with a Letter to ſhow that Origen's Works had been falſified, and a Tranſlation of the Books of Principles, with a Preface that offended S. Jerom. This Saint wrote immediately his Apology againſt Rufinus, againſt which Rufinus compoſed Two Books of Invectives. This Controverſie made a great noiſe in Rome, where both theſe famous Antagoniſts were in great credit, and had many Advocates. Rufinus kept himſelf quiet as long as Pope Syricius lived, and received a Letter of Communion from this Pope; with which he retired into Aquileia. But after his Death, Anaſtaſius, that ſucceeded him, cited Rufinus to appear before him; but he not appearing, only excuſing himſelf by an Apology, was condemned without Mercy; ſo that he could not preſerve his Dignity of Presbyter in Aquileia, where he abode till the Viſigoths ſpoiled Italy in 409, when he was forced to retire into Sicily, where he died in the Year 410 (g).

Rufinus wrote Two ſorts of Books, Tranſlations of Greek Authors, and Books of his own making.

(a) Sir-named Toranus or Tyranius.] This Sir-name was given him by a certain Author that ſpeaketh of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, whoſe Book is immediately after the Treatiſe of Ildephonſus of Toledo in Miræus's Bibliotheca. He is commonly called Toranus; but the Original of that Name is not known.

(b) Prieſt of Aquileia.] Gennadius, Palladius, and all the reſt of the Ancients ſay that he was of Aquileia, a City of Italy; yea, himſelf ſeems to declare it plainly in his Apology; yet Marius Mercator calleth him a Syrian. Garnerius is of opinion, That that Rufinus, ſpoken of by Marius Mercator, and whom he ſuppoſes to have been Author of the Pelagian Hereſie in Rome, is not the ſame with him of whom we write now; but his Arguments are very weak, and in all probability he is the ſame Rufinus. Father Gerberon thinks, on the contrary, that Marius Mercator ſpeaks indeed of our Rufinus; but he affirms, that Rufinus was not born in Aquileia, but only a Prieſt and an Inhabitant of that Town. He quotes two paſſages of S. Jerom to prove it, but they are not convincing. It is more natural to ſay that Marius Mercator called Rufinus, a Syrian, becauſe he dwelt long in Syria, and came from thence, when he ſowed the Pelagian Doctrine in Rome.

(c) One of his beſt friends] S. Jerom commends him in the 5th. Epiſtle to Florentius, and recommends him as a Man whom he particularly eſteem'd. His 4th. Epiſtle to Rufinus ſhews the ſame.

(d) He embraced a Monaſtick life] He ſaith in his firſt Invective, that Thirty years before he was baptized in a Monaſtery by Chromatius, Jovinian and Euſebius. This Writing is of 399, or 400.

(e) To go into Egypt, &c.] Palladius relateth theſe Circumſtances of the Lives of Rufinus and Melania, in his Hiſtoria Lauſiaca. Chap. 32, and 33. he ſaith, That they abode 27 Years in the Eaſt, but S. Paulinus reckons but 25: And this Epocha agreeth beſt with the other circumſtances of their Journey.

(f) Yet they were reconciled.] S. Epiphanius in his Letter charges Rufinus with Origen's Errors, and reckons him among the Followers of John of Jeruſalem, and among S. Jerom's Enemies. S. Jerom ſays the ſame in the 66th. Letter to Rufinus, as ſoon as he had publiſhed his Tranſlation of the Books of Principles, Scias nos reconciliatas inimicitias purè colere.

(g) Where he died, &c.] S. Jerom in his Commentaries upon Ezekiel and Jeremiah, ſpeaks of Rufinus as one already dead: It is certain that Rufinus retired into Sicily after Rome was taken, as he ſays himſelf in his Letter to Urſacius, ſet forth by Valeſius.

The

Ruſinus. The Greek Tranſlations are the greateſt and moſt conſiderable part of his Labours; for, as Gennadius ſays, he gave the Latins a great many of the Greek Books. The Catalogue of them is this:

The Twenty Books of Jewiſh Antiquities, by Flavius Joſephus.

The Seven Books of the Jewiſh War.

Two Books againſt Appion of the ſame Author.

Euſebius his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, reduced into Nine Books, and Tranſlated with great Liberty (h). The Books of Recognitions (i), attributed to S. Clement, with a Preface.

The Sentences (k) of Sixtus the Pythagorean, which he had falſely aſcribed to Pope Sixtus the Second of that Name.

The Book of Origen's Principles; 17 Homilies of the ſame Author upon Geneſis; 12 Homilies upon Exodus; 16 Homilies upon Leviticus; 28 Homilies upon Numbers, 26 Homilies upon Joſhua; 9 Homilies upon the Book of Judges; the firſt Homily upon the Book of Kings; 9 Homilies upon the Pſalms, and Commentaries upon the Epiſtle to the Romans; and a Letter of Origen's, where he complains of his Book's having been corrupted.

The firſt Book of Pamphilus's Apology for Origen.

The Orations of S. Gregory Nazianzen: The Aſcetical Rules of S. Baſil, and ſome other Treatiſes of both theſe Fathers of the Church.

The Sentences of Evagrius Ponticus; and ſome other Treatiſes of this Author. He Tranſlated beſides, if we believe Gennadius, a Treatiſe of Pamphilus's againſt the Mathematicians *: And S. Jerom obſerves, that he had publiſhed an Arian's Book under the Name of Theophilus the Martyr; but neither of theſe Books are extant.

[* By Mathematicians, they meant Judicial Aſtrologers; as alſo did moſt of the ancient Romans, who were for the moſt part very ignorant of that part of Learning, till towards the Fall of their Empire, when Apuleius, Boëthius and Caſſiodorus Tranſlated ſome of the Elementary Books of the Grecians, into Latin.]

Ruſinus gave himſelf a great deal of liberty in his Tranſlations, and kept more to the Sence which he judged ought to be given to Authors, than to their Words. In a word, his Tranſlations are Paraphraſes, rather than literal and faithfull Verſions. He hath uſed much freedom, particularly in Euſebius's Hiſtory, and in Origen's Treatiſes, where he hath changed, added and ſtruck out many things, as he acknowledgeth himſelf. But if theſe Tranſlations be not ſincere, they are eloquent enough, and they have that clearneſs which makes them pleaſing to the Reader.

The Works of Ruſinus's own Compoſition, are theſe.

Two Books of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, which he hath added to the Tranſlation of Euſebius his Books; wherein he continues the Hiſtory of the Church, to the Death of Theodoſius the Emperor. Theſe Books are dedicated to Chromatius of Aquileia, and were written at the ſame time that Alaric, King of the Goths, waſted Italy. They were Tranſlated into Greek by Gelaſius of Ceſarea. They are pretty well written, but there are many Hiſtorical faults (l).

A Diſcourſe to prove, that Origen's Books have been falſified; publiſhed at Rome in 397, with the Tranſlation of Origen's Book of Principles, and of Pamphilus's Apology.

Two Books againſt S. Jerom's Apology, entituled Invectives.

In the former, to juſtifie his Doctrine againſt the Accuſations of S. Jerom, he produces that Creed, and that Doctrine which he had learned at Aquileia above Thirty years before, from Chromatius, Jovinian and Euſebius; he obſerveth, that in his Church they did not only profeſs in their Creed to believe the Reſurrection of the Fleſh, carnis reſurrectionem; but that they added, of this Fleſh, hujus carnis reſurrectionem. "To the end, ſaith he, that making the Sign of the Croſs upon our Brother, as is uſually done at the end of the Creed, we may make a publick profeſſion, that we believe the Reſurrection of the ſame Fleſh which we now touch. He uſes

(h) Euſebius his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory reduced into Nine Books, and Tranſlated with great Liberty.] He hath paſſed over almoſt all Euſebius his Ninth Book, and hath made but One of the Eighth and Ninth. In the Seventh he hath added a Relation of S. Gregory Thaumaturgus his Miracles, which is not in Euſebius; and in the Ninth, an Harangue of Lucian the Martyr. There is ſome alteration in the Order of the Chapters in the Sixth and Seventh Books. There are ſeveral faults in his Tranſlation; he makes Zacharias, ſpoken of in S. Luke, to have been a Martyr at Lions; he confounds S. Biblias with S. Blandina, &c.

(i) The Books of Recognitions.] Bellarmin believes that this Tranſlation is falſely attributed to Ruſinus; but Gennadius owns it to be his.

(k) The Sentences of Sixtus the Pythagorean.] S. Jerom upbraids him with that fraud in ſeveral places. Ep. ad Cteſiph. in c. 18. Ezek. & in c. 12. Jeremiæ.

(l) There are many Hiſtorical faults.] Theſe are ſome of them. He ſuppoſes that Athanaſius hid himſelf for ſix years after he was condemned by the Council of Tyre. He perverts the Order of Time in the Hiſtory of S. Athanaſius. He ſheweth but little favour to S. Gregory Nazianzen, and S. Baſil. He ſaith that S. Hilary was Excommunicated, which is falſe: And he confounds the Time, when he ſays, That S. Hilary was Baniſhed after the Council of Milan. There are ſeveral other faults of the ſame nature; notwithſtanding which, it is a very uſefull Work, becauſe he is the firſt that has unfolded and put in order the Hiſtory of that time.

this

this Confeſſion for his Juſtification againſt S. Jerom, from the Accuſation of being in an error in the point of the Reſurrection of the Fleſh, and of not believing that Man ſhould riſe again with his whole Fleſh. He affirms, that he is wrongfully accuſed of that Error; for his Opinion is, that the whole Body ſhall riſe again with its Members; but that it ſhall be glorious and immortal, and ſhall be no more ſubject to Corruption, and other infirmities of mortal and corruptible Fleſh. Rufinus.

After this he anſwers what was objected againſt him, that he entertained Heretical Opinions concerning the Trinity. He ſhews, that his Doctrine in that point cannot be ſuſpected of Error: That if through inadvertency he hath let paſs in the Tranſlation of Origen's Principles, any paſſage wherein he ſeems to ſay that the Son ſees not the Father, and that the Holy Ghoſt ſees not the Son, he ſhould not for all that be accuſed of Error, ſince in ſo many places he profeſſes the contrary: That if they had charitably warned him of it, he would have either blotted out or altered it, as he had done the others, which he found to be contrary to the Doctrine of the Church, concerning the Trinity. He complains alſo, that Paulinianus had poiſoned the Tranſlation of that place, making him ſay, That it was neither impious or abſurd to ſay that the Son ſees not the Father; whereas he had only ſaid, That he would afterwards give a reaſon of the Sence, in which it might be ſaid, That the Perſon of the Father was inviſible.

After that he repelleth all S. Jerom's reproachfull Allegations, declaring that S. Jerom himſelf had formerly commended Origen, Tranſlated his Works, and that in his Commentaries there were the ſame Errors concerning the Nature of the Fleſh, when riſen again; the Præ-exiſtence of Souls, and the end of the Torments of the Devils, and the Damned; for which Reaſon he found fault that Origen's Books were Tranſlated. This he ſheweth by long Extracts out of different Commentaries of this Father.

The Second Book of Rufinus's Invective is concerning the perſonal Reproaches which he utters againſt S. Jerom. Firſt he charges him with tearing the Reputation of Chriſtians of all States and Conditions, in his Book of Virginity, and with blaming their Manners at ſuch a rate, that Pagans and Apoſtates enquired diligently after that Book, to make uſe of it againſt the Church. Secondly, he accuſes him of Perjury, becauſe after a ſolemn Oath to read the Books of profane Authors no more, he ceaſed not to read and make uſe of them in his Works: Particularly he takes notice of a paſſage in his Treatiſe of Virginity, wherein he pretends that S. Jerom ſpake of God after an irreverent manner. He laughs at S. Jerom, for boaſting that he was Didymus's Diſciple, for having had one Month's Converſation with him. He jeſts upon him for taking as his Teachers, Porphyry the Philoſopher, and Barrabas the Jew. He quoteth ſeveral places of his Writings, to prove, that he not only commended the Erudition and Learning of Origen, but that he approved his Doctrine alſo. He accuſeth him of ſtriking out of his Chronicon, what he had ſaid before in favour of Melania. He reproveth him for the low eſteem he had of the Septuagint. He finds fault with his contemptuous rejecting the Story of their 70 Cells. He blames him for not owning the Hiſtory of Suſanna for Canonical. Laſtly, he makes it Criminal in S. Jerom to Tranſlate the Bible a-new. This Invective is written with much addreſs and vehemence. He compoſed it in the Year 399.

Sometime after he writ his Apology to Pope Anaſtaſius; wherein having expounded his belief of the Trinity, the Reſurrection, the laſt Judgment, and the Torment of Eternal fire for the Devils, in a very Catholick manner; he declares that he was uncertain of the Origination of Souls, having obſerved that Eccleſiaſtical Authors were not agreed upon that Subject; That ſome, with Tertullian and Lactantius, believed that they were formed with the Bodies; That others, as Origen, were of opinion, that they were created with the World, and that God infuſed them into Bodies; and Laſtly, That others affirmed that God both created and placed them in the Bodies at the ſame time; and ſo, not knowing which of theſe Opinions was the trueſt, he remitted the deciſion to God, not being able to be poſitive concerning any more than what the Church teaches, That God is the Creator of Souls and Bodies.

Having thus given an account of his Doctrine, he juſtifies himſelf of the Objections made againſt him for Tranſlating Origen's Books. He ſaith, that it is very plain, that it was Envy only that made them condemn that Undertaking; That if there is any thing diſpleaſing in the Author, the Tranſlator is not to be charged therewith, who has barely delivered the Sence of the Author. That he had prevented the inconveniency that might have happened, by ſtriking out the Errors which he conceived to have been added in Origen's Books; That he had given notice of it in his Preface; ſo that they were much to blame to accuſe and calumniate him upon that Subject: "For, ſaith he, when will Simplicity and Innocency be ſecured againſt Envy and "Slaundering, if they be not upon this occaſion? I neither juſtifie nor approve Origen, but I "Tranſlated him, and ſo did many others before me; I am the laſt, and that at the requeſt of "my friends. If ſuch a Tranſlation is not acceptable, be it ſo, I will Tranſlate no more. He concludes, by aſſuring the Pope, That he neither has, nor ever had any other Sentiments than theſe he hath now declared, and which are thoſe of the Church's of Rome, Alexandria and Aquileia; telling him withall, That ſuch as through Envy or Jealouſie againſt their Brethren, do occaſion Scandals and Diviſions, ſhall give an account at the Judgment-ſeat of God.

Ruſinus. The Expoſition of the Creed directed to Laurentius, which is found amongſt the Works of S. Cyprian, and of S. Jerom, is likewiſe Ruſinus's Work. Gennadius who was one of the moſt zealous Defenders of this Author, ſaith he hath done extremely well in this piece, and that all other Expoſitions of the Creed are not to be compared with it; and indeed it would be hard to find a more compleat Treatiſe upon the Creed than this.

He obſerves in the beginning, the difficulty of that Undertaking, becauſe it was very dangerous to ſpeak of Myſteries; That ſome famous Authors had already written, but very ſuccinctly upon that Subject: That Photinus had choſen that way to eſtabliſh his Hereſie: but his deſign was to expound the Creed with ſimplicity, by keeping to the very terms of the Scripture, ſo to ſupply what had been omitted by thoſe that writ before him. Then he declares, that the Apoſtles had Conference together to compoſe the Creed, before they divided, that ſo they might teach all whom they ſhould convert by the ſame common Creed; That it is called Symbolum, either becauſe it is the reſult of a Conference betwixt ſeveral Perſons, or becauſe it is the Mark of diſtinction, whereby Chriſtians are known. Afterwards he examines all the Articles, and obſerves the ſeveral ways of repeating them in different Churches. He clears their Sence in a very plain manner, and confirms it by the moſt oppoſite paſſages in the Holy Scripture. In explaining the Article of the Catholick Church, he gives a Catalogue of the Canonical Books, of the Old and New Teſtament, and admits into the Canon of the Old Teſtament, none but the Books owned by the Hebrews: But he ſays, That there are other Books read in Churches, which are not made uſe of to confirm Articles of Faith, and he calls them Eccleſiaſtical Books. Theſe Books in the Old Teſtament are; Wiſdom, Eccleſiaſticus, Tobit, Judith, the Maccabees, and in the New Teſtament, the Book of Hermas, and S. Peter's Judgment. He obſerves further upon the ſame Article, that there is but one Church: and in few words he condemns moſt of the Sects that have ſeparated from it; He enlarges much upon the laſt Article concerning the Reſurrection of the Body, obſerving again in this place, that the Church of Aquileia had added, of this Body, and that they made the ſign of the Croſs in the Concluſion of the Creed.

The Expoſition of Jacob's Bleſſing is the firſt Book that is Printed under Ruſinus's Name, in the Collection of his Works. This Treatiſe was written at Paulinus's requeſt; which made Iſidore to attribute it to Paulinus, tho' it be compoſed by Ruſinus, as Gennadius aſſures us: It is divided into two Books. In the firſt he explains Judah's Bleſſing, and in the ſecond, that of the reſt of Jacob's Children. He particularly keeps to the Hiſtorical Sence, without neglecting either the Myſtical or the Moral: He ſhews, That this Patriarch's Prophecies are fulfilled, either in the Church, or in the Jewiſh Tribes.

He follows the ſame method in his Commentaries upon the Prophets Hoſea, Joel and Amos. Theſe Commentaries are clear and neat: He expounds his Text after an elegant but natural way without intangling himſelf with Allegories, hard Queſtions, or long Digreſſions. He tells us in the Preface, That he had made ſome Commentaries upon Solomon's Books, and that he deſigned to do the like upon all the leſſer Prophets. He deſires the Reader to take Notice, That he made uſe of the laſt Tranſlation which is conformable to the Hebrew Text, but that he had but little help from other Men's Works in his Commentaries. " For, ſaith he, the Latins ſeem to have been " agreed to write nothing upon the Minor Prophets. Some Greek and Syrian Authors indeed " have endeavoured to expound their Prophecies; and I confeſs I have read upon thoſe Books " ſome Commentaries of S. John Biſhop of Conſtantinople; but, his Cuſtom was, he compoſed " them rather for Exhortations to his Auditors, than for Expoſitions of the Scripture Text. Ori- " gen after his peculiar way, entertained his Readers with delightful Allegories, but takes no pains " to give the Hiſtorical Sence; which is the only thing that is ſolid. S. Jerom, a Man of vaſt Parts, " and throughly learned, hath written Commentaries upon thoſe Prophets, but he ſo much inſiſt- " ed upon the Jewiſh Traditions, that he took no pains to find out the Sence of the Prophecies " by their Events. So that his Commentaries are wholly made up, either of Origen's Allegories, " or of Jewiſh Traditions. This is Ruſinus his Judgment of others; and it muſt be confeſſed, that he hath avoided what he reproves in the Commentaries of others, and that his is more uſeful for the underſtanding of the Hiſtorical Sence of the Prophecies. It is ſtrange that Gennadius ſhould make no mention of theſe Commentaries; but the Stile and the Circumſtances ſufficiently diſcover them to be compoſed by Ruſinus: Tho' ſome have doubted it.

We have only now to ſpeak of the Commentaries upon the Seventy five firſt Pſalms, which were Printed by themſelves at Lyons, in the Year 1570. but they cannot belong to Ruſinus, becauſe there are whole Periods taken out of S. Auguſtin's Commentaries upon the Pſalms (m), and out of S. Gregory's Morals. Gennadius ſpeaks of ſeveral Letters of Piety written by Ruſinus, among which he gives the firſt place to thoſe that are written to Proba, but they are not now extant.

(m) There are whole Periods taken out of S. Auguſtin's Commentaries upon the Pſalms.] This is particularly remarkable upon the 1ſt. Pſal. ver. 1. *Pſal.*3*d.ver.*1. *Pſal.*4*th. ver.*1. Upon the Ninth Pſalm there is a whole Period which beginneth, Prima perſecutio, taken almoſt word for word out of S. Auguſtin's Commentary upon the Third Pſalm. The Author ſays, That he lived in a time, when no Hereſies appeared, which ſhews that this is the Work of a new Compiler.

It muſt be acknowedged, That Rufinus, tho' very ill uſed by S. Jerom, was one of the ableſt Men of his time: Perhaps he had not ſo much Learning as S. Jerom, but his Temper was better and leſs violent. He doth not write ſo good Latin, but his Stile is more even. It cannot be denied, but that the Latin Church is obliged to him for the knowledge of the moſt conſiderable among the Greek Authors; and particularly of Church-Hiſtory. Tho' he was accuſed of divers Errors, yet he was convicted of none, and he juſtified himſelf ſufficiently of the reproachful Objections made againſt him. He defended Origen, but that was by rejecting the Errors Father'd upon him. The olny Thing he may be thought to have been guilty of, not upon the Score of his own Writings, but by the Teſtimony of the Authors that have ſpoken of him, is that he was Pelagius's Tutor. But perhaps the Diſciples Errors may have been imputed to the Maſter, tho' he never taught them. However it cannot be ſaid, That he divided from the Church upon that occaſion, or that theſe Errors were obſtinately maintained by him. And ſo, in my Opinion, it is very unjuſt for modern Writers, to blemiſh the Memory of him, and uſe him, as if he had been one of the greateſt Hereticks in the World. We ſhould not mind all the Accuſations wherewith S. Jerom loaded him in the heat of their Quarrel: but rather imitate the Modeſty of Pope Gelaſius, who gives him the Character of an Holy Man; Rufinus vir religioſus. Tho' he confeſſes, That S. Jerom was in the right when he reproved him, for what he ſaid concerning Man's Free-Will. Rufinus.

The Works of this Author have been collected into one Volume in Folio, and Printed at Paris by Sonnius in 1580. They forgot to inſert the two Invectives, and the Apology to Pope Anaſtaſius, with the letter concerning the falſifying of Origen's Books, which are in the laſt Volume of S. Jerom's Works. His Tranſlations are in the ancient Latin Editions of thoſe Greek Authors, which were made publick before new Tranſlations were made.

SOPHRONIUS.

"SOPHRONIUS a Man of great Erudition, ſays his Friend S. Jerom, in his Book of Famous "Men, writ when he was little more than a Child, the Praiſe of Bethlehem, and not long " ago compoſed an excellent Treatiſe of the ruin of Serapis: He tranſlated alſo into Greek, " my Treatiſe of Virginity to Euſtochium, and the Life of Hilarion the Hermit: He likewiſe tur- " ned into Greek the Latin Tranſlation of the Pſalms, and Prophets, which I made from the He- " brew Text. The Greek Tranſlation of the Book of Famous Men, is alſo attributed to him. There is another Sophronius Biſhop of Jeruſalem, who lived under the Emperor Heraclius about the year 636, to whom is aſcribed a ſmall Treatiſe of the Labours and Travels of S. Peter, and of S. Paul: It is a miſerable buſineſs not worth mentioning. Sophronius.

SEVERUS SULPICIUS.

SEVERUS SULPICIUS, (a) Prieſt of Agen (b), famous for the Nobility of his Extraction, the Fineneſs of his Parts, and the Holineſs of his Life, was eminent in the times of S. Jerom, and Rufinus, he was S. Martin's Diſciple, whoſe Life he writ; He was an intimate Friend of Paulinus Biſhop of Nola, to whom he writ ſeveral Letters. This Man ſpeaking of Severus's Converſion in one of his Letters, ſaith, That it was altogether extraordinary and miraculous; " Becauſe he had at once ſhaken off the Yoke of ſin, and broken the Bands of Fleſh and " Blood, in the flower of his Age; and at a time when he was famous at the Bar, when neither " Riches, nor a Licence to enjoy Pleaſures after Marriage, nor his Youth could turn him out of " the Way of Vertue, to ingage in the broad and eaſie Path of worldly Men: That he deſpiſed " Wealth and Glory to follow Jeſus Chriſt, and preferred the preaching of Fiſher-men, before Severus Sulpicius.

(a) Severus Sulpicius.] Gennadius ſaith, That Sulpicius was his Sirname; and S. Gregory of Tours, lib. de vit. S. Mart. c. 1. & l. 10. Hiſt. Franc. c. 31. calleth him as we do Severus Sulpicius: but in his Letters he calls himſelf Sulpicius Severus. But ſometimes the Sirname is put before the Proper name. Moſt of the Ancients call him only Sulpicius. [Sulpicius was the Name of his Family; the Emperor Galba was of the Sulpician Family: Severus was his cognomen, as Cicero to Tully, and Criſpus to Salluſt; ſo that in Strictneſs his Name is Sulpicius Severus, not Severus Sulpicius; his Prænomen, which went always firſt, is not known: In Gennadius's time, the Roman way of naming Perſons was almoſt wholly out of uſe, excepting ſome few of the Deſcendants of the Old Roman Families; and therefore one is not ſtrictly to take thoſe words Cognomento Sulpicius, as if Severus were the Name of the Family and not Sulpicius.

(b) Prieſt of Agen.] He ſaith in the firſt Dialogue c. 20. that he was of Aquitain, and in his Hiſtory l. 2. He calleth Phœbadius Biſhop of Agen his Biſhop. They were miſtaken who confounded him with one Sulpicius Biſhop of Bourges, who lived above 190 years afterwards under King Gontran: all the Ancients allow to this Sulpicius no other Quality, beſides that of Prieſt.]

" all

Severus Sulpicius.

" all the pieces of Ciceronian Eloquence, and all the Books of fine Learning: However, he ſhew-
" ed his Eloquence in the Writings which he compoſed after his Converſion.

The chief of theſe Works is his Sacred Hiſtory divided into two Books, which contains an Abridgment of what remarkable things happened in the Hiſtory of the Jews, and of the Church, from the Creation of the World, to the Conſulſhip of Stilico, and Aurelianus, that is, to the Year of Jeſus Chriſt 400, written with great Skill. He wrote alſo S. Martin's Life, three Letters concerning the Death, and Vertues of that Saint, and three Dialogues betwixt Gallus and Poſthumianus, whereof the firſt is concerning the Miracles of the Eaſtern Monks, and the two others about S. Martin's Vertues. Gennadius ſaith, That he writ ſome pious Letters beſides to his Siſter, two Letters to S. Paulinus, that were common in his time, not to ſpeak of ſeveral others, which were not publiſhed becauſe they were intermixt with Domeſtick Affairs. F. Dachery in the Fifth Volume of his Spicilegium, hath publiſhed us five Letters of Severus Sulpicius to his Siſter, and Baluzius hath likewiſe publiſhed two in the Firſt Volume of his Miſcellanea. The others are not yet publiſhed.

Gennadius affirms, That Sulpicius Severus towards the latter end of his Life, was ſurprized by the Pelagians, but that afterwards having acknowledged the Error, which he was fallen into, by too great a deſire of ſpeaking, he kept Silence all the reſt of his days, that he might repair his Fault. Guibertus Abbot of Gemblours, ſeems to queſtion the matter of Fact. But Gennadius his Teſtimony is not to be queſtioned in ſuch a matter: Sulpicius Severus lived till towards the Year 420.

This Author is eloquent, his Writings are pure and poliſhed, he writ with great Brevity, and great Clearneſs, wherein he excelled Salluſt whom he imitated. His is the beſt written Hiſtorical Abridgment that we have, and yet he is not very exact, but commits Faults againſt the truth of Hiſtory, eſpecially of the Eccleſiaſtical. He is very credulous of Miracles, and approves the Dreams of the Ancients about the Reign of a Thouſand years, about Anti-Chriſt, whom he thought to be Nero, about the time of the World's end, and about the Sons of Men that had to do with the Women. He paſſes over the Church Hiſtory from Jeſus Chriſt, to the Fourth Century, very lightly; he ſaith very little of the Arians, but he inlargeth much upon the Priſcillianiſts, and from him we learn more of them than from all the Authors beſides.

The Life of S. Martin is written with the ſame Purity as his Hiſtory; but in a more diffuſe and agreeable manner. The Dialogues are compoſed with ſo much Art and Exactneſs, that one can never be weary of reading them, and particularly the firſt, where Poſthumianus relates ſeveral particulars of the Eaſtern Monks. He ſpeaks there of the Troubles that were in Egypt, and Paleſtine, about Origen's Books, and makes a moſt wiſe and moderate Judgment of them, and tho' he does not wholly excuſe Origen; Yet he does not approve of that Severity, which the Biſhop of Alexandria exerciſed againſt thoſe that defended him. He bewails the misfortune of the Church to be diſturbed with things of ſo ſmall Importance. He commends S. Jerom without entirely applauding his Conduct. He quotes a Jeſt of a good Prieſt of the Coaſt of Africa, who refuſed to take Money offered him by Poſthumianus, ſaying, That Gold did rather deſtroy the Church than edifie it.

The Works of Sulpicius Severus, which Lazius had publiſhed full of Faults, were reviſed and corrected by Giſelinus, who Printed them with his own Notes, and with Galeſinius's at Antwerp, in the Year 1574. Sigonius made a new Edition of them with new Notes, Printed at Bononia in 1581, and at Francfort in 1593. The Hiſtory was printed with Druſius's at Franker in 1607. There is an Edition by Elzevir at Amſterdam in 1635. And we have him entire with the Notes of ſeveral learned Men, Printed at Amſterdam, by Hornius his care in 1647, and 1654. Theſe are the principal Editions of Sulpicius Severus, to ſay nothing of the Collections, into which his Works have been inſerted.

In ſpeaking of Sulpicius Severus who writ S. Martin's Life, it is worth obſerving that a Creed is aſcribed to this Saint, but it is very uncertain, whether he be the Author of it, tho' it is very ancient.

S. PAULI-

Saint PAULINUS.

SAint PAULINUS, called alſo Pontius, and Meropius, deſcended from an illuſtrious Family of Roman Senators, was born at Bourdeaux about the Year 453. He was directed in his Studies by the famous Auſonius; he ſtudied with ſo much Aſſiduity the beſt of the Latin Authors, that he got a ſtile very like theirs. He advanced afterwards to the moſt conſiderable Offices of the Empire. Auſonius ſays that Paulinus was Conſul along with him, but his Name being not found in the Faſti conſulares, it is probable that he obtained that Dignity only in the Room of ſome other Perſon, who died in the Office, and perhaps in the Year 378, after the Death of Valens. He married Therafia a rich Woman, by whom he got a great Eſtate, The Happineſs that a Perſon ſo powerful and rich as he was, might have enjoyed, was much diſturbed by abundance of Buſineſſes, which made him recollect himſelf, and reſolve to be converted. and to retire into Spain with his Wife Therafia, who had contributed much to make him take this Reſolution. He was baptized by Delphinus Biſhop of Bourdeaux ſome time before his retreat, in the Year 389. He dwelt Four years in Spain, where he embraced voluntary Poverty, ſelling his Goods by degrees to give them to the Poor. The Inhabitants of Barcelona, where he dwelt conceived ſuch Eſteem for him, that they cauſed him to be ordained Prieſt upon Chriſtmas-day, tho' he thought not of it. S. Paulinus perceiving that he could not overcome the People's Reſolution, after a long reſiſtance, yielded to be ordained, upon condition that he ſhould not be obliged to remain in Barcelona, becauſe his Deſign was to withdraw to Nola. This Ordination was performed in 393, and the next Year, he left Spain to go into Italy. In his way he ſaw S. Ambroſe at Florence, who ſhewed him ſome Marks of Reſpect: at Rome he was kindly received both by Perſons of Quality, and by the People: but Pope Siricius, and the Clergy were jealous of him, which made him leave that Town quickly, and repair to Nola, where he dwelt in a Countrey houſe half a League from the Town; having lived there Sixteen years with his Wife Therafia, in the Study and Exercites of a Monaſtical Life, he was choſen and ordained Biſhop of Nola in 409. The beginning of his Promotion was diſturbed by the Incurſions of the Goths, who took the City of Nola; this Aſſault being over, he enjoy'd his Biſhoprick peaceably to his dying day, in the Year 431. We read in S. Gregory's Dialogues, that he yielded himſelf to be a Captive in Africa voluntarily, to deliver a Widow's Son that was taken by the Vandals: but this Action which did not agree, either with the Circumſtances, or the time of S. Paulinus's Life, is looked upon by the Learned as a Fable, as ſeveral others are, which may be found in S. Gregory's Dialogues. Paulinus.

There was a new Edition lately made of this Father's Poems and Letters, wherein they are ſet very exactly in a Chronological Order.

The firſt Letter is written by Paulinus to Sulpicius Severus, ſometime after he was ordained a Prieſt; there he exhorteth Sulpicius Severus to continue in that ſort of Life, which he had embraced, without being diſturbed at the Diſcourſes of the Men of the World that blamed him. He invites him to come to him at Barcelona, and acquaints him after what manner he was ordained Prieſt. " Upon Chriſtmas-day, ſaith he, the People obliged me to receive the Order of " Prieſthood, againſt my Will: not that I have any Averſion to that Dignity; on the contrary, " I could wiſh to have began at the Porter's order to come into the Clergy: but as my Deſign " looked another way, ſo I was ſurprized and eſtabliſhed at that new Order of the Divine Pro- " vidence. I ſubmitted my ſelf to Chriſt's Yoke, and am now engaged in a Miniſtery beyond " my Merit and my Strength..... I can hardly yet comprehend the heavy weight of that Dig- " nity: I tremble when I conſider the Importance of that Office, being conſcious to my ſelf of my " own weakneſs: but he that giveth Wiſdom to the Simple, and cauſeth ſucking Babes to ſing " his Praiſes, is able to accompliſh his work in me, to give me his Grace, and make me wor- " thy, whom he has called when I was unworthy. He addeth, That he took Orders upon this condition, that he ſhould not be tyed to the Church of Barcelona, ſo that he conſecrated himſelf to the Holy Miniſtery, without being bound to the Service of any particular Church. He invites him at laſt not to put off his Journey, but to come to him before Eaſter.

The Second Letter to Amandus a Prieſt, afterwards Biſhop of Bourdeaux is written likewiſe concerning that Ordination, at the ſame time with the firſt. He intreats him to give him Advice and neceſſary Inſtructions, for the worthy diſcharging of his Miniſtery.

The Third to Alypius Biſhop in Africa, was written immediately after his Arrival at Nola, in the Autumn of the Year 394. He commends there S. Auguſtin's Books which Alypius had ſent him; he ſends him Euſebius his Chronicon, and tells him, That he was very deſirous to know the particulars of his Life: and at the latter end of the Letter, he ſays, That he ſent him a Loaf as a Token of their Union, and a Figure of the Trinity, adding, That he ſhall make an Eulogy, of that Bread when he receives it, that is, That in receiving it he ſhall bleſs it, as he ſays in the following Letter to S. Auguſtin. It was the Cuſtom of that time, eſpecially with S. Paulinus thus to ſend Bread as a mark of Union: See the 1ſt. 4th. 45th. and 46th. Letters. S. Auguſtin in the 34th. Letter ſpeaks likewiſe of a Loaf, which he ſent to Paulinus, and makes uſe of the ſame

Paulinus. expreſſion; The Bread, ſaith he, which we ſend unto you, ſhall be made a ſubject of Bleſſing, by the Charity wherewith you ſhall receive it. UBERIOR BENEDICTIO FIET DILECTIONE ACCIPIENTIS VESTRÆ BENIGNITATIS.

The Fourth is written to S. Auguſtin; he commends his Five Books againſt the Manichees which Alypius had ſent him: It is full of Expreſſions, to ſhew how greatly he eſteemed S. Auguſtin, of whom he craves advice for his Behaviour: both theſe Letters were written in Autumn, in the Year 394, as appears by the Sixth. S. Auguſtin anſwers this laſt by the 27th. Letter of the laſt Edition, which is there in the Italick Letter.

S. Paulinus's Fifth Letter is directed to Sulpicius Severus, wherein he returns him Thanks for the Teſtimonies of Love that he had received from him: He exalts his Converſion; and comparing it with his own, ſhews that it was more ſurprizing and wonderfull. There he alſo ſpeaks of his Diſtemper, and of the Envy which the Roman Clergy bore to all men, of any Reputation either for their Holineſs or their Piety: and alledgeth this as a Reaſon of his withdrawing far from Rome; He oppoſes Pope Siricius his proud Behaviour towards him, Papæ urbici ſuperba duritia, to that Charity wherewith both the Biſhops and Clergy of Campania, had entertained him by their frequent Viſits, and to that of the African Biſhops, who had ſent on purpoſe to know how he did.

The Sixth Letter is written to S. Auguſtin in the Year 395, wherein he expreſſeth how impatient he was to receive ſome Letters from him.

The following Letter is an Anſwer of S. Auguſtin's which is the Thirty firſt of his Letters, written in 396. He ſends Paulinus word of his Promotion to be a Biſhop.

Paulinus having received this Letter, acquaints Romanianus by the Seventh, with his great joy for that News.

In the Eighth he exhorteth Licentius Romanianus his Son, in Proſe and in Verſe, to leave the World and give himſelf to God. Theſe Letters are of the Year 396.

In the Eleventh of the following Year, as is ſuppoſed, he urges Severus Sulpicius to come to ſee him.

The Twelfth to Amandus is one of the moſt excellent of all S. Paulinus his Letters. There he very elegantly explains the Degrees of Man's Fall, and of the Redemption by Jeſus Chriſt, obſerving that God had preſerved Holineſs in the poſterity of Seth; that in the time of the Flood, The Spirit of Holineſs reſted in one only righteous Man, who was then the Redeemer of Mankind, and a Type of the Redemption through Chriſt: That after the Flood men returning to Corruption, God choſe Abraham to be the Father of the Faithful, of whom ſhould come the everlaſting King, and that at laſt all mankind being ſo corrupted with Vice, that hardly any Remedy could be hoped for; the ſame Lord who formed Man, came to reſtore him by the ſame power by which he had created him: That he made himſelf Man to be a Mediator betwixt God and Men: That he was humble, and had choſen the vile things in this World to confound the Proud, the Learned and the mighty things of the Age: And at laſt he died and roſe again, to deſtroy Death in us, and reſtore Immortality. Theſe are the main Points explained very exactly by S. Paulinus in that Letter. At the latter end he takes notice that there is both Humility, and a laudable Pride. That Pride, ſaith he, is to be approved, which makes us deſpiſe the World, and neglect whatſoever ſeemeth great, handſome and pleaſing to the Eyes of Men, apply our ſelves only to heavenly things, and ſtoop to nothing but God's Commandments, &c. on the other ſide, That that Humility is to be condemned, which hath not Faith for its Foundation, but only ſuch a Littleneſs of mind as ſerves for lying, and is an Enemy to truth, which makes us looſe our Liberty, and become the Slaves of Vice; which mingles Wine with Water, That is, to ſay, which weakens the pure truth, by a baſe Complaceny. MENDACII FAMULA VERITATIS INIMICA MISCENS AQUA VINUM, ID EST, VERITATIS MERUM AQUOSO ADULATIONIS ENERVANS.

The Thirteenth is a Letter of Conſolation to Pammachius upon the Death of Paulina his Wife in 397, wherein having exhorted him to ſtop his Tears, and moderate his Sorrow, he commends his great Charity to the poor of the City of Rome.

In the Fourteenth and Fifteenth to Delphinus, and Amandus, S. Paulinus teſtifies his joy for Delphinus's Recovery, who had been dangerouſly Sick, giving him thanks for the Service he had done to Baſilius the Prieſt. In the firſt upon occaſion of Delphinus his Sickneſs, he ſaith, That the Afflictions of the Righteous are profitable. 1. For the Exerciſe of their Vertue, 2. To keep them from Pride. 3. To imprint in them the fear of God's Juſtice, which will grievouſly puniſh the Impious, ſince it deals ſo ſeverely with the Righteous.

The Sixteenth Letter to Jovius, is an excellent Diſcourſe of Providence. It is placed in 399.

In the Seventeenth to Severus Sulpicius, he complains that he came not to ſee him, neither met him at Rome, whither he was gone to celebrate the Feaſt of the Apoſtles S. Peter, and S. Paul; He exhorts him to come into that Countrey, to Honour S. Fœlix the Martyr. This Letter was written by S. Paulinus at the latter end of the Year 399, after a Recovery from Sickneſs.

The Eighteenth is written to Victricius Biſhop of Roüen, he ſent it by Paſchaſius his Deacon whom he found at Rome, and had brought to Nola. Having excuſed himſelf for detaining him ſo long, he makes a Panegyrick upon Victricius, deſcribing the Torments which he had ſuffered for the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt. This Letter is of the ſame Date with the foregoing.

The Three following to Delphinus Biſhop of Bourdeaux, were ſent in the Year 400, by Cardamas an Exorciſt, who came to viſit him from that Biſhop. In

In the Firſt, he ſhows his gratitude for the Love which that Biſhop had for him: He owns himſelf to be one of that Biſhop's planting, praying him that he would cultivate the ſame Plant by his Prayers, and water it with his Counſels. In the Second, he gives him Notice of the Tokens of love and reſpect that had been ſhewed him by Anaſtaſius Biſhop of Rome, and Veneris Biſhop of Milan. At laſt having commended Cardamas, he expounds the beginning of S. John's Goſpel. Paulinus.

In the Twenty ſecond to Severus, He deſcribeth the Luxury, and Effeminateneſs of the Men of the World, and exalteth the Frugality of the Monks, in very elegant and proper words.

Here is a very pleaſant Letter from Severus to Paulinus, wherein he recommends a Cook to him, affirming that he was very fit for him, knowing exactly well how to dreſs a Diſh of Beans, and Lettices, and one that would deſtroy as many Pot-Herbs as any Man he ever ſaw.

S. Paulinus made this Cook called Victor welcome, being ſo highly commended, and Paulinus was ſo well pleaſed with him, that he makes his Panegyrick in the Twenty third Letter commending him, becauſe he cut his Hair perfectly well. He ſpeaks of the uſe of Hair, and from thence takes opportunity to give an Allegorical expoſition of the Hiſtories of Sampſon and Mary Magdalen.

Sulpicius Severus had written S. Paulinus a Letter wherein he commended that Saint, for diſtributing his Eſtate to the Poor. S. Paulinus anſwers him, That it is but a ſmall thing to renounce this World's wealth, except one alſo denies himſelf; and that a Man may quit the Goods of this World heartily, without parting with them altogether. He treateth afterwards of the Conditions of Evangelical poverty, and the dangers and temptations that attend a Spiritual life. Both theſe Letters are ſuppoſed to have been written about the latter end of the Year 400.

The Twenty fifth Letter is addreſſed to a Perſon of Quality, whom he exhorts to quit the World, and adviſes him not to deferr his Converſion.

In the Twenty ſixth Letter he praiſes a Monk named Sebaſtian, and a Deacon named Benedictus, upon their having worthily diſcharged their Duties. Theſe two Letters are in the Ninth Tome of S. Jerom's Works, among thoſe falſely attributed to him. They ſeem to have been written in the Year 401.

The Twenty ſeventh Letter to Severus Sulpicius contains nothing conſiderable.

The Twenty eighth directed to the ſame, is ſomething more uſefull; there are ſeveral paſſages of Scripture applied to Jeſus Chriſt with much wit and dexterity. He writes, that he ſent to him by Victor, (whom he commends again in this place,) his Panegyrick of Theodoſius the Emperor, and his Verſes in commendation of S. Felix the Martyr: Both theſe Letters are believed to be of the Year 401.

By the Twenty ninth, he thanks Severus for a Suit of Camel's Hair which he had ſent him; judging, that he thereby intended to let him underſtand the need he had of Penance, and that in exchange he ſent him a Suit of Lamb's Wool which Melania had given him; whereupon he takes occaſion to commend that famous Widow, who lately paſſed through Nola. If this Letter was written in the ſame Year that Melania returned from Jeruſalem, as he that writ the Notes upon it ſuppoſes, then it is of the Year 397, and not of 402, as he affirms: But there is no proof that it is of the ſame Year.

Sulpicius Severus had deſired to have S. Paulinus's Picture. The Saint refuſes to give it, and calls his Requeſt a piece of Folly: And this puts him upon diſcourſing in the Thirtieth Letter of the inward and the outward Man; it is thought to be of 402. There he draws a wonderfull Picture of Man's Heart; this is one excellent paſſage of it, much admired of S. Auguſtin in his 186th. Epiſtle. How ſhould I dare give you my Picture, that am altogether like the Earthly Man, and by my Actions repreſent the Carnal Man? Shame preſſeth me on every ſide. I am aſhamed to have my Picture drawn as I am, and I dare not have it made otherwiſe. I hate what I am, and I am not what I would be. But what will it avail me, wretched Man, to hate Vice, and love Vertue, ſince I am what I hate, and my lazineſs hinders me from endeavouring to doe what I love? I find my ſelf at variance with my ſelf, and am torn by an inteſtine War. The Fleſh fights againſt the Spirit, and the Spirit againſt the Fleſh. The Law of the Body oppoſes the Law of the Spirit. Woe is me, becauſe I have not taken away the taſte of the poiſoned Tree, by that of the ſaving Croſs. The poiſon communicated to all Men from our firſt Parent by his Sin, abideth yet in me.

About the ſame time Severus asked S. Paulinus to ſend him ſome Aſhes of the Martyrs, to conſecrate a Church: S. Paulinus having none, ſent him a Bit of the true Croſs, which Melania had brought from Jeruſalem, with a Deſign to ſend it to Baſſula, Severus his Mother-in-Law. This precious Relick was locked up in a Golden Box. Upon Occaſion of this Preſent, he writes the Hiſtory of the Invention of the Holy Croſs. He ſays that Adrianus the Emperor cauſed a Temple to Jupiter to be built in the place where Chriſt ſuffered, and one to Adonis in Bethlehem to blot out the Memory, both of Chriſt's Birth and Paſſion: That theſe Temples ſtood till the time of Conſtantine: That the Empreſs Helena deſtroyed the Temples and Idols of falſe Deities, and erected Churches in thoſe places; and that in one of them the Prints of Chriſt's Feet when he aſcended up to Heaven were viſible upon the Sand. That after this the Empreſs, deſirous to find out where the Croſs of Chriſt lay, ſent for Chriſtians and Jews, to learn of them the Place where it might have been hid, and that when ſhe was ſhewed the Place, ſhe cauſed the Ground to be opened, and contrary to all mens Expectation, having dug deep, Paulinus. deep, they found three Croſſes planted in the Ground, as formerly; that the Joy of finding what they ſought after, was much abated by the Difficulty of Diſcovering which of the three was the Croſs of Chriſt, but that in this uncertainty it came into the Empreſs's Mind to bring thither a dead Corps; being perſwaded that Jeſus Chriſt would manifeſt by the Reſurrection of that Man which of theſe three Croſſes was his. The thing being immediately done, the Body which had been laid upon the two others (of the Thieves) to no purpoſe, returned to Life, as ſoon as the Croſs of Chriſt touched him. He adds, That this Croſs does not diminiſh, though Chips are conſtantly cut off from it.

In the Thirty ſecond Letter to Severus, there are Verſes concerning a Picture which Severus Sulpicius had placed in a Church of his own Building, which repreſented S. Martin and S. Paulinus. The latter out of Humility ſaith, that S. Martin repreſented innocent Perſons; but he repreſented Sinners. He likewiſe makes a Deſcription in Verſe, of the Church which he was building at Nola; and writ Inſcriptions for both Churches. Here is a Deſcription of the Churches that were built at that time. Both theſe Letters are of the year 403. or thereabouts.

The following Letter to Alethius, hath nothing worth taking Notice of: but they have joined with it a Treatiſe directed to the ſame Alethius, which is one of the moſt Excellent Pieces in Antiquity, concerning Almſdeeds. It is intituled, of Eccleſiaſtical Treaſure; becauſe he ſhews there, that the greateſt Treaſure that a Man can get, and the beſt Gain that he can make, is to give Alms: It is Lending to God, who payeth great Uſe for it, and who gave Wealth to the Rich upon no other Account than that they might communicate to the Poor; as he hath made the Poor and Deſtitute, that the Rich might not want Opportunity of exerciſing Mercy and Charity. This ſmall Treatiſe is full of ſuch Notions about the Excellency and Neceſſity of Alms. It is believed that this Treatiſe was ſent to Alethius, by Victor, with the foregoing Letter in 403.

In the Thirty fifth, and Thirty ſixth Letters to Delphinus and Amandus, he recommends to their Prayers the Soul of his Brother, whom he had formerly baptized, deſiring them not to forget it. Delphinus being dead in 404. as appears by S. Paulinus's Twenty ſeventh Poem. The Date of this Letter cannot be ſet backwarder.

Victricius Biſhop of Rouen, having been at Rome, and Paulinus not being able to ſee him, this Saint writ him the Thirty ſeventh Letter to tell him that his Sins muſt needs have been the Cauſe of his being deprived of that Happineſs; and there commends the Faith and Watchfulneſs of that Biſhop: This Letter was written after Victricius's Journey into Italy, in the Year 404.

In the Thirty eighth to Aper, S. Paulinus exalts that Man's Converſion, exhorting him to rejoice rather than be ſad, becauſe the World hates and deſpiſes that ſort of Life which he had embraced; charging him to ſerve God with the ſame Zeal that he had ſerved the World. This Letter is ſuppoſed to be of the Year 404.

Aper and his Wife Amanda having declared to S. Paulinus, that they were obliged to take care of their Eſtate, becauſe of the Lands belonging to their Children; he anſwereth them, that they ought to be perſwaded that the Divine Providence had left them that Care for the Exerciſe of their Vertue. He ſaith further, that a man may advance towards Perfection by the Exerciſe of Country-Buſineſs, and learn to improve his Soul by the manner of tilling Ground. Here one may find an excellent Compariſon of Agriculture, with the ſpiritual Life, and an ingenious Allegory upon thoſe four kinds of Beaſts that eat up the Fruits of the Earth, ſpoken of by the Prophet Joel, which he applies to paſſions of the Soul.

In the fortieth Letter S. Paulinus anſwereth very modeſtly to the Letter ſent him by Sanctus and Amandus; he treateth there of the great need he had to bewail his Sins, and applies to this Subject what is in the Hundred and firſt Pſalm, concerning the Pelican, the Owl, and the Sparrow.

The Forty firſt, to Sanctus, is a Treatiſe of Chriſtian Watchfulneſs, upon the Parable of the Ten Virgins.

In the Forty ſecond, to Florentius Biſhop of Cahors, he thanketh this Biſhop for the Honour he had done him in writing to him, aſſuring him of his Friendſhip; he commendeth him and deſireth his Prayers. That Letter is full of Noble Expreſſions, to extol the Dignity and Merits of Jeſus Chriſt. Jeſus Chriſt, ſaith he, is that Rock containing that Spring of living Water, which we happily find not far from us, when we are very thirſty in this World: This is it that refreſhes us, and keeps us from being conſumed by the Heat of Luſt. This is the Rock upon which ſtandeth that Houſe that ſhall never fall. This is the Rock which having been opened at the Side caſt out Water and Blood, to make us taſte of two wholſome Fountains, the Water of Grace, and the Blood of the Sacrament, which proves at the ſame time both the Spring and the Price of our Salvation. Theſe laſt Letters are of the year 405.

The Forty third is written to Deſiderius, who deſired an Expoſition of the Benedictions of the Patriarchs; he anſwers him, that he is better able to expound them himſelf, than he, of whom he deſireth the Expoſition. He only gives by the bye, an Explication of the Parable of the Withered Fig-Tree. He ſent this Letter in 406. by Victor, lately recovered of a long and dangerous ſickneſs. He gave him likewiſe two Notes which he had written long before, with a Letter to Severus, not now extant. Deſiderius his Requeſt gave him Occaſion to require it of Rufinus, who gave him that Satisfaction. The Letters he writ upon that Subject are among Rufinus's Works, and among these the Forty sixth and Forty seventh, were written in 408. Paulinus.

In the Forty fourth he admires the Spirit of Onction and Piety which he finds in Aper's Letters. Then he commends the Vertues of his Wife, and wishes that her Children may be well brought up.

In the Forty fifth, to S. Augustin, S. Paulinus returns him Thanks for the Book that Quintus had given him at Rome, as from him. Afterwards he commends Melania, then in Affliction for the Loss of her only Son: Upon Occasion of whose Death, he discourseth of the Felicity which the Saints shall enjoy after the Resurrection. He observes that all their Employment shall be then to praise God everlastingly, and to give him continual Thanks. This Letter was put into the hands of Quintus an African Deacon, who came into Italy in the Year 408. S. Paulinus's Letter is of the 20th of May following, as he observes in the Body of the Letter.

The Forty eighth Letter is a Fragment of an Epistle, quoted by S. Gregory of Tours, in which S. Paulinus opposes to the Disorders and Impieties of the Age, the Sanctity and Religion of some Bishops, as of Exuperius of Tolouse, of Simplicius of Vienna, of Amandus of Bourdeaux, of Diogenianus of Albi, of Dynamius of Angoulesme, of Verecundus of Clermont, of Alethius of Cahors, and of Pegasius of Perigueux. Since those times there have been some Ages wherein the Manners of the Laity might have been opposed to the Disorders of Churchmen.

The Forty ninth Letter to Macarius contains the History of a Pilot Catechumen, who happening to be alone in a Ship loaded with Corn, which a Storm had blown off of the Port of Sardinia, was saved Miraculously by S. Fœlix the Martyr's Protection: and having been several days at Sea, at last came safe to Land upon the Coasts of Abruzzo. This Letter may be called S. Paulinus's Master-piece. It were difficult to make a more agreeable Description, and a more natural Draught, than this which he makes, of all the Circumstances of that Story. He concludes from thence, that undoubtedly the Saints succour us in time of need. He was a Bishop when he writ it; and so it could not be before the Year 410.

In the fiftieth to S. Augustin, S. Paulinus proposes to him several Difficulties upon several places of the Scripture, to which S. Augustin answereth by the hundred and forty ninth, written in 414. since S. Paulinus's Letter was written some time before. The Date of the fifty first to Eucherius is not known; for he was yet in the Monastery of Lerins, out of which he did not withdraw till 426. It is a Letter of Christian Compliments, such as are all those of S. Paulinus.

There remains only the Passion of S. Genesius, Martyr of Arles, which bears S. Paulinus his Name, and is sufficiently like his Style, though some have doubted whether he was the Author of it.

After these Letters are thirty two pieces of Poetry; fifteen of them are concerning S. Fœlix the Martyr, and the others upon different Subjects, upon which I need not inlarge.

We have not his Epitome, in Verse, of a Book of the History of the Kings, commended by Ausonius; nor his Panegyrick upon Theodosius the Emperor, spoken of in S. Jerom, ep. 13. in Cassiodorus l. 2. Instit. divin. in Gennadius and Trithemius, and mentioned by S. Paulinus in his twenty eighth Letter. We have lost likewise some of his Letters to his Friends, which are mentioned in those that we have, and all those which he writ to his Sister concerning the Contempt of the World, reckoned by Gennadius among this Father's Works. The same Author speaks likewise of a Treatise of Repentance, and of the Praise of Martyrs, which he affirms to be the chiefest of his Works, and an Office of the Sacrament. As to the Collection of Hymns mentioned likewise by him, that perhaps did not differ from the Hymns we have in honour of S. Fœlix. S. Augustin witnesseth in the thirty first Letter, that S. Paulinus was writing something against Pagans. S. Gregory of Tours citeth a Letter, not now extant, which mentions the Relicks of S. Gervasius and S. Protasius. Lastly, S. Paulinus tells us in his forty sixth Epistle, that he had translated some of the Works of S. Clemens Romanus. It is likely, that while he was Bishop he made some Sermons, but whether they were not collected, or whether they have been lost, certain it is that we have none of them.

The Letter to Marcella is written in S. Paulinus's Style, but it doth not well agree with the History of that famous Widow; for the Author of that Letter writes to her as to a person newly converted: whereas it is certain that she was converted long before S. Paulinus. It may be that the Lady to whom it is directed was another of the same Name.

The Letter to Celancia, attributed likewise to S. Paulinus, is of a Style not very different from his, yet not altogether the same, and he turns the Scripture after another manner. It is certainly of an ancient Author, who lived before Paganism was utterly destroyed, and after the Reign of Jovian.

The Poem, whereby the Author exhorts his Wife to consecrate her self to God, is more elegant and better written than those of S. Paulinus. It does not agree to him, because at the time when it was written, the West was all in a Confusion, that is, in the year 407. It was not necessary that he should exhort his Wife to be converted, and to lead a Christian Life, seeing she had lived so a long time. Four Manuscripts ascribe that Poem to Prosper.

Paulinus. The Poem, immediately following, is a Paraphraſe upon what S. Bernard hath written in honour of the Name of Jeſus, and ſo is far younger than S. Paulinus, though it ſeems to many to be ancient. It is not neceſſary to obſerve, that the Life of S. Ambroſe is written by another Paulinus.

The ſix Books of S. Martin's Life, aſcribed to S. Paulinus, cannot be his, becauſe in the ſecond he is cited as a third Perſon, and he that wrote them mentions Perpetuus, ſixth Biſhop of Tours after S. Martin, who was not ordained till towards the latter end of the fifth Century, long after the Death of S. Paulinus, Biſhop of Nola. There is in the Rules of Benedictus Anianenſis an Anſwer to this Queſtion; What ought to be the Monks Penance, which is attributed to Paulinus, but though it be Eloquent, yet it is not believed to have been written by the Biſhop of Nola.

The Writings of S. Paulinus are compoſed with a great deal of Art and Elegance, his way of ſpeaking is cloſe and clear, his Terms are pure and choice, his Diſcourſe ſententious and lively: He excites the Attention of his Readers and keeps them awake. He paſſes inſenſibly from one thing to another, all hangs well together, one Sentence depending upon the other, and the end of one Thought is the beginning of the next. S. Jerom adviſed him, upon his Converſion, to learn the holy Scripture and to make uſe of it. He made great uſe of that Counſel; for after that he made it ſo familiar to him, that in all his Diſcourſes he inſerts a vaſt Number of Paſſages of Scripture, and adapts them to his Subject, by giving them often a Sence very different from their natural one. They are as ſo many precious Stones, ſet in, and ſo curiouſly wrought that they raiſe the Diſcourſe and give it a new Luſtre. Yet it muſt be confeſſed that he doth it too often, and that his Alluſions and Allegories are ſometimes too far fetch'd. He turns things agreeably and finely: His Letters are pleaſant and cheerful, they move, and they divert, rather than inſtruct. It is hard to judge, ſaith S. Auguſtin, whether they have more Sweetneſs or Fire, more Fruitfulneſs or Light. They ſoften and give Heat at the ſame time, they ſtrengthen and mollify. Yet it muſt be owned that his Notions are not always ſolid and exact; and often pleaſe becauſe of a falſe Luſtre. He often plays with Words, and uſes ſeveral Childiſh Allegories. He is excellent in his Draughts and Deſcriptions. He doth not penetrate into Dogmatical Matters, nor carry points of Morality very far, but only points at them ſuperficially. All his Writings are ſhort, but they are many, and all carefully compoſed. Auſonius highly commends his Poems, yet can they not paſs for perfect in that kind, eſpecially thoſe which he made after his Converſion. He underſtood Greek but indifferently, and was very little converſant with Hiſtory or the Sciences. He was eſteemed, beloved, and careſſed by all the great Men of that Age, of what party ſoever they were, and he kept Correſpondency with them without falling out with any. We may ſay, with Cardinal Perron, that he was the Delight of his time. He led a retired and very frugal Life, yet without great Auſterity. He was the Admiration of his own Age by Reaſon of his voluntary Poverty, and his Beſtowing his great Eſtate upon the Poor.

He was very pious, and had a very tender Conſcience. One finds in all his Letters the Character of an humble, modeſt and meek Spirit, he was much affected with the Senſe of his own Weakneſs, and the Neceſſity of God's Help. He had much Devotion for the Saints, was inclinable to believe miraculous Stories, and to reverence Relicks.

The firſt Edition of this Author's Works was made at Paris by Badius in the year 1516. The ſecond was printed at Colen, by the Care of Gravius. After that they were inſerted into the Orthodoxographa, and the Bibliotheca Patrum. Roſweidus cauſed them to be printed at Antwerp in 1622. but at laſt there was an Edition of them in quarto at Paris. It is to be wiſhed, that the Bookſellers who printed it had taken as much care to have it upon good Paper and in a fair Character as he that took care of the Edition did to render it Correct and Uſeful. He hath divided it into two Volumes; in the former are the Letters and Poems, generally owned to belong to S. Paulinus, which are ſet down ſeparately according to the Order of Time. He hath reviſed and corrected the Letters and the Poems by ſeveral Manuſcripts. He hath added ſome new Letters, ſome he hath divided into two, and in ſome places he hath made one of two.

The ſecond Volume contains the doubtful Works, Notes upon the Epiſtles and Poems that are in the firſt Volume; the Teſtimones both of Ancient and Modern Authors concerning S. Paulinus, with a new Account of this Saint's Life, very large, and taken out of his own Writings: Seven Diſſertations, whereof the two firſt are to juſtify the Chronological Order, wherein he hath ſet the Letters and the Poems. The three following contain the Lives of Sulpicius Severus, Alethius, Victricius, and Aper, to whom S. Paulinus writ moſt of his Letters. The ſixth is concerning S. Paulinus his Works, which are either loſt or dubious, or ſuppoſititious. The laſt contains an Examination of the Hiſtory of S. Paulinus his Captivity. After this comes a Catalogue of various Readings, and ſeveral very uſeful Tables. There is a French Tranſlation of S. Paulinus, his Letters preparing, which will be uſeful and diverting.

PELAGIUS.

PELAGIUS.

Pelagius.

PELAGIUS, an English Monk, (a) Rufinus's Disciple, Head of the Heresy called by his Name, hath his place amongst Ecclesiastical Authors, because of some Books that he hath written, of which we have spoken already. His Treatises are a Commentary upon S. Paul's Epistles (b), attributed to S. Jerom (c). The Letter to Demetrias (d) and some others, in the last Volume of S. Jerom's Works. A Treatise concerning the power of Nature, refuted by S. Augustin in the Book of Nature and of Grace. Several Books about Free-Will; part whereof S. Augustin refuteth in the Book of the Grace of Jesus Christ; and a Confession of Faith, directed to Pope Innocent (e) which is in S. Jerom, in S. Augustin, and in the second Volume of Councils of the last Edition, pag. 1563. This Author's Style is dry, flat, and barren. He was not learned, but he was a Man of good Sence: His Reflections are short and judicious.

(a) Pelagius, an English Monk.] S. Augustin, Ep. 106. Marius Mercator, S. Prosper in his Chronicon, and in the Poem of ungrateful Men, call him Britonem, or Britannum. S. Augustin in several places gives him the Quality of Monk. He was of the Monastery of Bangor in England, not in Ireland. He began to publish his Error in Rome towards the latter end of the fourth Century, if Marius Mercator may be believed.

(b) A Commentary upon S. Paul's Epistles.] S. Augustin and Marius Mercator speak of his Commentaries, and the latter observes that he composed them before the taking of Rome, which happened in the year 410.

(c) Attributed to S. Jerom.] Some question whether this Commentary be the same which S. Augustin quoteth under Pelagius his Name. 1. Because that among S. Ambrose's Works there is also a Pelagian Commentary upon S. Paul's Epistles. 2. Because all the passages cited by S. Augustin out of Pelagius's Commentaries are not to be found there, or at least they are not there in the same Terms. The former of these two Reasons is very weak, it being possible that a Pelagian Author might write Commentaries upon S. Paul, different from Pelagius's. The second would be of some weight, if in that Commentary attributed to S. Jerom, there were not most of the passages quoted by S. Augustin. For in the first place, S. Augustin in the 16th chapter of Pelagius his Acts, saith, that that Heretick had expounded these Words of the 9th chapter of the Romans, Neque volentis, neque currentis est Dei, by saying that S. Paul spake thus by way of Interrogation, Voce interrogantis & redarguentis. This very Exposition, and these very Words are in the Commentary we are now speaking of. 2. S. Augustin, in the 3d Book of the Merits of Sins, ch. 12. saith, that Pelagius expounding that place of the 7th Chapter of the Epistle to the Corinthians, Sanctificatus est vir fidelis, observes that there were several Examples of believing Women who had converted their unbelieving Husbands. The same Remark is in this Commentary. 3. S. Augustin, in the same Book, chap. 4. saith, that Pelagius tells us upon these Words, Rom. 5. Quæ est forma futuri, that they may be understood several ways: the same thing is mentioned in this Commentary: But what puts the matter out of doubt, is that Marius Mercator in his Commentaries, cites a long Passage out of Pelagius's Commentaries, which is found intire in this. It is true that S. Augustin in the 3d Book of the Merits of Sins, chap. 2. produces an Argument against Original Sin which is not in this Commentary, and that he quotes in the 3d chap. a place taken notice of by Marius Mercator, which likewise is not in this Commentary ascribed to S. Jerom; but those places may possibly have been blotted out by some Catholicks.

(d) The Letter to Demetrias.] It is certainly Pelagius's. See what is said of it in the Account of S. Jerom.

(e) The Confession of Faith directed to Pope Innocent.] This Confession of Faith was delivered to Zosimus Successor to Innocent, who sent it to the African Bishops.

CELESTIUS.

COELESTIUS.

Cœleſtius.

COELESTIUS, Pelagius his Country-man and Diſciple (a), was guilty of the ſame Errors; yea, he carried them farther, and maintained them with greater Boldneſs. He was of a ſubtil and cunning Temper (b). He included his whole Doctrine in ſix propoſitions, which Hilary of Syracuſe ſent to S. Auguſtin, who refutes them in the Eighty ninth Epiſtle. They are related likewiſe by Marius Mercator; and were condemned in the Synod of Paleſtine where, Pelagius himſelf was conſtrained to Anathematize them. S. Auguſtin publiſhed, and withal anſwered eight Definitions, or Reaſonings of this Author. He preſented a kind of Confeſſion of Faith to Pope Zoſimus, out of which S. Auguſtin produces ſome Fragments in the fifth, ſixth, and twenty third Chapters of the ſecond Book of Grace, and Original Sin.

(a) Cœleſtius, Pelagius his Country-man and Diſciple.] S. Jerom ſays that he was of Scotland or Ireland; that he was a Diſciple of Pelagius, and afterwards Head of the Pelagians. Marius Mercator ſays that he was of a good Family, and born an Eunuch, and wanted no Learning.

(b) He was of a ſubtil and cunning Temper.] S. Jerom in his Letter to Cteſiphon obſerves that his Diſciples ſaid that he went over the Thorns of Logick. He profeſſeth to deſpiſe him much, and calleth him ignorant Calumniator, in his Preface upon Jeremy. But S. Auguſtin, in his Book to Boniface, Chap. 3. takes notice that he had a great deal of Wit.

NICEAS.

Niceas.

THE Account which Gennadius gives of this Author is this. " Niceas, Biſhop of ſome " Town in Romania, hath written after a plain and eaſy manner, ſix Books of Inſtructions " for thoſe that were preparing for Baptiſm. The Firſt is concerning the Diſpoſitions of Catechu- " mens, who deſired to be baptized. The Second of the Errors of the Gentiles. He obſerves that " in his time they put into the number of the Gods one Melchidius, a Houſe-keeper, becauſe of his " Liberality; and one Gadarius, a Peaſant, becauſe of his Strength. The Third Book is of Faith in " one only God. The Fourth is againſt Calculating of Nativities. The Fifth is concerning the " Creed. The Sixth concerning the Victim of the Paſchal Lamb. The ſame Author writ a " Letter to a Virgin that was fallen into Sin. Which Diſcourſe may ſerve for an Exhortation " to all thoſe that commit Sin. This Author lived about the beginning of the Fifth Century. And this is all that we know of him.

OLYMPIUS.

Olympius.

OLYMPIUS, a Biſhop, and a Spaniard by Birth, hath written a Doctrinal Treatiſe againſt thoſe that aſcribe Sin to Nature, and not to Free-will: Where he ſhows, That not by Nature, but by Diſobedience, Evil was mingled with our Nature. This Biſhop was preſent at the Council of Toledo in 405. S. Auguſtin commends him for a Man of great repute, in the Firſt Book againſt Julianus, Chap. 3d. and 7th. and he quoteth his Writings in the 2d. Chapter of the ſame Work.

BACHI-

BACHIARIUS.

" BACHIARIUS, a Christian Philosopher, saith Gennadius, who was desirous wholly to dis- Bachiarius.
" ingage himself from the World, and to fix his Thoughts entirely upon God; and there" fore often changed his Habitation that he might be the less in love with any. It is said that he
" writ several small Books. I have read but One, concerning Faith, directed to the Bishop of Rome,
" wherein he applauds himself for his way of living; affirming, That it was not the fear of Men, that " made him chuse a Pilgrim's life, but that he might imitate Abraham when he left his Country,
" and parted with his Kindred. There is in the Bibliotheca Patrum a Letter of this Author's directed to Bishop Januarius, written about a Monk, who had abused a Nun. The Bishop to whom he writes, would receive him no more, nor admit him to Penance: Bachiarius telleth him, that such Severity is contrary to the Scripture, and exhorteth the Monk to quit the Nun whom he had abused, and doe Penance. This is a learned Letter, and well written; there are many happy Applications of both the Ceremonies and the Histories of the Old Testament. Ivo Carnutensis, Epist. 64. mentions another Letter of this Author's upon Solomon's latter end.

SABBATIUS.

SABBATIUS, a Bishop in Gaul, at the request of a Virgin that was Consecrated to God, whose Name was Secunda, wrote a Book of Faith against Marcion, Valentinus, Aëtius, and Eunomius; wherein he demonstrates both by Reason and Testimonies of Holy Scripture, That there is but one only God who made Heaven and Earth out of nothing: He proves also that Jesus Christ was very Man, having had a real Body, subject to the same infirmities with our's, to the necessity of Eating and Drinking, to Weariness, Sorrow, Sufferings and Death. He opposes these Truths to the Errors of Marcion and Valentinus, who admitted two Principles, and affirmed that Jesus Christ had onely the Similitude of Flesh: He sheweth against Aëtius and Eunomius, That the Father and the Son are not two different Natures, nor two Divinities, but that they have but one and the same Essence; That the Son proceedeth from the Father, and yet is co-eternal with him. This is what Gennadius saith of this Author, whom he places among those who flourished in the beginning of the Fifth Century. Sabbatius.

ISAAC.

THis ISAAC is mentioned by none but Gennadius: He ranks him among the Authors that lived in the beginning of the Fifth Century, and says, that he writ a Book of the Trinity and the Incarnation; whose dark Reasonings and intricate Discourses show that he owned Three Persons in one and the same Divinity; yet so, as that each of them had something proper and peculiar, which the others had not: Viz. That it was peculiar to the Father to be without beginning, and to be the Original of the rest: That it was the Property of the Son to be begotten, and yet neither created nor posterior to him that begot him: And Lastly, That the Property of the Holy Ghost was, that though he was neither created nor begotten, yet he proceeded from another: And, as to the Incarnation, he wrote so, as that it appeared that he owned two Natures in one and the same Person. Sirmondus published this Book from a Manuscript in Pithœus's Library, which tells us that this Author had been a Jew; for this Treatise is intituled of Isaac's Faith, who had been a Jew. It contains those things whereof Gennadius hath made an Extract: There are very subtil Reasonings upon the Mysteries of the Trinity and of the Incarnation. Isaac.

PAULUS OROSIUS.

Paulus Oroſius.

PAULUS OROSIUS, a Spaniſh Prieſt of Tarracon, S. Auguſtin's Diſciple, flouriſhed under the Emperors Arcadius and Honorius.

S. Auguſtin ſent him into Paleſtine in the Year 415, to deſire S. Jerom's Opinion concerning the Original of the Soul: He brought from thence S. Steven's Relicks. The City of Rome having been taken in the Year 410, by Alaric, King of the Goths, the Heathens, willing to render the Chriſtians odious, accuſed them of being the cauſe of that misfortune, and of all the other calamities that oppreſſed the Roman Empire. To defend them againſt that reproach, Paulus Oroſius, at S. Auguſtin's requeſt, undertook to write the Hiſtory of the greateſt Events that occurred from Jeſus Chriſt to his own Time, to ſhow that great Calamities had happened from time to time in the World, and that the Roman Empire had never been ſo free as ſince the Nativity of Jeſus Chriſt. This Work is intituled Hormeſta in ſome Manuſcripts, and is cited under that Name by ſome Authors; the Original and Explication of which Title is very uncertain. It is a kind of Univerſal Hiſtory, divided into Seven Books, which may be of ſome uſe. It is not ill written, but not exact. It has many faults againſt Hiſtory and againſt Chronology. He had not read the Greek Hiſtorians, and eaſily credited whatſoever might help his Subject, without examining whether it was well atteſted or not.

This Author hath written beſides a ſmall Treatiſe, intituled, An Apology for Free-will againſt Pelagius, which was Printed with his Hiſtory in the Colen Edition of the Year 1582. By a miſtake they inſerted ſeveral Chapters of S. Auguſtin's Treatiſe of Nature and Grace, which were ſeparated by Andreas Schottus in his Edition of it, in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

There is alſo, among S. Auguſtin's Works, before the Treatiſe againſt the Priſcillianiſts and Origeniſts, a Letter of Oroſius to S. Auguſtin concerning theſe Hereticks.

Some, upon the credit of certain Manuſcripts, aſcribe to him a Commentary upon the Book of Canticles, which is amongſt Origen's Works, and a Treatiſe of Illuſtrious Men; but this was becauſe they put Oroſius's Name for Honorius's.

S. Auguſtin in his 166th. Letter, ſaith, That Oroſius had great livelineſs of ſpirit, a wonderfull facility of ſpeaking, and a fervent zeal. Vigil ingenio, promptus eloquio, flagrans ſtudio. His Style is cloſe, and his Language pure enough.

Oroſius's Hiſtory was Printed at Paris in 1506, by Petit. The Apology for Free-will was Printed by it ſelf at Louvain in 1558. The beſt Edition of both theſe Works, is that of Colen, of the Year 1582. The latter is found in the Bibliothecæ Patrum, and the former in the Collections of Hiſtorians.

LUCIANUS, AVITUS, EVODIUS, SEVERUS.

Lucianus, Avitus, Evodius, Severus.

THeſe four Authors are to be joyned with Oroſius, becauſe they writ concerning a particular Circumſtance of his Life, that related to the Relicks of S. Steven.

The Firſt is a Grecian Prieſt, one Lucianus, who writ an Hiſtory of the finding of S. Steven's Relicks: His Book was Tranſlated into Latin by Avitus, a Spaniſh Prieſt, Oroſius's friend, the Second of thoſe Authors we are now ſpeaking of. The Third is Evodius, Biſhop of Uzala, in Africa, One of the Five that writ to Innocent the Firſt, the 95th. Letter in S. Auguſtin; he wrote a ſmall Treatiſe concerning the Miracles of S. Steven's Relicks, which Oroſius had brought into the Weſt. He is likewiſe the Author of a ſmall Treatiſe of Faith, or the Unity of the Trinity, againſt the Manichees, which is in the Eighth Volume of S. Auguſtin's Works, as Sirmondus proves upon the credit of MSS. S. Auguſtin mentions Evodius's Book, touching S. Steven's Miracles, in the 8th. Chapt. l. 22. Of the City of God; and Sigebert placeth Evodius amongſt the Eccleſiaſtical Writers.

The laſt Author here named, is one Severus, a Biſhop of the Iſland Minorca, who wrote a Circular Letter of the Jew's Converſion in that Iſland; and of the Miracles wrought in that place, by S. Steven's Relicks, which Oroſius left there.

Lucianus's Book and Avitus's Letter, are printed by Surius upon the Third day of Auguſt.

Both theſe Books, attributed to Evodius, are none of his, ſince they doe not bear his Name as the Author, but only becauſe they are directed to him. Baronius publiſhed Severus's Letter from a MS. in the Vatican Library. Theſe Relations are ſo incredible, that were they not authorized by the Teſtimonies of S. Auguſtin and Gennadius, we ſhould ſcarce give any credit to them. They are all at the end of the Seventh Volume of the new Edition of S. Auguſtin.

MAR-

MARCELLUS MEMORIALIS.

THis Author wrote the Acts of the Conference held at Carthage, betwixt the Catholicks and the Donatiſts, in the Year 1411. Part of them were printed by Papirius Maſſonus, and printed with Optatus, and in the laſt Collection of the Councils; but Baluzius printed them more exactly in his new Collection of Councils. Marcellus Memorialis.

EUSEBIUS.

THis Euſebius is not much known. Gennadius doth not tell us whence he was, nor what he was; but only obſerves, that he writ a Treatiſe of the Myſtery of the Croſs, and of the Conſtancy which the Apoſtles, and particularly S. Peter, had, by virtue of the Croſs. He places this Author among thoſe that flouriſhed in the beginning of the Fifth Century. Euſebius.

URSINUS.

URSINUS the Monk wrote a Treatiſe againſt thoſe who affirm, That Hereticks are to be rebaptized; wherein he teacheth, That thoſe ought not to be baptized again, who were baptized in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt, or the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghoſt; though they that baptized them were in an error, becauſe it is enough to have been baptized either in the Name of Chriſt, or in the Name of the Trinity, to give a right to receive the Impoſition of hands from the Biſhop. This Treatiſe is among S. Cyprian's Works; I am apt to believe that the Author of it is more ancient, than to agree to this place. Urſinus.

MACARIUS.

GEnnadius mentions one Macarius a Monk, who writ a Treatiſe againſt Aſtrologers in Rome; Wherein, ſaith he, he ſought the help of the Scripture by the labours of thoſe of the Eaſt. This Macarius is he, probably, to whom Ruſinus addreſſes his Apology, and his Tranſlation of the Books of Origen's Principles; of whom S. Jerom ſaith in his Second Apology: Had you not returned from the Eaſt, this able Man would yet have been among the Aſtrologers. His Book is not extant. Macarius.

HELIODORUS.

HELIODORUS, a Prieſt of Antioch, wrote an excellent Book of Virginity, grounded upon Scripture-teſtimonies. Gennadius, Chap. 29. Heliodorus.

PAULUS.

" PAULUS, a Biſhop (ſaith the ſame Gennadius, Chap. 31.) wrote a ſmall Treatiſe of Repentance; wherein he maintains, That Sinners are not ſo to afflict themſelves for their Sins, " as to fall into deſpair. Paulus.

HELVI-

HELVIDIUS and VIGILANTIUS.

Helvidius and Vigilantius.

HEre are two Hereticks refuted by S. Jerom, reckoned by Gennadius amongſt the Eccleſiaſtical Writers. Helvidius, ſaith he, Chap. 32. Auxentius his Diſciple, an imitator of Symmachus, writ a Book that ſhows ſome Zeal for Religion, but an indiſcreet one: His Style and Arguments are very intricate. He cites ſeveral paſſages of Scripture, whence he concludes, That the Virgin Mary having brought forth Jeſus Chriſt, had other Children by Joſeph, that were called the Lord's brethren. S. Jerom confuted that Error, and writ a Treatiſe full of Teſtimonies out of the Scriptures againſt this Author.

Vigilantius, a Prieſt, Originally of Gaul, a Pariſh-prieſt, in the Dioceſs of Barcelona in Spain, hath written likewiſe ſome Treatiſes, whereby he ſhows his Zeal for Religion; but he was deceived with Ambition, and an Opinion of himſelf, becauſe he had a fine Style. Not being well verſed in the Scriptures, he made a very bad Expoſition of Daniel's Viſions, publiſhing ſeveral impertinent things, wherefore he is numbred amongſt Hereticks. S. Jerom anſwered him likewiſe.

S. AUGUSTIN.

St. AUGUSTIN.

ST. AUGUSTIN was born at Tagaſta, a City of Numidia, in the Reign of Conſtantius, the 13th. of November, in the Year 354. which had for Conſuls the Emperour himſelf the Seventh time, and Gallus Cæſar the Third. St. Auguſtin's Father, an ordinary Citizen of that Town, was called Patricius; and his Mother, a very vertuous Woman, was named Monica. This holy Woman took care to inſtill into her Son the Principles of the Chriſtian Religion, and placed him among the Catechumens: ſo that falling dangerouſly ſick, he earneſtly deſired to be Baptized; but the violence of the Diſtemper abating, it was put off to another time. His Father being yet Unbaptized, and wanting that Senſe of Religion that his Mother had, intended only to promote his Son in the World; and though he was not very Rich, yet he ſpared nothing to inſtruct and give him Learning: He made him learn the Rudiments of Grammar at Tagaſta; and then ſent him to Madaura, to ſtudy Humanity-Learning. This Child had no mind to Study, and particularly hated the Greek Tongue; but his love for the Poets, made him firſt take a pleaſure in it. At Sixteen Years of Age, having gone through his Humanity-Courſe, his Father took him from Madaura, and ſent him to Carthage to learn Rhetorick; but wanting a Fond for this neceſſary Expence for ſome time, St. Auguſtin tarried a whole Year at Tagaſta; where Idleneſs diſordered him. He went away at the latter end of the Year 371. for Carthage, where he applied himſelf to ſtudy Rhetorick, with much Application and Succeſs. In the mean while his Father died, quickly after he was baptized. The reading of Cicero's Hortenſius, inſpir'd St. Auguſtin with a love of Wiſdom: But not finding there the Name of Jeſus Chriſt, which he had printed in his Heart from his Infancy, he betook himſelf to the reading of the Holy Scripture: But meeting not there with the flowers of profane Eloquence, he could not reliſh it, and ſo ſuffered himſelf to be led away by the Manichees. Being Nineteen Years old, he returned to Tagaſta; where he taught Grammar, and frequented the Barr. This Exerciſe having fitted him for ſome noble Employment, he went to Carthage, at the Age of Twenty five, about the latter end of the Year 379. where he taught Rhetorick with Applauſe. He was ſtill engaged in the Manichean Errors; but he began to be better informed, by a Conference which he had with Fauſtus, about the Year 383. The Inſolence of the Carthaginian Scholars, made him reſolve to go to Rome, though againſt his Mother's Will, who deſired either to keep him there, or to go with him. Being come to Rome, he fell ſick in the Houſe of a Manichee where he lodged: Being recover'd, he got ſome Scholars about him; but finding that moſt part of them were ſo baſe, to go away without Paying, he ſought to ſettle ſomewhere elſe. The Inhabitants of Milan having ſent to Symmachus, the Præfect of the City, deſiring that he would find a Rhetorick-Profeſſor for them, St. Auguſtin procured himſelf to be Choſen for that Employment. Being in Milan, he was ſo wrought upon by St. Ambroſe's Diſcourſes, that he reſolved to be converted, and quit the Sect of the Manichees: He diſcovered this Deſign to his Mother, who came to him to Milan. Plato's Books confirm'd him in his Reſolution. His Converſation with Simplicianus and Petilian did much further his Converſion; and the reading of St. Paul's Epiſtles brought this great Work to Perfection, in the 32d. year of his Age. Before the Vacation, in the year 386. he ſtay'd only a few Days, to make an end of his Publick Lectures, which he was to read before the Vacation: Which no ſooner came, but he withdrew to Verecundus his Houſe; where he betook himſelf ſeriouſly to ſtudying of the Truth, and to fit himſelf for Baptiſm; which he received at Eaſter, in the year 387. having utterly renounced his Profeſſion. Afterwards, he reſolved to return into his own Countrey; and having tarried ſome time at Rome; he embark'd at Oſtia, where his Mother died. However, he continued his Voyage, and arrived in Africa towards the end of the year 388. He went through Carthage, where he lodged in a Magiſtrate's Houſe, named Innocent; who was miraculouſly cured, as he gives the Account, in the 8th. Chap. of the 22d. Book of The City of God. He went to dwell at Tagaſta,; where he abode three years, living in common with ſome of his Friends, exerciſing himſelf by Faſtings, Prayers, and other Works of Piety, and applying himſelf Day and Night to the Meditation of the Law of God. The Fame of his Piety was ſo great, that as all that deſigned to embrace Spiritual Life, addreſſed themſelves to him: Among the reſt, a Perſon of Quality in Hippo, who was willing to give up himſelf to God, deſired to entertain him, and to bring him to that Town. St. Auguſtin did not find himſelf diſpoſed to follow his Advice: yet God did not permit his Journey to prove in vain; for Valerius, Biſhop of Hippo, having propoſed to the People to chuſe a Prieſt whom that Church ſtood in need of, he choſe St. Auguſtin, when he did not think of it; and he Ordained him, againſt his Will, about the beginning of the year 391. St. Auguſtin immediately retir'd to prepare himſelf for the worthy diſcharging of the Sacerdotal Function, and begg'd of Valerius time till Eaſter: In which ſpace, he eſtabliſhed a Monaſtery, or Community of Perſons that had all things Common, renouncing the Property of any thing. Valerius, who deſigned that St. Auguſtin ſhould preach in his room, permitted him to do it in his Preſence, contrary to the Cuſtom of the African Churches. This did not pleaſe ſome of his

St. Auguſtin.

St. Auguſtin. his Brethren; but he excus'd it, by the Uſage of the Eaſtern Churches, and the need he had that ſome body ſhould preach the Word of God in his place; becauſe he being a Greek, could not do it ſo well in Latin. This Cuſtom was found ſo reaſonable, that ſeveral Biſhops in Africa followed his Example; admitting Prieſts to Preach in their Preſence: yea they did St. Auguſtin the Honour, to make him Speak in a General Council of Africa, held at Carthage, in the year 393. where he Expounded the Creed, in the Preſence of the Biſhops; who conceived ſo great an Eſteem of his Learning, that they judged him worthy of a more excellent Dignity. But Valerius fearing leſt a Perſon ſo neceſſary for the Government of his Dioceſs, ſhould be taken away from him, reſolved to make him his Co-adjutor; and accordingly, two years after, he cauſed him to be Ordained Biſhop of Hippo, by Megalius, Biſhop of Calama, then Primate of Numidia, in the year 395. With much difficulty St. Auguſtin conſented to that Ordination, though he did not then know, as he afterwards declar'd, that it was contrary to the Laws of the Church, and to a Canon of the Council of Nice, which forbids the Ordaining Two Biſhops in the ſame Church. I ſhall not now give any Account of what he did and wrote whil'ſt he was Biſhop, becauſe that will come in, in the Abridgment of his Works: Neither will I enlarge upon the Praiſes which may be given him, nor upon his Holineſs and his Vertues, which were known and admir'd by all the World, both before and after his Death. This is no part of my Deſign; beſides, the Name only of St. Auguſtin, is the greateſt Commendation that can be given him; and whatſoever may be ſaid after that, can ſerve only to leſſen the Opinion Men have conceived of his rare Merit, and his great Piety. He died as Holily as he had liv'd, the 28th. day of Auguſt, 430. aged Seventy ſix Years, with Grief to ſee his Countrey Invaded by the Vandals; and the City, whereof he was Biſhop, Beſieged for ſeveral Months.

St. Auguſtin's Works make up ſeveral Volumes, wherein they are divided according to that order which was judged to be moſt natural. We ſhall follow that which is obſerved in the laſt Edition, ſet forth by the Benedictines of St. Germans.

The Firſt TOME of St. Auguſtin's Works.

Tome I. THE Firſt Volume containeth the Works which he wrote before he was a Prieſt; with his Retractations and Confeſſions: which ſerve as Prefaces to his Works; becauſe the Firſt giveth an Account of his Writings, and is uſeful to underſtand the moſt difficult places of his Works; and the Second diſcovers his Genius, and takes notice of the principal Circumſtances of his Life.

The Book of Retractations, is a Critical Review of his Works. He tells you there the Title, and ſets down the firſt Words of them: He gives a Catalogue according to the Time, and he obſerves upon what Occaſion, and wherefore he writ them: he tells the Subject and the Deſign which he had in compoſing them: he clears thoſe places which ſeem to be obſcure: he ſoftens thoſe which he thinks are too hard, gives a good Sence to ſuch as ſeem capable of having a bad one, and rectifies them where he thinks that he erred from the Truth. In one word; He confeſſeth ingenuouſly the Errours or Miſtakes which he committed. The Preface to this Work is very humble: He ſays, That his Deſign is, to review his Works with the Severity of a Cenſor, and to reprove his own Faults himſelf; following therein the Apoſtle's Advice, who ſaith, That if we judge our ſelves, we ſhould not be judged of the Lord. That he is frighted with thoſe words of the Wiſe-man, That it is difficult to avoid committing Faults in much ſpeaking. That he is not terrify'd with the great number of his Writings; ſince none can be ſaid to Write or Speak too much, when he Speaks and Writes only things that are neceſſary: but he is afraid, leſt there ſhould be in his Writings many falſe things, or at leaſt, unprofitable ones. That if now being Old, he thinketh not himſelf free from Errour, it is impoſſible but that he muſt have committed Faults when he was Young, either in Speaking or in Writing; and ſo much the rather, becauſe he was then obliged to Speak often. That therefore he is reſolved to judge himſelf, according to the Rules of Jeſus Chriſt, his Maſter, whoſe Judgments he deſires to avoid.

The Body of this Work is divided into Two Books. In the former, he reviſeth the Works which he writ before he was Biſhop: And in the latter, he ſpeaketh of thoſe which he compoſed afterwards, to the Year 427. which is the time when he made his Book of Retractations. I need ſay no more at preſent, becauſe in diſcourſing of each of them, I ſhall mention what St. Auguſtin hath obſerved in his Retractations.

His Confeſſions are an excellent Picture of his Life; he draweth himſelf with lively and natural Shapes, repreſenting his Infancy, his Youth, and Converſion, very critically. He diſcovers both his Vices, and his Vertues, ſhewing plainly the inward Bent of his Heart; with the ſeveral Motions wherewith he was agitated: As he ſpeaks to God, ſo he often lifts up his Spirit towards him, and intermixes his Narration with Prayers, Inſtructions, and Reflections. He tells us himſelf, That he would have us view him in that Book, as in a Looking-Glaſs that repreſents him to the Life; and that his Deſign in the Writing of it, was to Praiſe both the Juſtice, and the Mercy of God, with Reſpect to the Good and Evil which he had done, and to lift up his Heart, and Spirit to God. That this is the Effect that it produced in him when he compoſed it, and that which it produceth now, when he readeth it. Others (ſaith he) may have what Opinion of it they pleaſe; but I know that ſeveral Pious Perſons have loved my Confeſſions very much, and do love them ſtill. As indeed, all ſpiritual Perſons have ever ſince read that Work with Delight and Admiration. This Book is not full of whimſical Imaginations, and, empty, obſcure uſeleſs Spiritualities, as moſt Works of this Nature are: It contains, on the contrary, excellent Prayers; ſublime Notions of the Greatneſs, Wiſdom, Goodneſs, and Providence of God; ſolid Reflections upon the Vanity, Weakneſs, and Corruption of Man; proper Remedies for his Miſery, and Darkneſs; and moſt uſeful Inſtructions to further him in a ſpiritual Life. In one word, It may be ſaid, that of all ſpiritual Books, there is none more ſublime or ſtronger than this. Yet there are ſome Notions too Metaphyſical, above the reach of ſome devout Men; and there appeareth too great an Affectation of Eloquence: There is, perhaps, too much Wit; and Heat, and not enough of Meekneſs, and Simplicity. St. Auguſtin. Tome I.

that

St. Auguſtin's Confeſſions are divided into Thirteen Books; whereof the Ten firſt treat of his Actions, and the Three laſt contain Reflections upon the beginning of Geneſis. In the Firſt Book, after an excellent Prayer to God, he deſcribeth his Infancy, diſcovering the Sins he committed at that time, as well as the evil Inclinations that were in him. He repreſents, with all the beauty, and exactneſs imaginable, the things that are incident to Children; their Motions of Joy, and Sorrow, their Jealouſie before they can ſpeak, how hardly they learn to ſpeak; their averſion to Study, their love of Play, and the fear of Chaſtiſement. He charges himſelf with loving the Study of Fables, and Poetical Fictions; and hating the Principles of Grammar, and particularly the Greek Tongue, tho' theſe Things were infinitely more profitable, than thoſe Fables, whereof he diſcovers the danger. He ſays, That being fallen dangerouſly Sick, he deſired to be Baptized; but coming to have ſome Eaſe, they deferred it, fearing he might defile himſelf again with new Crimes: Becauſe (ſaith he) the Sins committed after Baptiſm, are greater, and more dangerous, than ſuch as are committed before.

In the Second, he begins to deſcribe the Diſorders of his Youth; he ſays, That being returned to his Father's Houſe at Sixteen years of Age, he gave himſelf to debauchery, notwithſtanding his Mother's Admonitions; That he was guilty of Theft, by robbing an Apple-tree in a Neighbour's Orchard with his Companions, with ſeveral Reflections upon the Motives that put him upon that Action.

In the Third he confeſſeth, That at Carthage, whither he was gone to finiſh his Studies; he was tranſported with the fire of Luſt. He laments the love which he had for Stage-Plays and Publick Shows, and the Pleaſure he found when they affected him at any time with Paſſion. He declares afterwards, That he read one of Cicero's Books, Entituled Hortenſius, that inſpired him with the love of Wiſdom; but not finding in that Book the Name of Jeſus Chriſt, which remained engraven in his Heart, and which he had as it were ſuck'd in with his Milk, he applied himſelf to the Holy Scripture; but that having read it with a Spirit of Pride, he reliſhed it not, becauſe of the plainneſs of it's Stile; and then he hearkened to the Dreams of the Manichees, who promiſed to bring him to the Knowledge of the Truth. He refutes their Errors, and ſpeaks with great tenderneſs of the Prayers which his Mother made, and the Tears that ſhe ſhed for his Converſion.

He continued however Nine years in that Hereſie, being deceived, and endeavouring to deceive others. He taught Rhetorick at Tagaſta. There he loſt one of his intimate Friends, whoſe Death grieved him exceedingly; whereof he deſcribeth the Exceſs in the Fourth Book, where he ſays many fine Things concerning true and counterfeit Friendſhip. There he mentions the Treatiſe of Comelineſs and Beauty, which he made at Twenty five years of Age; and gives an Account how eaſily he came to underſtand Ariſtotle's Categories. And he ſhews the Unprofitableneſs of Learning.

In the Fifth he deſcribes the degrees by which he came to be delivered from the Manichæan Hereſie, how he diſcovered Fauſtus his Ignorance who was the Head of that Hereſie. He adds, That having taught Rhetorick at Carthage, he went to Rome with a deſign to follow there the ſame Profeſſion; but having been diſheartened by the unhandſom uſage of the Scholars, who refuſed to pay their Maſters, he obtain'd of Symmachus the place of Rhetorick-Profeſſor at Milan, where he heard St. Ambroſe Preach, who perfectly diſabuſed him of the Errors of the Manichees, and made him reſolve abſolutely to quit that Sect, and become a Catechumen.

He goeth on in the Sixth Book, to deſcribe the Progreſs of his Converſion; which was much furthered by the Prayers and Admonitions of his Mother S. Monica, who came to find him at Milan, and contracted a ſtrict Friendſhip with St. Ambroſe. He obſerves, That this Holy Biſhop kept her from carrying Meat to the Graves of the Martyrs, as ſhe uſed to do in her own Country. He deſcribeth the Manners of two of his good Friends, Alypius and Nebridius, and the Agitations that were cauſed in himſelf by the knowledge of his Miſeries, and the deſign which he had to alter his courſe of Life.

In the Seventh Book, he declares his Condition in the 31ſt year of his Age, how much he was yet in the dark as to the Nature of God, and the Spring of Evil: how he was perfectly weaned from Judicial Aſtrology, by hearing of the Hiſtory of two Children that were born at the ſame moment of time, whoſe lot proved quite different: And laſtly, by what degrees he rid himſelf of his Prejudices, and came to the knowledge of God, though he had not as yet thoſe thoughts of Jeſus Chriſt, which he ought to have had.

He

St. Auguſtin. Tome I.

He declares, That he found the Divinity of the Word in the Books of the Platoniſts, but not his Incarnation: And afterwards comparing the Books of thoſe Philoſophers with the Books of the Holy Scripture, which he began to read, he obſerveth that the former had made him more knowing, but alſo more preſumptuous. Whereas the others inſtructed him in true Humility, and in the way which Men ought to follow to obtain Salvation.

At laſt he comes in the Eighth Book to the beſt Paſſage of his Life, to that which happened in the Two and thirtieth year of his Age, which was his Converſion. Firſt of all he was wrought upon by a Conference which he had with a holy Old Man, Simplicianus, who related to him the Converſion of a famous Rhetorick-Profeſſor named Victorinus. He was further moved by the Story which Potitianus told him of another Converſion. And at laſt feeling himſelf agitated, and diſtracted, by ſeveral contrary thoughts, he withdrew into a Garden, where he heard a Voice from Heaven, commanding him, to open St. Paul's Epiſtles; whereof he had no ſooner read ſome Lines, but he found himſelf wholly converted, and freed from the Agitations which till then had troubled him: Nothing can be more noble than the Deſcription which he makes in that Book, of the Combats and Agitations which that man feels that is engaged in Vice, and hath formed a deſign of being converted to God.

St. Auguſtin was no ſooner converted, but he reſolved to leave his Profeſſion. The Vacation being come, he retired to the Country-Houſe of one of his Friends called Verecundus, to prepare himſelf for Baptiſm, which he received at Eaſter with Alypius, and his Son Adeodatus, whom he had by a Concubine. This he relateth in the Ninth Book, where he diſcourſeth again of the Death of Verecundus, and Nebridius, and Adeodatus, which happened ſhortly after his Baptiſm; He ſpeaketh likewiſe, of the Original of the Singing in the Church of Milan, that was eſtabliſhed by St. Ambroſe, when he was perſecuted by Juſtina an Arian Princeſs; concerning the diſcovering of the Bodies of the Martyrs, St. Gervaſius and St. Protaſius, and of the Miracles done at the time of their Tranſlation; of the diſcourſe he had with his Mother S. Monica, about the Felicities of the other Life, and of the Death of that holy Widow which happened at Oſtia, when he was returning into Africa; of her Burial; of the Prayers that were made for her; and of the Sacrifice which was offered. He concludes this Book by recommending her to the Prayers of thoſe that ſhall read his Confeſſions.

Having ſet forth in the foregoing Books what he was before his Converſion, he ſheweth in the Tenth what he was at the time of his writing. He finds that his Conſcience gave an unqueſtionable Teſtimony of his love to God. He explains the Reaſons that oblige Men to love God, reckoning up all the Faculties of his Soul that can lead him to know God, eſpecially Memory, whereof he makes a wonderful Deſcription: He ſays, amongſt other things, that it ſerves to teach us many things, which entred not into the Mind by the Senſes, and that it may lift us up to God. He occaſionally ſpeaks of Happineſs, and of the Idea that Men have of God; afterwards he examineth himſelf about the three main Paſſions of Man, the love of Pleaſures, of Knowledge, and of Glory. He ſincerely confeſſeth what was his diſpoſition with reſpect to theſe Paſſions, preſcribing at the ſame time excellent Rules, to keep our ſelves from them. Laſtly, He diſcovers the knowledge of the true Mediatour, and of the Graces which he merited for us.

The Three laſt Books are about leſs ſenſible Matters: He waves the Hiſtory of his Life to ſpeak of the love which he had for the Sacred Books, and of the Knowledge that God had given him of them; which to ſhow, he undertakes to explain the beginning of Geneſis, upon which occaſion he ſtarts ſeveral very ſubtil Queſtions.

In the Eleventh, he refuteth thoſe that asked, what God was doing before he created the World, and how God on a ſudden formed the deſign of creating any thing; whereupon he enters into a long Diſcourſe concerning the Nature of Time.

In the Twelfth Book he treateth of the firſt Matter. He pretends that by the Heavens and the Earth, which God is ſaid to have created in the beginning, we are to underſtand ſpiritual Subſtances, and the ſhapeleſs Matter of corporeal things; that the Scripture ſpeaking of the Creation of theſe two ſorts of Beings, makes no mention of days; becauſe there is no time with reſpect to them. He affirms, That whatſoever he hath ſaid concerning the World's Creation cannot be denied, though the beginning of Geneſis were otherwiſe expounded, becauſe theſe are undoubted Truths. He treateth here of the different Explications which may be made of the Holy Scripture, affirming, That there is ſufficient reaſon to believe, that the Canonical Authors foreſaw all the Truths that might be drawn from their words, and though they had not foreſeen theſe Truths, yet the Holy Ghoſt foreſaw them: Whence he ſeems to conclude, that we are not to reject any ſence that may be given to the holy Scripture, provided it is conformable to the Truth.

At laſt, having admired the Goodneſs of God, who ſtanding in no need of the Creatures, had given them not only a Being, but alſo all the Perfections of that Being; he diſcovereth in the laſt Book the Myſtery of the Trinity in the firſt words of Geneſis, and even the Perſonal Property of the Holy Ghoſt; which gives him an admirable opportunity of deſcribing the Actions of Charity in our ſelves. He concludes with a curious Allegory upon the beginning of Geneſis, and finds in the Creation the Syſtem and Oeconomy of whatſoever God hath done for the Eſtabliſhment of his Church, and the Sanctification of Men; the only end which he propoſed to himſelf in all his Works.

St. Auguſtin

St. Auguſtin placeth the Books of Confeſſions before thoſe againſt Fauſtus, which were written about the Year 400, in his Retractations, from whence we may conclude, that theſe were both written about the ſame time. St. Auguſtin. Tome I.

After theſe two, which ſerve, as we have ſaid, for a Preface to all St. Auguſtin's Works, you find in this firſt Volume, the Books that St. Auguſtin writ in his Youth, before he was a Prieſt, in the ſame order in which they were written.

The three Books againſt the Academici, are the firſt after the Treatiſe of Beauty and Comelineſs, which is loſt. He compoſed them in the Year 386, in his ſolitude, when he prepared himſelf for Baptiſm. They are written in imitation of Cicero, in the form of a Dialogue, and directed to Romanianus his Countryman, whom he adviſeth to Study Philoſophy. The diſpute beginneth betwixt Licentius Son to Romanianus, and Trygetius; after them Alypius and St. Auguſtin begin to ſpeak.

Having obſerved in the firſt Book, that the good things of Fortune do not render men happy, he exhorts Romanianus to the Study of Wiſdom, whoſe ſweetneſs he then taſted. He afterwards gives an Account of three Conferences which Licentius and Trygetius had had about Happineſs. Licentius held with the Academici, That to be happy it was enough to ſeek after the Truth; but Trygetius pretended, That it was neceſſary to know it perfectly; both being agreed, That Wiſdom is that which makes Men happy, they begin to diſpute about the definition of Wiſdom. Trygetius gives ſeveral, all diſapproved by Licentius, who aſſerts, That Wiſdom conſiſted not only in Knowledge, but alſo in the purſuit of the Truth: whereupon St. Auguſtin concludes, That ſince we cannot be happy without knowing and enquiring after the Truth, our only application ſhould be to ſeek for it.

In the Second Book, having again exhorted Romanianus to the Study of Philoſophy, he ſets down three other Conferences, wherein Alypius produces the ſeveral Opinions of both the Ancient and Modern Academicks. And becauſe the latter ſaid, That ſome things were probable, though the Truth was not known, they laughed at that Opinion, it being impoſſible, ſay they, to know whether a thing is like the Truth, without knowing the Truth it ſelf. And this very thing obligeth Men to enquire the more carefully after likely and probable things, according to the Principles of the Academicks.

The Third Book begins with Reflections upon Fortune. St. Auguſtin ſhews, That the Goods of Fortune are of no uſe to get Wiſdom: and that the Wiſe Man ought at leaſt to know Wiſdom, refuting withall, the Principles both of Cicero, and of the other Academicks, who affirmed, That we know nothing, and that nothing ought to be aſſerted. He blames the damnable Maxim of thoſe who permitted Men to follow every thing that ſeemed probable, without being certain of any thing. He ſhews the dangerous Conſequences of ſuch Principles, and endeavours to prove that neither the ancient Academicks, nor Cicero himſelf, were of that Opinion.

Theſe three Books are written with all imaginable Elegance and Purity: The Method and Reaſonings are juſt: The Matter treated of is well cleared and made intelligible for all Men; it is beautified with agreeable Suppoſitions and pleaſant Stories. It may be ſaid, That theſe Dialogues are not much inferior to Tully's for ſtile, but much above them for the exactneſs and ſolidity of the Arguments and Notions. In his Retractations he findeth fault with ſeveral places in them, which ſeemed not to him ſufficiently to favour of Chriſtianity, but might be born with in a Philoſophical Work.

The Book of a Happy Life, or, of Felicity, is a Work of the ſame Nature, written by St. Auguſtin at the ſame time, in the 33d. year of his Age. It is dedicated to Manlius Theodorus, whom he had known at Milan. In the beginning he makes a diſtinction of three ſorts of Perſons. Some to avoid the Troubles of this Life, fly into Harbour as ſoon as they come to the uſe of Reaſon, that they may live quietly. Others on the contrary, having been a while ingaged in the Storms of this Life, carried away with Paſſions, Pleaſures, or Glory, find themſelves happily driven into Harbour by ſome Storm. The third ſort are they, who in the midſt of Storms and Tempeſts, have always had an eye to ſome Star, with a deſign to return into Harbour. The moſt dangerous Rock to be feared in this Navigation, is that of Vain-Glory, which we meet with at the firſt ſetting out, and where it is difficult to avoid Shipwrack. Theſe Reflections St. Auguſtin applies to himſelf, and ſaith, That at Twenty five Years of Age, having conceived a ſtrong Paſſion for Philoſophy, by reading of Tully's Hortenſius, he reſolved to give up himſelf to that Study: but that having been ſome time wrap'd up with the dark Clouds of the Errors of the Manichees, which hid from him the Star that ſhould have guided him: At laſt that miſt was diſſipated. That the Academicks had long detain'd him in the midſt of the Sea, in a continual Agitation; but he had now diſcover'd a lucky Star that ſhewed him the Truth, by the Diſcourſes, both of St. Ambroſe, and Theodorus, to whom he writeth, That the love both of Pleaſure, and of Glory, had for ſometime detain'd him; but, in the end, he weighed all his Anchors to come into Port.

After this fair beginning, he acquaints Theodorus with a Diſcourſe, which he ſuppoſeth to be held upon the 15th of November, his Birth-day, with his Mother, his Brother, his Son, his Couſins, and his Two Diſciples, Trygetius and Licentius, who appeared already in the foregoing Dialogues. That they might enter upon the Matter the ſooner, St. Auguſtin introduces them agreed in this Point, That Man being made up of Body, and Soul, the Soul is to be fed as well as the Body, becauſe it hath equal need of Nouriſhment. After this he propounds the ſubject of their Conference, ſaying, That ſince all Men deſire to be happy, it is certain, that all that want what they would have, are not happy; but he asketh, Whether they be happy that have what they deſire? St. Auſtin's Mother having anſwered, That they are happy, if that which they deſire be good, Si bona, inquit, velit & habeat, beatus eſt: He replies immediately, That ſhe had found out the greateſt Secret in Philoſophy; Ipſam prorſus, mater, arcem Philoſophiæ tenuiſti. Upon theſe Principles, he ſhews, in the Three Dialogues of this Book, That true Felicity conſiſts in the Knowledge of God: For, in the firſt place, the Goods of Fortune cannot make us happy, ſince we cannot have them when we would. The Academicks cannot be happy in their enquiry after Truth, ſince they have not what they would find; but they that ſeek God are happy, becauſe they no ſooner ſeek to him, but he begins to ſhew them Mercy. All thoſe whoſe Souls want any thing, are not happy: None but God can fill the Soul; therefore none but God can make us happy: None is happy without Wiſdom; And can Wiſdom be had without God? Is there any other Wiſdom than that which cometh from him? Is he not VViſdom and Truth?

St. Auguſtin. Tome I.

He concludes with Exhorting thoſe to whom he ſpeaks, to ſeek after God, that they may come to the perfect Knowledge of him, wherein conſiſts the Soveraign Felicity of Life, and the true Happineſs of the Soul. He corrects this Paſſage in his Retractations, obſerving that Man cannot be entirely and perfectly happy in this Life; becauſe he cannot know God perfectly, till he comes to the other VVorld.

St. Auſtin treateth of Providence in his Two Books of Order: Shewing, That all good, and evil Things come to paſs, according to the Order of divine Providence. Theſe Books are written Dialogue wiſe: In the Firſt, he diſcourſes of Providence in general; in the Second, he begins to enquire, What Order is; but immediately digreſſes to ſpeak of the Love of Glory: And his Mother coming in, he puts an end to the Conference; ſhewing, That Women ſhould not be forbidden to Study VViſdom.

In the Third Dialogue, which begins the Second Book, St. Auguſtin clears ſeveral particular Difficulties, about the Order of Providence. He enquires what it is to be with God, and in God's Order; in what Sence a wiſe Man may be ſaid to abide with God, and to be immoveable: He maintains, That fooliſh, and wicked Actions come into the Order of Providence, becauſe they have their Uſe for the good of the Univerſe, and manifeſt God's Juſtice.

In the Fourth Dialogue he proves, That God was always Juſt, tho' there was no occaſion for the exerciſe of his Juſtice before there were wicked Men: That Evil was introduced againſt God's Order; but that the Juſtice of God ſubmitted it to its Orders. Having bandied theſe Metaphyſical Queſtions, he enters upon Morals; exhorting his Diſciples to follow God's Order, both in their Behaviour, and in their Studies. He ſays, Men ought to live after the following Pattern. "'Tis neceſſary (ſaith he) for young Men to avoid Debauches, and Exceſs; "to deſpiſe gay Cloths, and rich Attire; to be careful not to loſe their time, either at Play, "or unprofitable Recreations; not to be Idle, or Sleepy; to be free from Jealouſie, Envy, and "Ambition; in one word, not to ſuffer themſelves to be tranſported by any violent Paſſion: "They ſhould be perſwaded, That love of Riches, is the worſt Poyſon that can infect their "Hearts. They ought to do nothing, either with Cowardice, or with Raſhneſs. If they are "offended, let them refrain their Anger. They ought to correct all Vices, but to hate no Body; not to be too ſevere, or too yielding. Let their Reproofs be always for a good End; and "their Meekneſs never Authorize Vice: Let them look upon all that are committed to their "Charge, as their own: Let them ſerve others without Affectation of Dominion; and when "they become Maſters, let them ſtill be willing to ſerve: Let them carefully avoid making "Enemies; and if they have any, let them bear with them patiently, and endeavour to be "quickly reconciled: In all their Buſineſs with others, and their whole Behaviour, let them obſerve that Maxim of the Law of Nature: Do not that to others, which you would not have done "to you. Let them not meddle with Publick Affairs, except they are very capable.∴· and "ſtudy to get Friends in what Employment ſoever they be; take a delight in ſerving thoſe that "deſerve it, even when they leaſt look for it: Let them live orderly, honour God, think of him "and ſeek him by Faith, Hope, and Charity.

Having thus given Precepts for the Manners of Youth, he preſcribeth Rules for their Studies. He ſaith, That Learning is got by Authority and Reaſon; and, That there is a Two-fold Authority, that of God, and that of Men. Theſe may deceive us; but God never affirmeth any thing but what is True. He treateth afterwards of Reaſon; and having given a Definition of it, he ſhews, That all Learning is nothing but Reaſon occupied in the conſideration of different Objects. He draws up a Catalogue of all the Sciences, and gives a ſhort Account, both of the object and uſe of each of them: From thence he paſſes to the Knowledge of the Soul, and of God; wherein he places true Wiſdom, and concludes his Diſcourſe with an Exhortation to Vertue.

His Two Books of Soliloquies, were likewiſe written by S. Auguſtin in his Retirement, about the beginning of the Year 387. His Deſign is to grow more perfect in the Knowledge, both of God and his own Soul. To this end, after an excellent Prayer to God, he examines his Reaſon, and makes it return Anſwers. In the firſt Book he treateth, particularly, of the neceſſary Diſpoſitions in the Soul, to deſerve the Knowledge of God. He teaches, That it arrives to that Knowledge by Faith, Hope, and Charity, and by turning away the Heart, and Thoughts from Earthly Earthly Things, to ſeek and love nothing but God. At the latter end, he falls upon the Queſtion of the Immortality of the Soul, which he proſecutes in the Second Book. He concludes, That the Soul is Immortal, becauſe it is the Habitation of Truth, which is Eternal: Which puts him upon making ſeveral Reflections, both upon Truth and Falſhood. This laſt Volume is not compleat, as S. Auguſtin himſelf obſerves in his Retractations; where he corrects ſome faulty Expreſſions that he uſed at a time when he was not throughly inſtructed in Religion. St. Auguſtin. Tome I.

Sometime after the Books of Soliloquies, St. Auguſtin being returned to Milan, writ the Book Of the Immortality of the Soul: Which is (ſaith he in his Retractations) as a Memorial which I made to compleat my Soliloquies, that were imperfect: But I know not how it came to be Publick againſt my Will; ſo that it is now amongſt my Works. This Book (addeth he) is ſo dark in the beginning, both by reaſon of the Expreſſions, and the brevity of the Reaſonings, that it wearieth the Reader; and requires ſo great an Attention, that I can ſcarce underſtand it my ſelf with much Application. The reading of it will diſcover, that it is rather Memoirs, than a finiſh'd Work. He has Collected ſeveral, dry, barren Arguments, to prove the Immortality of the Soul.

Theſe are ſome of his Principles. Knowledge is Eternal; wherefore the Soul, which is the Seat of Knowledge, is Immortal. Reaſon, and the Soul, are all one; but Reaſon is Immutable and Eternal. Matter cannot be annihilated, let it be divided never ſo much; ye it abideth. And, Who can believe the Soul to be in a worſe Condition? Nothing can create it ſelf, and nothing can annihilate it ſelf. Life is the Eſſence of the Soul; therefore it cannot be deprived of it. The Soul is not the Diſpoſition of the Parts of the Body; ſeeing the more we endeavour to abſtract it from Senſe, the more eaſily we comprehend Things? Neither can it be changed into a Body; for were this Change poſſible, it muſt be either becauſe the Soul is willing, or becauſe it may be forced to it by the Body; but both theſe Notions are equally abſurd. Theſe are the Principles, whereupon St. Auſtin enlargeth in this Treatiſe, and which he applies to his purpoſe with great ſubtility, and fineneſs. This Book is a convincing Evidence of his Skill in Logick.

The following Treatiſe is Intituled, Of the Quantity of the Soul: It is placed here, becauſe it treateth of the ſame Matter with the foregoing; for, according to the order of time, it ought to be placed after that Of the Manners of the Church, as St. Auguſtin obſerves in his Retractations. He gives this Account of this Treatiſe Of the Quantity of the Soul, writ whilſt he was in that City (Rome.) A Dialogue, wherein I raiſe ſeveral Queſtions concerning the Soul, viz. What is its Original; What its Nature; Whether it is extended; Why it was united with the Body; What alterations happen to it, either when it comes into, or goeth out of the Body. But, becauſe I undertook to Examine with exactneſs and curioſity, Whether it was extended; deſigning to ſhew, That it is not, after the manner of Bodies, tho' it is ſome great Thing. This only Queſtion hath given the Name to the whole Book; which therefore hath been Intituled, Of the Quantity of the Soul. Evodius is the Perſon whom St. Auguſtin introduceth, ſpeaking in this Dialogue; as he ſays in the 101*ſt.* Letter: And ſo it was a Miſtake, to put in the common Editions, the Name of Adeodatus, which is not found in the Ancient Manuſcripts; and with much Reaſon they have reſtor'd the Name of Evodius in the Laſt Edition. This Man propounds to St. Auguſtin Six Queſtions: The Firſt, Whence is the Soul? St. Auguſtin anſwereth, That this Queſtion may be taken two ways; Where is the Habitation of the Soul? And, What is the Matter it is made of? Evodius deſiring to have both theſe Queſtions clear'd to him, he ſaith, That the Habitation of the Soul is God, who created it. As for the Nature thereof, he declares, That he can neither Name nor Explain it, becauſe it hath nothing like Corporeal Beings; and that it is ſingle in its kind. Evodius his Second Queſtion, is, What is the Quality of the Soul? St. Auguſtin anſwereth, That it is like God. The Third Queſtion propoſed by Evodius, coneerns the Quantity of the Soul: St. Auguſtin affirms, That the Soul hath no Quantity, if by Quantity be underſtood Corporeal Extention; but that it hath, if by that Term is meant ſpiritual Greatneſs, Strength, and Power. St. Auguſtin, here diſcuſſes the Queſtion of the Soul's Extention with care; and ſhews, by ſeveral Reaſons, that it hath no Corporeal Dimenſions. He diſtinguiſhes Men's Souls from thoſe of Beaſts; and grants to the Latter, Senſe without Reaſon: Afterwards, he reckons up the excellent Qualities of Man's Soul, which he reduces to Seven Heads; whence he concludes, That of all Creatures, Man's Soul is that which comes neareſt to the Nature of God. With this he endeth this Treatiſe, without medling with the other Three Queſtions propoſed by Evodius, viz. The Fourth, Why the Soul was united with the Body. The Fifth, What it is at the entrance into the Body: And the Sixth, What becomes of it when it goes out of it. This Treatiſe was compoſed by St. Auguſtin, in 388.

St. Auguſtin having left his Retirement, and being come back to Milan in the Year 381. began to write Treatiſes upon the Sciences, as he tells us in his Retractations. He could finiſh none but a Treatiſe of Grammar; but he began ſeveral others of Logick, Rhetorick, Geometry, Arithmetick, and Philoſophy. He did not know himſelf, what was become of theſe Diſcourſes, when he compoſed his Retractations. At the ſame time he began, alſo, the Six Books of Muſick; which he compleated after his return into Africa, about the Year 389. In the Firſt Book he ſpeaks of Muſick in general: In the Second, of Syllables, and Feet: In the Three following, he diſcourſes of Meaſure, Harmony, and Verſes: In the Laſt he ſhows, That Muſick ought to raiſe up the Mind, and Heart, to a Divine, and Heavenly Harmony.

St. Auguſtin's

St. Auguſtin. Tome I.

St. Auguſtin's Diſcourſe of a Maſter, was written about the Year 395. It is a Dialogue betwixt himſelf, and his Son Adeodatus; wherein he ſhews, That it is not by Men's Words that we receive Inſtruction, but from the eternal Truth, viz. Jeſus Chriſt the Word of God, who informeth us inwardly of all Truth.

The Firſt of the Three Books of Free-Will, was compoſed at Rome, in 387. and the Two others in Africa, in 395. In the Firſt, St. Auguſtin reſolves that hard Queſtion, touching the original of Evil: And having explained what it is to do Evil, he ſhews, That all manner of Evil comes from the Free-Will, which readily followeth the Suggeſtions of Luſt; adding, That our Will makes us either happy, or unhappy: That if we are not happy, though we deſire to be ſo, it is becauſe we will not live conformably to the Law of God; without which, it is impoſſible to be Happy.

In the Second Book, the Difficulty alledged by Evodius, VVhy God hath left in Man a Liberty of Sinning, which is ſo prejudicial to him, hath ſtarted theſe Three other Queſtions, How we are ſure that there is a God? Doth all Good come from him? Is the VVill free to do Good, as well as Evil? St. Auguſtin clears all theſe Difficulties, proving, That Free-VVill was given for a good End, and that we received it of God; that there is a Being more perfect than our Soul; that this Being is Truth it ſelf, Goodneſs, VViſdom it ſelf; that every good and perfect Thing cometh from it; and that Free-VVill is to be reckoned among the good Things. That there are Three ſorts of Goods: The greateſt are the Vertues that make us live VVell; the Idea's of Corporeal Objects, without which we cannot live VVell, are the leaſt, and the Power of the Soul are the middle Ones: That the Firſt cannot be abuſed; but both the Second, and the Laſt may be put to ill Uſes: That Free-VVill is of the Number of theſe middle Goods. When the VVill adheres to the ſovereign Good, it renders Man Happy; but when it departeth from that, to cleave to other Objects, then Man becometh Criminal, and ſo Unhappy. VVherefore neither the VVill, nor the Objects it embraceth, are Evil; but it is a Separation from God, that makes all Evil, and Sin; but God is not the Author of this Separation. From whence then is this Principle of Averſion? This St. Auguſtin clears in the Third Book. It is not Natural, ſince it is Guilty: It is Free, and Voluntary; and it is enough to ſay, That we may chuſe, whether we will follow it, or no, to juſtifie God's Juſtice: But, how can this Liberty agree with the fore-knowledge of God? Nothing is more eaſie, according to St. Auguſtin, in this Place. VVe are Free when we do what we pleaſe: But Preſcience doth not take away our Will; on the contrary it ſuppoſes it, ſince it is a Knowledge of our Will. But are not the Creature's Faults to be imputed to the Creator? Why did he not make it impeccable? Had not Men been more perfect, if they had been created at firſt in the ſame condition with the Angels, and the glorified Saints that cannot be ſeparated from the love of God? But St. Auguſtin replies, Doth it therefore follow, That becauſe we may conceive a more Perfect State, therefore God was obliged to create us in that State? Should we not rather believe that he had his Reaſons why he did not create us more Perfect? There are ſeveral ſorts of Perfections. If the State of a Creature, that enjoyeth God, makes Soveraign Felicity; then the State of a Creature that is ſubject to Sin, which liveth in hope of recovering the Happineſs which it loſt, is alſo in God's Order, and exceedingly above that of a Creature that lies under the neceſſity of ſinning eternally. The Condition of theſe laſt, is the worſt of all; and yet God cannot be accuſed of Injuſtice, for giving a Being to Creatures which he knew would be eternally miſerable: He is not the Cauſe of their Sin: That Being which he gave them, is ſtill a Perfection; their Sins and their Miſery contribute to the Perfection of the Univerſe, and to exalt the Juſtice of God by the Puniſhment of their Sins. What then is the Cauſe of Sins? There is none but the Will it ſelf, which freely and knowingly inclineth to do Evil. For if Sin, could not be reſiſted, it were impoſſible to know or to avoid it; and then there would be no Sin. Wherefore then doth God puniſh Sins of Ignorance? How cometh it to paſs that he blameth thoſe Actions that are done out of Neceſſity? What mean thoſe words of the Apoſtle, I do not the Good that I would, but the evil that I would not? All that, ſaith St. Auguſtin, is ſpoken of Men born ſince Mankind was condemned to Death, becauſe of the Firſt Man's Sin. For were this Natural to Man, and not a Puniſhment for his Sin; it is certain, there would be no Sin of Ignorance nor Neceſſity: But when we ſpeak here of Liberty, we ſpeak of that which Man had when God created him.

Here St. Auguſtin anſwers the greateſt Objection that can be urged againſt Original Sin: Though, ſay they, both Adam and Eve have ſinned, yet what had we done, wretched Perſons that we are, to be thus abandoned to Ignorance and to Luſt? Muſt we therefore be deprived of the knowledge of the Precepts of Righteouſneſs? and when we begin to know them, Muſt we ſee our ſelves under a kind of Neceſſity not to keep them, by reaſon of the reſiſtance of Luſt? " St. Auguſtin confeſſeth, That this Complaint were juſt, if Men were under an impoſſibility " of overcoming their Ignorance and Luſt. But God being preſent every where to call his " Creature to his Service, to teach him what he ought to believe, to Comfort him in his hopes, " to confirm him in his Love, to help his Endeavours, and to hear his Prayers; man cannot " complain, That that is imputed to him which he is unavoidably ignorant of; but then that " he muſt blame himſelf, if he neglects to ſeek after that which he knows not. It is none of his " fault, that he cannot uſe his broken Members; but he is guilty if he deſpiſeth the Phyſician " that proffers to cure him: for none can be ignorant that Man may profitably ſeek for the Knowledge

" Knowledge of what he knows not, and which he thinks to be neceſſary: And it is well enough " known that Men ought humbly to acknowledge their Weakneſs, to obtain Help. In a word, " If Men do that which is Evil out of Ignorance, or if it ſo happens, that they cannot do the Good " which they would, there is Sin in that; becauſe it is in conſequence of the Firſt Man's Sin " committed with full liberty. This firſt Sin deſerved the following. St. Auguſtin. Tome I.

There remained yet a conſiderable Difficulty, Why the Innocent Soul becometh ſubject unto Sin by it's Union with the Body? To explain this, St. Auguſtin mentions four ſeveral Opinions concerning the Original of Souls. The Firſt is, That the Soul is formed from the Parents. The Second is, That God creates new ones at Mens Birth. The Third is, That Souls being created beforehand, God cauſeth them to enter their reſpective Bodies. The Fourth is, That they come down into the Bodies of their own accord: Now, he judging all theſe Opinions equally probable, and that it was as yet undecided, he endeavoureth to prove, that a Reaſon may be given for Original Sin, what Opinion ſoever one holds of the Original of the Soul.

He cometh at laſt to that particular Difficulty concerning the Children that die as ſoon as they are born. As for thoſe that have received Baptiſm, though without knowledge, he ſaith, That it is Piouſly and Juſtly believed (for theſe are the terms he makes uſe of Satis pie rectèq; Creditur) that the Faith of thoſe who preſent the Child to be baptized, ſupplies for that of the Child: As to the Pain and Sorrow which they ſuffer, having not deſerved them by their Sins, St. Auguſtin ſaith, That God hath his Ends in permitting their Sufferings, and that perhaps he will recompence them for theſe Sufferings, as the Church believeth of the holy Innocents killed by Herod, who are reckoned among the Martyrs; having thus ſalved theſe Difficulties, he makes other uſeleſs Queries concerning the Sin of Adam.

St. Auguſtin obſerves in his Retractations, that he deſigned nothing in theſe Books, but to oppoſe their Opinion, who deny the original of Evil to be from Free-Will; pretending that if this were true, God muſt be the Author of it, introducing thereby an Eternal and Immutable Subſiſtency o Evil; That he did not enlarge upon it, nor treat of Predeſtination or Grace, whereby God prepares the Wills of Men, that they might make good uſe of their Liberty. Yet, when there was occaſion to ſpeak of it, he ſays ſomething by the by, without making any ſtop to defend it. Wherefore Pelagius and the Pelagians, alledged ſeveral Expreſſions in favour of Free-Will, which St. Auguſtin had uſed in his Books: But St. Auguſtin ſhews, That what he ſaid of Free-Will, is conſiſtent enough with his Syſtem of Grace, and that he eſtabliſhed all the Principles of it: This he proves by Paſſages taken out of theſe Books, where he affirms, That every good thing comes from God, and that Man cannot be delivered from Ignorance, and the neceſſity of Sinning, but by God's help.

The two Books upon Geneſis againſt the Manichees, were compoſed by St. Auguſtin after his return into Africa, about the Year 389. There he refuteth thoſe impertinent Objections which the Manichees made concerning the Three firſt Chapters of Geneſis, by giving a reaſonable Expoſition of them. He inſiſts moſt upon the literal ſence; but ſometimes he goes out of the way, and only gives an Allegorical one. As St. Auguſtin deſigned to benefit all Men by this Book; and particularly, to inform the common People that were abuſed by the Manichees, ſo he writ it with all the clearneſs and ſimplicity he could: In his Retractations, he explaineth ſome Paſſages that were miſconſtrued by the Pelagians; eſpecially two, one againſt the Neceſſity of Grace, and the other againſt Original Sin.

The Books of the Manners of the Church, and of the Manichees, were compoſed at Rome by St. Auguſtin, ſoon after his Baptiſm, about the Year 387. as himſelf witneſſeth in his Retractations. It is very probable that he reviſed them after his return into Africa, ſeeing he mentions them in the firſt of thoſe Treatiſes lately named. His deſign was to confound the Inſolence and Vanity of the Manichees, who gloried in a vain Temperance; and under that Pretence, exalted themſelves above the Catholicks: Wherefore in theſe two Books he ſhews the oppoſition of the true Chriſtian's Manners, to thoſe of the Manichees; proving how much the counterfeit Vertues which theſe made their boaſt of, were inferior to the real Vertue of Chriſt's Diſciples.

In the Book of the Manners of the Church, he layeth down, as the firſt ground of Morality, That God alone is the Soveraign Good of our Souls; from which truth, he inferrs, That all things muſt have reſpect to God, and that we are to love him above all things; and proves this firſt Principle of Chriſtian Ethicks by Teſtimonies of the Old and New Teſtament. He ſhews, That all the Vertues are but ſo many different Expreſſions of this Love; That Temperance is that love, which keeps it ſelf pure and uncorrupt for God: Fortitude, is a love that endureth all things with eaſe, for God's ſake: Juſtice is a love that ſerveth God only, and by reaſon of that, procures Good to all Creatures that are ſubjected to him: Prudence is a love which has a light, to diſtinguiſh that which may help to bring us to God, from that which may hinder us in that way; even the love of our Neighbour is not a Vertue, but ſo far as it relates to God. He alone that loveth God, is capable of loving himſelf and his Neighbour, as he ought to do. This Reflection giveth St. Auguſtin an Opportunity of ſpeaking of the Duties of Society, and of what Chriſtians owe one to another. Laſtly, as Examples do often affect more than Precepts; ſo he produces ſeveral Precedents of vertuous Men in the Church, that he may raiſe a higher Notion of the Manners of the Catholicks. He ſets forth the Examples of Hermits, Monks, and Nuns, who have quite ſevered themſelves from the World, to ſpend their Lives in conſtant Abſtinence, and in Exerciſes of Piety. He adds the Example of ſeveral vertuous

St. Auguſtin. Tome I.

Eccleſiaſticks, and of many holy Prelates, who kept themſelves pure in the midſt of a corrupt Age; and of an infinite Number of Chriſtians, that led moſt exemplary Lives. He concludes this Book, by ſhewing, That the Examples of Evil Catholicks can be no pretence for Hereticks to ſeparate from the Church; and that the Notions of the Manichees touching Marriage, are contrary to thoſe of the Apoſtles.

He obſerveth much the ſame Method in his Book of the Manners of the Manichees: He begins it by refuting their Doctrine about the Nature and Original of Good and Evil: Afterwards he diſcovers their impious and ſuperſtitious Practices, in ſuch a manner as renders them ridiculous and abominable; and then gives a relation of the Diſorders whereof the greateſt part of that Sect had been Convicted

The Book of true Religion, is the laſt of thoſe which St. Auguſtin writ before he was a Prieſt; He therefore made it about the Year 390. there he ſhews both the Excellencies and the Duties of the true Religion; That the Chriſtian Religion is the only true one: and he refutes the Errors of other Religions, and particularly of the Manichees concerning the two Natures. He ſpeaks of Jeſus Chriſt's Religion, in that lofty manner, as gives a very high Notion of it. I ſhall give an Analyſis of his Principles. Religion is the only thing that can guide us to the Truth, to Vertue and Happineſs. The Heathen Philoſophers acknowledge the Falſhood of the popular Religion, and yet approve the ſame by their outward worſhip. Since the Eſtabliſhment of Chriſtianity, none can doubt but that it is the Religion which ought to be followed. Plato himſelf would have owned it, ſeeing that the loftieſt Maxims of Philoſophy, concerning the Divinity, and the neceſſity of Purifying the Soul, whereof he deſpaired of perſwading the People, are not only Preached throughout the Earth, but alſo embraced and followed by an infinite number of Perſons. The Philoſophers muſt needs know God upon this occaſion, and give place to him that did this Miracle. Neither Curioſity, nor Vain-glory ought to keep them from acknowledging the difference between the Proud Conjectures of a few Philoſophers, and the Publication of a Doctrine that Cures the Soul, and reforms the Errors of all Nations. Religion is not to be ſought for either among the Philoſophers, ſince they approve by their Actions, the ſame Worſhip which they condemn in their Writings; nor among the Hereticks, who have no ſhare in the Sacraments of the Church; nor among Schiſmaticks, who have ſeparated themſelves from the Church; nor among the Jews, who expect from God none but Temporal and Tranſitory Rewards; but only in the Church univerſally diſperſed throughout the Earth, which makes uſe of the Errors of others for its own Good. The Church makes uſe of the Pagans, as the Matter of her Works; Of Hereticks, as a Proof of the Purity of her Doctrine; Of Schiſmaticks, as a Mark of her Stability; and of the Jews, as an Evidence of her Excellency: And ſo ſhe inviteth the Heathen, thruſts out Hereticks, forſakes Schiſmaticks, goes before the Jews, and yet ſhe openeth to all an entrance into the Myſteries, and a door of Grace, either by forming the Faith of the former, or by reforming the Errors of the latter, or by cauſing the laſt to return into her Boſom, or admitting the others into the Society of her Children. As for carnal Chriſtians, ſhe beareth with them for a time, as Straw which is ſerviceable to the Wheat upon the Floor; and becauſe every one is either Straw or Wheat, according to the Motions of his Will, ſhe ſuffers thoſe that are in Sin or in Error till they are Accuſed, or till they undertake to defend their falſe Opinions with obſtinate Animoſity. But ſuch as are cut off from the Church, do either return by Penance, or being carried away by a miſchievous Liberty, they give up themſelves to Vice; or they make a Schiſm, or frame an Hereſie. Yea, very often God's Providence permits ſome vertuous Chriſtians to be put out of the Communion of the Church, by Tumults and Diſturbances excited againſt them by carnal Perſons: but this Separation is not imputed unto them, and God notwithſtanding crowneth them in ſecret, when they bear with that Injury patiently, without making a Schiſm from the Church, or ſetting up any new Hereſie; Such Examples, ſaith St. Auguſtin, ſeem rare, but yet there are ſome, and more than can be believed. Having thus rejected the falſe Religions, he concludes, That we muſt hold to that of Chriſt, and to that Church which is Catholick; and which is ſo called, not only by her own Children, but alſo by her very Enemies. The firſt Ground of this Religion is Hiſtory and Prophecy, which diſcovers to us the Oeconomy that God's Providence hath made uſe of in proceſs of times for the Salvation of Men. That after this Belief, we ought to purifie our Hearts, to render them capable of knowing the Trinity, the Incarnation, and other Articles of the Creed. That Hereſies ſerve to clear the Myſteries. After this, he diſcourſeth of the Soul; ſhewing after what manner it becometh, as it were, Earthly and Carnal by loving the Body; and how it gets out of that Unhappy State, by turning to God and overcoming diſorderly Affections by the Grace of God. He treateth of the Nature and Fall of Angels. He ſhews, That Sin muſt be voluntary; That Death, Weakneſs, and Pain, are Puniſhments for Sin; and yet are not unprofitable, becauſe they wean us from Corporeal Things. He reſumes his Diſcourſe of the Myſtery of the Incarnation, and ſaith, That God's Bounty towards Men, never appeared ſo much as in that Myſtery; That the Word of God of the ſame Subſtance and Co-eternal with the Father, vouchſafed to make himſelf Man like unto us, to deliver us from our Sins: That he hath uſed no force or violence to draw us to himſelf; That he hath manifeſted himſelf to be God by Miracles, and Man by his Sufferings; That he hath appointed his Example for a Remedy againſt all the diſorderly Paſſions of Men; That his Life is a continual Inſtruction, and his Reſurrection, an Evidence that we may hope to be one day delivered from all ſorts of Evils; That he hath taken off the Veil from the the Figures of the Old Law; That he hath aboliſhed the Ceremonial Ordinances, with which the Jews were over-loaden; That he hath inſtituted few Sacraments indeed, but very wholſom ones to preſerve Society in his Church; That he hath perfected our Morals, by encreaſing the number of Precepts, but that at the ſame time he hath given Men ſtrength to practiſe them. He treateth here of the Nature and Original of Evil, ſhewing that it is not a Corporeal Subſtance, but conſiſts in a vicious adhæſion of the Will to Corporeal Beings. He runs through the ſeveral Conditions of Men, and the Means to find out Remedies for all their Diſtempers. He diſcovereth the Uſe that is to be made both of Authority and Reaſon to cure Man, and applieth both to take him off from the Creature. He hath ſeveral curious Speculations upon the Knowledge and the Affections of Men; and particularly he examines the three principal Paſſions, Pleaſure, Ambition and Curioſity, and layeth down very profitable Precepts for Piety and Manners. He recommends the Reading of the holy Scripture, diſtinguiſhing the ſeveral Explications, and giving ſome Rules for the underſtanding of it. The whole Work is concluded with an Exhortation to all Men to embrace the True Religion. St. Auguſtin. Tome I.

In his Retractations he maketh ſome Remarks upon this Treatiſe; moſt of them are of ſmall conſequence; theſe are ſome of the moſt important. He had ſaid, That Sin was ſo neceſſarily Voluntary, that an Action could not be Sin, if it was not Voluntary. He juſtifies this Aſſertion in his Retractations: but he adds, That Sins committed through Ignorance or Luſt, are in ſome ſort Voluntary, becauſe they cannot be committed without Will: and that even Original Sin is Voluntary, in this ſence, becauſe it was the Will of the Firſt Man, that made it Hereditary to all his Poſterity. He obſerveth likewiſe, upon what he had ſaid, That Jeſus Chriſt had done nothing by Violence, but only uſed Counſels and Exhortations: That he did not then reflect upon the Action of Jeſus Chriſt, when he drove the Merchants out of the Temple with Scourges, that came thither to Buy and Sell; but ſaith he, That cannot be looked upon as a violent Action: Sed quid hoc aut quantum eſt? Upon what he had ſaid, That Miracles were ceaſed in his time, leſt Men ſhould ſtill cleave to Senſible Things, and their Minds be too much accuſtomed to them; he noteth, That theſe words are not to be taken ſtrictly, ſeeing that Miracles are ſtill wrought in the Church, and that himſelf had ſeen ſome at Milan.

The Rule, which is the laſt Piece of this Tome, is indeed St. Auguſtin's; but he wrote it for Nuns, and not for Monks. Some body took it out of the 109th. Epiſtle, and fitted it for Men. This Alteration has been long made.

As they have placed by themſelves, at the latter end of each Tome, thoſe Pieces which are none of St. Auguſtin's, and yet have ſome relation to thoſe contained in that Volume; ſo at the end of this, there are the Treatiſes of Grammar, Logick, Categories and Rhetorick, that were attributed to St. Auguſtin in the former Editions; perhaps, becauſe he ſaith himſelf, in his Retractations, That he had began ſome Treatiſes upon thoſe Sciences: but his Diſcourſes were written in the form of Dialogues, and like that of Muſick; where he makes uſe of that Science, to raiſe up the Mind of Man to his Creator; but theſe are neither Dialogue-wiſe, nor fit to lift up Mens Minds towards God. The Manner how they are written, and the Methods obſerv'd in them, are very different from thoſe of St. Auguſtin. In a word, There are in thoſe Treatiſes ſeveral Obſervations unworthy of that Father, and contrary to his Opinions. The Diſcourſe of Grammar, begins indeed with the ſame words that St. Auguſtin hath noted in his Retractations; but they have been added, and are not to be found in the Manuſcripts.

The Author of the Book of Categories, has a great Eſteem for Ariſtotle's Philoſophy; and ſaith, That he could ſcare underſtand his Book of Categories with Themiſtius his help: Whereas St. Auguſtin, who had no great Eſteem for Ariſtotle's Philoſophy, aſſureth us, That he underſtood his Categories, without Labour, and without a Tutor. The Name of Adeodatus, that was inſerted into the Printed Copies, is not found in the Manuſcripts.

The Monaſtick Rules, which are at the latter end of this Volume, are rejected with Common Conſent. The laſt, wherein St. Benedict's Rule is quoted, is, if we believe Holſtenius, written by Alredus Rievallenſis, an Abbot in England, who flouriſhed in the Twelfth Century; and indeed it is in the Catalogue of this Author's Works, publiſhed [by Bale,] in the Second Century of Engliſh Writers: part of it is among St. Anſelm's Works.

The SECOND TOME.

THE Second Tome of St. Auguſtin's Works, containeth his Letters; which do not only repreſent the Genius and Character of that holy Father, but contain alſo very important Points of Doctrine, Diſcipline and Morality. In the laſt Edition, they are placed according to the Order of Time; for which Arguments are brought in a Preface. They are divided into Four Claſſes. The Firſt contains thoſe which he writ before he was Biſhop, from the Year 386. to 395. In the Second, are thoſe which he writ from the Year 396. to the time when the Catholick Biſhops had a Conference at Carthage with the Donatiſts, and the breaking out of the Pelagian Hereſie in Africa, that is, to the Year 410. The Third comprehends thoſe that were written Tome II.

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

written from the Year 411. to the end of his Life, that is, to 430. And the Fourth contains thoſe whereof the time is not juſtly known, though they were certainly written after he was made Biſhop. There are Two hundred and ſeventy in all. The Benedictines have taken away ſome Treatiſes, which were put among the Letters; and they have added thoſe which he Anſwered. And laſtly, Some are added, that were not publiſhed before.

The thirteen or fourteen firſt are about Philoſophical Matters that St. Auguſtin uſed to diſcourſe about with his Friends, when he was firſt Converted.

The Firſt was written by St. Auguſtin to Hermogenianus, about the latter end of the Year 380. concerning the Books that he wrote againſt the Academicks. He tells him what his Aim was in writing them, and asketh his Advice about what he had ſaid concerning thoſe Philoſophers. About the latter end of the Third Book, he commends the Academicks, and ſaith, That he was ſo far from Condemning them, that he had Imitated them. He blameth the falſe Academicks of his own time, and calleth them ſtupid who believed the Soul to be Corporeal. He concludes, with ſaying, That he flatter'd not himſelf with triumphing over the Academicks, as Hermogenianus ſaid; but that he thought himſelf happy, for being above deſpair of finding the Truth, which is the Food of the Soul; and that he had thereby broken that troubleſome Chain which hinder'd him from faſtning, as one may ſay, to the Breaſts of the True Philoſophy.

In the Second Letter, to Zenobius, he teſtifies his Sorrow for his being Abſent, and his Impatience to ſee him again, that they might reſolve a Queſtion which he had begun to examine. This Letter was written the ſame time with the foregoing.

The Third, to Nebridius, is about his Books of Soliloquies, compoſed in the beginning of the year 387. He ſpeaketh there of his Happineſs of having attained to the Knowledge of ſome particular Truths, and particularly of thoſe concerning our Nature; confeſſing withal, That he was ignorant of many things. Among things unknown to Man, he propoſeth theſe: Why the World is of ſuch Bigneſs? or rather, How big it is? Why it is where it is, rather than any where elſe? He obſerves, That Bodies may be infinitely divided; and, That there is no Quantity but may be both infinitely encreaſed and diminiſhed: That it is not ſo with Numbers, which may be infinitely encreaſed, but not diminiſhed proportionably, ſeeing there is nothing below Unity.

In the next, directed to the ſame, and written about the ſame time, St. Auguſtin acquaints him with the Progreſs that he had made in the Knowledge of the Truth, during the time of his Retirement. We have not the other Letters, which he writ at that time to Nebridius, as appears by the Ninth Book of Confeſſions.

The Fifth and Sixth, are Letters written in Africa, by Nebridius, to St. Auguſtin, about the end of the Year 388. or the beginning of 389. In the Firſt, Nebridius pitieth St. Auſtin, that he was interrupted in the Contemplation of the Truth by other Buſineſſes. And in the Second, he tells him his Notion, That Memory cannot act without Imagination; and, That the Imagination draws her Images of Things from it ſelf, and not from the Senſes. St. Auguſtin reſolves both theſe Queſtions in the Seventh Letter. To the former, he anſwereth, That we remember things which cannot be repreſented by Senſible Idea's: whence he concludes, That there is a Memory independent upon the Imagination. To the latter, That there are Three ſorts of Images or Phantoms, in our Imagination; that ſome are tranſmitted by the Senſes, and theſe repreſent ſuch things as we have ſeen and felt. That the Second, that are formed by Imagination, repreſent ſuch things as we never ſaw; and which, perhaps, are not, but which we fanſie, or ſuppoſe to be, or to have been: And that the laſt ariſe from the Conſideration of ſome Speculative Truths, as Numbers and Dimenſions. That without doubt, the firſt ſort do not proceed from Senſe; but we muſt grant, that the Second have their Original from Senſe, ſince they repreſent nothing but what is true. That the laſt, though they ſeem to ſpring from the Reaſons and Principles of Sciences, which lead not into Error, yet are falſe; becauſe they repreſent Spiritual Things, as if they were Corporeal and Extended. Whence he concludes, That the Soul doth not imagine the things that it does not ſee, and that it doth not feel, but either by leſſening or by encreaſing the Images of what it hath ſeen or felt.

The following Letters, to the Thirteenth, are directed to Nebridius, though the Years are not preciſely known: it is certain, that they were written before St. Auguſtin was Ordained, becauſe Nebridius died before that time. In the Eighth, Nebridius asketh St. Auguſtin, How Dæmons can make us Dream? St. Auguſtin anſwers him in the Ninth, That they do it, by ſtirring thoſe Parts of the Body which can make an Impreſſion upon the Soul, after the ſame manner as Muſical Inſtruments excite in us certain Thoughts, Paſſions and Affections. In the Tenth, St. Auguſtin propoſes to Nebridius, To live together retired: And he ſetteth forth the Advantages of Solitude. In the Eleventh, he endeavours to explain that Queſtion in Divinity, How the Three Perſons being inſeparable, the Son alone was made Man? Having diligently ſtudied how to anſwer it, he tells Nebridius, That the underſtanding of Myſteries, is got only by Piety: That this is the ſureſt way to compaſs it, and therefore that Men ought chiefly to give up themſelves to the Practice thereof. He had alſo handled that Queſtion in the Twelfth Letter, but it is imperfect. In the Thirteenth, he adviſes Nebridius not to think any longer, that the Soul hath another thinner Body than that which we ſee, it being impoſſible to reſolve that Queſtion, ſince our Senſes cannot diſcern ſuch a Body, and Reaſon cannot diſcover any ſuch thing to us.

In

In the Fourteenth, he answers Two other Questions proposed by Nebridius. The First, concerning the Sun; which is of small importance, and hath no difficulty. The Second deserves more Reflection: Nebridius asks St. Augustin, Whether the Knowledge of God, includeth not only a general Idea of Mankind, but also an Idea of every Man in particular? St. Augustin answereth, That in the Creation, God had only a Prospect of the general Idea of Mankind; but yet that there is in God a particular Idea of every Man. He clears his Answer by this Example: The Idea of an Angle, is one single Notion, as well as that of a Square: so when I design to make an Angle, one only Idea offers it self; and yet when I go about to describe a Square, I must have in my Mind the Notion of Four Angles joined together: Even so each Man was Formed after the particular Idea of a Man; but in the Creation of People, it is no longer the particular Idea of one Man, but the general Idea of many seen and conceived all at once. This is refined Metaphysicks. St. Augustin. Tome II.

The Fifteenth Letter is written to Romanianus; to whom St. Augustin promiseth his Book of The True Religion, which he finished not long before he was Ordained Priest. Which proves, That this Letter was written about the Year 390. He exhorts Romanianus to renounce the Cares of the World, and to seek after solid and lasting Goods.

The Sixteenth Letter, is a Discourse written by Maximus, a Grammarian of Madaura, who disputeth against the Christian Religion. He owns, That there is but One Sovereign Being, and One only God; but pretends, That it is the same God whom the Heathen worship under several Names, which signifie his several Attributes. He cannot endure, that in the Christian Religion, they should preferr Martyrs of obscure and strange Names, before those Immortal Gods whose Names are so famous. He desires of St. Austin to let him know who that particular God is, whom the Christians suppose to be present in secret and retired places.

St. Augustin answereth this in the Seventeenth Letter, discovering the Falshood of this Pagans Rallery, by other Ralleries that are more Spiritual. At the latter end of his Letter, he declares, That among Christians and Catholicks the Dead are not adored: And, That no Divine Honours are done to any Creature, but only to God, who created all things. These Letters were written before the Worship of the Gods was prohibited by the Imperial-Law of the Year 391. whil'st St. Augustin was retir'd at Tagasta, near Madaura, and before he was a Priest, namely, about the Year 390.

It is believed, that the Eighteenth, Nineteenth, and Twentieth Letters, were written before St. Augustin was Ordained Priest; because he gives himself no Title in the Inscription, and because they seem more florid than those which he wrote after he was in Orders. The Eighteenth is directed to Cœlestinus. There he distinguishes Beings into Three Natures: The First Moveable in Place and Time, and that's Body: The Second Moveable in Time, but not in Place, and that is the Soul: And the Third is Immoveable in Time and Place. and this is God. The First is incapable either of Happiness or Unhappiness: The Last is essentially Happy: The Middle Being is Unhappy when it cleaveth to the Beings of the First sort, but Happy when it carries it self to the Supreme Being. In the Nineteenth Letter, he exhorteth Caius, to whom he sendeth his Works, to continue in those good Dispositions of Mind wherein he left him. In the Twentieth, he giveth Antoninus Thanks for his Love, and for the good Opinion he had of him; with excellent Instructions, desiring the Conversion of his whole Family.

St. Austin was Ordained Priest by Valerius, Bishop of Hippo, who being a Greek, and not able to speak Latin fluently enough to Preach to the People, cast his Eyes upon St. Augustin to Preach in his room. St. Augustin being sensible how hard it was to discharge the Duties of that Station, entreateth Valerius, in the Twenty first Letter, to let him withdraw for a time, that he might fit himself, by Study and Prayer, for the Employment which he had laid upon him. This Letter is very instructive for those that are to be promoted to Ecclesiastical Dignities: It begins with this curious Reflection; That there is nothing more acceptable, especially at this time, than the Dignity of a Priest, a Bishop and a Deacon; nothing more pleasant and easie than the Exercise of these Offices, when Men will do things only of Course, and flatter others in their Disorders: But on the other side, That there is nothing more mischievous, pernicious and damnable before God. On the contrary, nothing is more glorious and happy in God's account; but at the same time, nothing more difficult, painful and dangerous, especially at this time, than the Exercise of those Functions, when Men resolve to discharge them according to the Rules of that holy Warfare which we profess to follow. He declareth, That though he wept very heartily on the Day of his Ordination, foreseeing the Dangers he was exposed unto; yet he did not then know his Weakness so well as he has done since.

He observes, That he was Ordained, when he thought to have taken some time to study the Scriptures. He begs time till Easter, to prepare himself for Preaching, by Study and Prayer. This Letter was written about the beginning of the Year 391.

The Twenty second, to Aurelius, Bishop of Carthage, was written the following Year. St. Augustin laments the Feasts which they made in Church-Yards, and at the Martyrs Graves, under pretence of Religion, desiring Aurelius to give Order about them. He observes, That of the Three Vices condemned by St. Paul, in the Epistle to the Romans, namely, Drunkenness, Uncleanness and Discord, they seemed to punish but One in the Church, that was, Uncleanness: That the others were tolerated; yea, they thought to honour the Martyrs by their Drunkenness: That this Abuse was never in the Churches of Italy, or else it had been reformed by the

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

Care and Vigilancy of their Biſhops; and that his Biſhop wanted neither Zeal, nor Knowledge, to correct it in his Dioceſs: but that this Diſorder was ſo rooted, that he thought there was no hope to ſee it aboliſhed, but by the Authority of a Council. That if any particular Church was to do it, that of Carthage ought to begin. Yet, that ſuch Abuſes were not to be oppoſed by ſharpneſs, roughneſs, or imperiouſneſs; that Inſtructions were to be uſed, rather than Commands; and Counſels, rather than Threatnings: That if there be need of Threatnings, they muſt be uſed in a lamenting manner, and only ſuch as are found in Scripture; not to inſpire them by Words, with the fear of Eccleſiaſtical Power, but with a Dread of the Divine Vengeance. And ſince the People was perſwaded, That theſe Feaſts were not only to the Honour of the Martyrs, but alſo gave eaſe to the Dead, he would have the Offerings, made in the Church for the Dead, to be done modeſtly, without Pomp and Affectation. He would not have them ſold, but that the Money that was offered, ſhould be immediately diſtributed to the Poor. Afterwards he reproves the Quarrels and Enmities betwixt the African Clergy.

The Twenty third Letter was written by St. Auguſtin, during his being a Prieſt, but what Year, is unknown. It is directed to a Donatiſt Biſhop, called Maximinus, who had Re-baptiz'd a Deacon of the Church that was become a Donatiſt. St. Auguſtin having been informed, That this Biſhop did not do Things like the other Donatiſts, prayeth him to let him know the Truth, and exhorts him, either to declare himſelf a Catholick, if he were not in that Point of the other Donatiſts Opinion; or to hold a Conference with him about his Separation from the Catholick Church.

The 24*th.* and 25*th.* are Two Letters of Paulinus to Alypius, and to St. Auguſtin, written in the Year 394.

The 26*th* is a Letter from St. Auguſtin, to his old Diſciple Licentius; wherein he exhorts him to deſpiſe the World, making uſe of the Verſes which Licentius had Dedicated to him. It was written after St. Paulinus, and St. Auguſtin were acquainted, about the Year 395.

The 27*th.* is an Anſwer from St. Auguſtin, to St. Paulinus, written the ſame Year.

The 28*th.* to St. Jerom, was the beginning of their Quarrel. St. Auguſtin adviſeth him rather to Tranſlate into Latin the beſt of the Greek Authors, than to make a New Tranſlation of the Scripture upon the Hebrew Text. He beginneth alſo the Diſpute, about that Place, to the Galatians, which ſpeaks of St. Peter's Diſſembling; reproving St. Jerom for approving an officious Lye. This Letter was written in the Year 395.

The 29*th.* lately Publiſhed by the Benedictines from a Manuſcript in the Library at St. Croſſe, is directed to Alypius, then Biſhop of Tagaſta. There St. Auguſtin acquaints him, how he had, at laſt, compaſſed his Deſign of putting down, in the Church of Hippo, thoſe Feaſts that they were wont to make in the Church upon the Feſtival Days of the Martyrs: He repeats the Arguments that he uſed in his Sermons upon that Subject, that ſo Alypius might take the ſame Courſe, to aboliſh the ſame Abuſe in his own Church. St. Auguſtin was but Prieſt, when he writ this Letter, and Alypius was newly choſen Biſhop; which ſhews that it was written in the Year 395.

The 30*th.* is a Letter of St. Paulinus's, written to St. Auguſtin before he was Biſhop. Theſe are all the Letters of the Firſt Claſſe.

The Second Claſſe.

THE Second Claſſe containeth the Letters written by St. Auguſtin, from the time of his being made Biſhop, to the Conference at Carthage, before the breaking out of the Pelagian Hereſie in Africa, that is from the Year of our Lord 396, to 410.

The Firſt of the Letter, which is the 31*ſt.* written at the beginning of the Year 396. ſhortly after his Ordination, is directed to Paulinus. He thanks him for his Second Letters; and takes notice, That he was ordained Coadjutor to Valerius in the Biſhoprick of Hippo, and invites him to come over into Africa.

The 32*d.* is Paulinus's Anſwer.

The 33*d.* is to Proculianus, a Donatiſt Biſhop at Hippo. St. Auguſtin being informed, That he deſigned to clear his Doubts by a Conference with him, offereth it to him, that they might agree, and put an end to the Schiſm. This Letter was written ſoon after he was made Biſhop, Valerius being yet alive.

The 34*th.* was written, not long after the former: There he complaineth to Euſebius, That Proculianus, a Donatiſt Biſhop at Hippo, to whom the foregoing Letter was directed, had admitted into his Sect, and Re-baptiz'd a young Man, that uſed to beat his Mother, and threatned to kill her; declaring, towards the end, That he was ready to conferr amicably with him, about the pretended Reaſons of their Separation.

This Euſebius, who, in all Probability, was a Man of Note, that ſided with the Donatiſts, having returned St. Auguſtin this Anſwer, That he would be no Judge betwixt Biſhops; this Saint writ to him again, by the 35*th.* Letter, That he might be on that occaſion, where there was no need of Judging; but only to know, Whether it was by Proculianus his Order, that the young Man was Re-baptiz'd; and, Whether he would enter upon a Conference? He Complains plains likewiſe, That the ſame Biſhop had received, and Re-baptized a Sub-Deacon of the Church of Iſpana; who being accuſed of having an infamous Commerce with ſome Virgins that were conſecrated to God, was gone over to the Donatiſts to avoid the Chaſtiſement which he deſerved; and ever ſince led a ſcandalous Life. St. Auguſtin takes notice, that he dealt not ſo with thoſe that proffered to come into the Church: If they be found guilty of any Crime, they are not admitted, but upon Condition that they ſubmit themſelves to the humiliation of Penance. He ſhews how abominable this Cuſtom of the Donatiſts was, to perſwade ſuch as were to be chaſtiſed for their Diſordets, to come over to them, and be Re-baptized. At laſt he tells Euſebius, That if, by this means, he doth not obtain an Anſwer from Proculianus, he will cauſe theſe Things to be notifi'd to him, formally by a publick Officer: He ſpeaks, beſide, of a Donatiſt Prieſt, who had been troubleſome to one of the Church's Tenants; and of a Woman of that Party that had affronted him. St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

The Thirty ſixth Letter to Caſulanus, concerning Saturday's Faſt, ſeems to have been written before St. Ambroſe's Death, of whom he ſpeaketh, as holding ſtill the See of Milan; whereby it appears, that it belongs to the Year 396, or 397. There he refuteth the Writings of a certain Roman, who had aſſerted, That all Men were obliged to faſt on Saturdays, according to the Practice of the Church of Rome. St. Auguſtin lays down this Rule, That in thoſe Things, where the Scripture hath determined nothing certain, the Cuſtoms received among Chriſtians, or ſettled by our Anceſtors, are to be inſtead of a Law, and no Conteſts ought to be admitted about ſuch Matters. Afterwards he examineth the Writing which Caſulanus ſent him, and ſhews, that it is made up of falſe Suppoſitions, and unconcluding Conſequences. Having anſwered this Writing, he explains his own Notion, ſaying, That he finds indeed, that Faſting is enjoyn'd in the Goſpel, and in the Writings of the Apoſtles: but that neither Jeſus Chriſt, nor the Apoſtles, ever appointed the days wherein we ſhould faſt, nor the days in which we ought to forbear. That he thinks it more convenient not to faſt upon the Saturday; and yet whether we faſt or faſt not, we ought to maintain Peace; and this Precept of the Apoſtle is to be obſerved, Let not him that eateth, condemn him that eateth not; neither let him that eateth not, condemn him that eateth. That there is no great Inconvenience in obſerving the Saturday's Faſt, ſince the Church of Rome obſerves it as well as ſome other Churches: But it would prove a great Scandal to faſt upon Sundays; eſpecially, ſince the Manichees affect to command their Diſciples to faſt upon that day: That notwithſtanding, it were pardonable to faſt upon Sunday, for thoſe who are able to carry Faſting ſo far, as to be more than a week without eating, that ſo they draw nearer to the Faſt of Forty Days. St. Auguſtin ſaith, that ſome have done it, and that he was inform'd, That a certain Perſon had continued faſting full Forty Days. This is hard to be believ'd, yet St Auguſtin ſaith, that he heard it from credible Perſons. Having refuted the Reaſons of the Manichees, who affirming, That Sunday is to be kept as a Faſt; he ſaith, that the Church obſerves faſting upon Wedneſdays and Fridays; becauſe the Jews reſolved upon Wedneſday to put Chriſt to Death, and Executed it upon Friday. That on Saturday, the Body of Jeſus Chriſt having reſted in the Grave, gave occaſion to ſome to forbear faſting on that day, to mark thereby the reſting of Chriſt's Fleſh; and that others faſt upon it, becauſe of that Humiliation of our Saviour: but that the former Celebrate that Faſt once only, on the Saturday before Eaſter, to renew the Remembrance of the Diſciple's Sorrow. All theſe Notions having but little Solidity, he concludes with an excellent Rule which St. Ambroſe had taught him upon that Subject: For having asked his Opinion, concerning his Mother's Scruple, who being at Milan, doubted whether ſhe ought to obſerve Saturday's Faſt, according to the Cuſtom of her own Church, or according to the Cuſtom of the Church of Milan, that obſerved no Faſt on that day. This Holy Biſhop anſwer'd him, Let her do as I do. When I am here, I do not faſt upon Saturdays; when I am at Rome, I faſt upon that day: and ſo in what Church ſoever you are, keep to its Cuſtoms, if you mean to ſcandalize no body, or to be ſcandalized at no body. But becauſe he was then in Africa, and that among the Churches of the ſame Countrey, and even among the Chriſtians of the ſame Church, ſome faſted upon Saturdays, and others not, St. Auguſtin ſaith, That we muſt conform our ſelves to thoſe that bear Rule over the People; and ſo he adviſeth him to whom he writeth, not to reſiſt his Biſhop in that Caſe, but to do as he did.

The Thirty ſeventh Letter to Simplicianus, is a Preface to the Books that he Dedicated to that Biſhop that were written in 397.

In the Thirty eighth to Profuturus, St. Auguſtin being ſick, recommends himſelf to his Prayers, and deſires to know what Biſhop ſucceeded in the Primacy of Numidia, after the death of Megalius Biſhop of Calama, who had been dead Twenty days. In the Council of Carthage, aſſembled in Auguſt, 397. Creſcentianus wrote, that he was Primate of Numidia. Thus, the death of Megalius happening ſome time before, ſerves to fix the date of this Letter. There are two excellent Notions of Morality; the one of Patience, and the other againſt Anger. The former is this: Tho' I ſuffer, yet I am well, becauſe I am as God would have me to be, for when we will not what he wills, 'tis we that are in the fault, and not he, who can neither do, nor permit any thing but what is juſt. The latter is equally valuable: It is incomparably better to ſhut the door of our Heart againſt juſt Anger when it offers to come in, than to give it entrance, being uncertain whether we can turn it out again, when we find it growing from a Thread to a Beam.

The

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

The Thirty ninth Letter, is a Note from St. Jerom, who recommends Præſidius, and preſents his Service to Alypius. It is written in the Year 397.

The Fortieth from St. Auguſtin to St. Jerom, is about their Diſagreement, concerning St. Peter's Action. St. Auguſtin alſo deſires to know the Title of his Book of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, and exhorts him to make a Collection of Origen's Errours, and of thoſe of other Hereticks.

The Forty firſt Letter written in Alypius and St. Auguſtin's Name, to Aurelius Biſhop of Carthage, commending that Biſhop for preferring the good of the Church, before the Honour of the Epiſcopal Order; by permitting, contrary to Cuſtom, that Prieſts ſhould Preach God's Word in his preſence. This Letter was written within few Years after St. Auguſtin was a Biſhop.

The Forty ſecond, is a Note from St. Auguſtin to St. Paulinus, never before Publiſhed, intreating him to write to him, and to ſend him his Book againſt the Gentiles. It is of the latter end of the Year 397.

The Forty third, and forty fourth Letters to Glorius Eleuſius, give an Account of a Conference, which St. Auguſtin held in the City of Tuburſica, with ſome Donatiſts, in the Year 397, or 398. as it is proved in the Preface to the Letters. In the firſt, he produces the Judgments that were given againſt the Donatiſts: He juſtifies Cæcilian's Innocency, and ſhews, that thoſe who condemned him, were ſuſpected Judges; and that the Authors of the Donatiſt Schiſm, were guilty of the Crime which they charged upon others. He adds, That it was to no purpoſe to impute to the Church the pretended Crimes of the dead; ſince the Church may tolerate wicked men, without ceaſing to be a Church. That the Donatiſts themſelves ſuffer among them very diſorderly Perſons; that Maximianus had cauſed Primianus to be condemned, as Majorinus had formerly procured a Sentence againſt Cæcilian, by caballing and Intrigue: That the Sect of the Donatiſts being limited within Africa, and having no Communion with the Churches that were diſperſed throughout the VVorld, cannot be the Catholick Church. In this Letter, there is that famous Sentence concerning the Authority of Councils. Let us ſuppoſe, that Pope Miltiades, and the other Biſhops, who gave Judgment with him, have not judged right, then we may have recourſe to a Plenary Council of the whole Church, in which the cauſe of the Donatiſts ought to be debated again with thoſe that judged it, and their Sentence reverſed, if it ſhall be found that they have given a wrong Judgment.

The Second Letter contains a particular Conference of St. Auguſtin with Fortunius a Donatiſt Biſhop, which was ſpent in Reproaches on both ſides, for the Villainies that were committed on both ſides, without medling with the main Queſtion, of the Schiſm. St. Auguſtin requeſted, that the Diſpute might be ended in a greater Aſſembly, and in what place they pleaſed, where Chriſtians of all Parties might meet. In this Letter, there is an Account of a Letter of the falſe Council of Sardica, of Eaſtern Biſhops; which Fortunius quoted, becauſe it was directed to Donatus: St. Auguſtin not knowing the Story, was perplexed; but finding that St. Athanaſius was condemned in that Letter, he did not mind it.

The Forty fifth Letter, is a Note to Paulinus, written a Year after the foregoing, in 398.

The Forty ſixth, from Publicola to St. Auguſtin, contains ſeveral Caſes of Conſcience, which this Lord propoſed concerning the Oath, whereby they obliged the Barbarians to ſwear by their Gods, That they would preſerve the Fruits of the ground faithfully, which they would not otherwiſe have preſerv'd, had they not been bound by that Oath: About the uſe of Meats, and other Things offered to Idols; and concerning the killing of one that aſſaults, or robs us.

In the next, St. Auguſtin endeavours to decide the Queſtions propoſed by Publicola, concerning thoſe Matters. Upon the firſt he ſaith, That that Oath ought not to be required of the Barbarians, but that uſe may be made of them, after they have taken it; and he that uſes their Service, hath no ſhare in the Oath. that thoſe that ſwear by falſe Gods, are doubly guilty, if they keep not their Oath, both of an abominable Oath, and of Perjury. As to things offered to Idols, he anſwereth Publicola upon ſeveral Particulars, as that there is no danger in making uſe of the Meats offered to them, when it is not known, and it is too nice a ſcruple to forbear the uſe of thoſe things which have been applyed to prophane uſes, if it be not done with reſpect to that. To the Laſt Query he ſaith, That no man ought to kill any Man, upon any Account whatſoever; except perhaps, ſays he, Soldiers, or ſuch as are obliged to it by the Duties of ſome publick Office. But that we are not forbidden to ſecure our ſelves againſt the Violences of others, by making uſe of VValls, and, That if a Thief be killed or wounded with the VVall falling upon him, or he falling from the VVall, the thing is not to be imputed to him that built the VVall. This Letter was written before the Temples of Idols were quite demoliſhed, in 399.

In the Forty eighth Letter to Eudoxius, Abbot of a Monaſtery in the Iſland of Capraria, St. Auguſtin exhorteth both him and his Monks to make good uſe of the Quiet they enjoy'd, that ſo they might be ready to leave it whenſoever the Church ſhould have need of them. This Letter is ſuppoſed to have been writ in the Year 398.

In the 49th. He asketh of Honoratus a Donatiſt Biſhop, a Reaſon, Why the Catholick Church, which ought to be Univerſal over the whole Earth, came to be limited to Africa, and was no where to be found but among the Donatiſts? The time of this Letter is not very certain.

The

The 50th. Letter to the Principal Perſons of the Colony of Suffectum, is a Complaint upon the account of a Murder of 60 Chriſtians whom they Maſſacred, becauſe their Hercules was taken away; He jeſts upon them, promiſing to have another made for them: But he concludes with theſe upbraiding words, But do you alſo reſtore to us that great number of our Brethren, whoſe Lives you have taken away; for if we reſtore to you your Hercules, it is reaſonable you ſhould reſtore them to us. Baronius thinketh that this Maſſacre happened upon occaſion of an Edict made againſt Idolatry in 399. But the Tranſlator of St. Auguſtin's Letters, affirms, That this is none of his, for two Reaſons; Firſt, Becauſe he thinks it is Impertinent; Secondly, Becauſe it is not written in St. Auguſtin's Stile. I am much of his mind as to the Second Point, but I cannot allow the Firſt; for though this Letter does not ſeem to be grave enough for ſuch a Subject, yet the Rallery is ſharp, which ſometimes is more effectual than a Pathetical Diſcourſe. However it is ancient, and of St. Auguſtin's time. St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

In the 51ſt. Letter, St. Auguſtin objects to Criſpinus, a Donatiſt Biſhop at Calama, the Diſſention between the Primianiſts, and the Maximianiſts, as an Anſwer to what the Donatiſts urged againſt the Church. It was written after the Death of Optatus Gildonianus in 399, and before that of Pratextatus, who died in 400, when St. Auguſtin wrote his Books againſt Parmenianus.

In the 52d. He exhorts Severinus, his Kinſman, to forſake the Donatiſts, and to come into the Catholick Church. It may be of the ſame time with the foregoing.

The 53d. is written in St. Auguſtin's Name, and of two of his Collegues, Fortunatus and Alypius, to Generoſus, a Catholick of Conſtantina; and contains an Anſwer to a Letter written by a Donatiſt Prieſt to this Man, to ſeduce him; wherein he pretends to have received an Order by an Angel from Heaven, to oblige him to embrace the Donatiſt's Party.

St. Auguſtin proves in that Letter, That the Donatiſt's Party cannot be the true Church. 1. Becauſe they have no Succeſſion of Biſhops from the Apoſtles. To prove this, he produces the Succeſſion of the Biſhops of Rome, from St. Peter to Anaſtaſius. 2. He quoteth the Acts of Minutius Felix, which ſhew, That Silvianus the Predeceſſor of a Donatiſt Biſhop of Cirta was a Traditor. 3. He urges all the Determinations that had been made againſt the Donatiſts. 4. He confeſſes, That there may be wicked Men in the Church, and urges againſt the Donatiſts the Diſſentions between the Primianiſts, and the Maximianiſts.

The 54th. and 55th. Letters to Januarius, are mentioned in St. Auguſtin's Detractations; where they are placed among the Books that were written about the Year 400: They contain ſeveral very uſeful Deciſions about Church-Diſcipline: He layeth it down at firſt as a Principal Matter, That Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe yoke is eaſie, his burthen light, hath inſtituted but few Sacraments; the obſervation whereof is as Eaſie, as the Wonders which they repreſent to us, are Sublime. Such is Baptiſm, the Communion of his Body and Blood, and other things which the Scripture enjoyns us to obſerve, excepting thoſe that belong to Moſes's Law. But as to thoſe that are obſerved by Tradition, being not written, if they be univerſally obſerved, we ought to look upon them as ſettled either by the Apoſtles themſelves, or by General Councils, whoſe Authority is very great in the Church; as the Annual Celebration of the Paſſion, Reſurrection, and Aſcenſion of Jeſus Chriſt, and of the coming of the Holy Ghoſt, and of other things of this Nature, which are generally obſerved through the whole Church. As to thoſe that are variouſly obſerved in divers places, as Faſting upon Saturdays, which is practiſed in ſome places, and in others not, Communicating every Day, or only upon certain Days; offering daily or only upon Sundays and Saturdays: There is a Liberty for thoſe Things, and for all others of the like Nature. And there is no better Rule for a Wiſe and Prudent Chriſtian, than to follow what he ſeeth practiſed in the Church where he is. For what is clearly ſeen to be neither againſt Faith, nor good Manners, ought to be indifferently received; and the good of a Society requireth, That Men ſhould hold to what they find eſtabliſhed among thoſe with whom they live. He gives an Account of what he had heard St. Ambroſe ſay in that caſe; and having laid down this Rule as the Ground of all that he was to ſay, he ſpeaks particularly of frequent Communion; That ſome believe, That it is good to Communicate daily; but to do it more worthily, certain Days are to be ſet apart, in which they live after a purer and more reſerved manner: Others, on the contrary judge, That when Men are not Guilty of thoſe Sins for which Penance is enjoyned, and themſelves forbidden to come to the Communion of the Body of Jeſus Chriſt; that they ought to come daily to the Euchariſt, as a Remedy to preſerve them ſtill. He reconcileth theſe two, by adding a third Advice; in which he exhorts them both to Peace, and leaves it to every one, to act according as he ſhall be guided by the light both of Faith and of Piety, ſince neither of them Profane the Body of Chriſt; but on the contrary ſtrive to honour it. He propoſes the Examples of Zacchæus and the Centurion, whereof the one preſently received Jeſus Chriſt with Joy into his Houſe; and the other, judged not himſelf worthy, that he ſhould come under his Roof.

Secondly, St. Auguſtin ſaith, That a Traveller ought to obſerve the Cuſtoms of the Place where he is, and not require thoſe of his own Country. Thus when a Man comes into a Country where they Faſt upon Thurſdays in Lent; he ought to Faſt with them, though they Faſt not in his Country; for fear of diſturbing the Peace by unprofitable Diſputes.

Theſe Principles being laid down, he anſwereth Januarius, his Queſtions. The Firſt is about the Hour of Offering upon the Holy Thurſday, Whether it ſhould be done in the Morning or in the Evening? Or, Whether we ought to Faſt and not to Offer till after Supper; becauſe it is ſaid, That it was after Supper that Jeſus Chriſt took Bread; or, whether we ought not to Sup till the Offering be over? St. Auguſtin anſwereth, That this is one of thoſe things which are neither ſettled by Scripture, nor univerſally obſerved throughout the Church; and ſo every one is to follow the Cuſtom of his own Church, there being nothing of either ſide inconſiſtent either with Faith or Good Manners; and that Alterations, though Uſeful in themſelves, cauſe Diſturbances: That Chriſt's Example is no Law in this caſe, otherwiſe the whole Church is in an Error to enjoyn the receiving the Euchariſt faſting, which the Apoſtles firſt received after Supper; but that ſince it ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt, out of reverence to ſo great a Sacrament, that the Body of Jeſus Chriſt ſhould be received into Chriſtian's Mouths before any other Meat: and therefore this Cuſtom is obſerved throughout the World. And yet ſome others believing upon good Grounds. That for a more exact Commemoration of Chriſt's Death, it was convenient to offer and receive once a Year upon Holy Thurſday after Eating: This Cuſtom can no more be Condemned, than that of Bathing upon that Day; neither are they to blame that Faſt and Bathe not; wherefore the Sacrifice is offered twice, once in the Morning for theſe laſt, and once in the Evening for the firſt.

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

In the Second Letter to Januarius, which is the 55th. St. Auguſtin goeth on to treat of the Ceremonies of the Church: Shewing, Why Eaſter is always celebrated after the Fourteenth Day of the Moon in March; Why Chriſt would riſe again the Third Day, and the next Day after the Sabbath; What ſignifieth the Day of Chriſt's Crucifixion, and that in which his Body remained in the Grave, and that of his Reſurrection; Why Lent is kept before the Reſurrection; Why the Holy Ghoſt came down the Fiftieth Day after the Reſurrection, with many other things, whereof he gives Myſtical Reaſons, very edifying and very proper to ſhew how both our Saviour's Death and Reſurrection ought to operate upon us.

He adds ſeveral things concerning the Ceremonies of the Church: He obſerves, That Lent is kept throughout the whole Church, as well as the Solemnity of the Holy Days which were deſigned for thoſe that are newly Baptized: That the Cuſtom of Singing Hallelujah from Eaſter to Whitſuntide is not general; becauſe, though it is Sung every where at that time; yet in ſome Churches it is Sung at other times alſo. As to the Praying Standing at the ſame time, he durſt not affirm it to be an univerſal Cuſtom. The Waſhing of Feet was not conſtantly uſed every where. He approves of Singing in the Church, though it was not univerſally eſtabliſhed. He Condemns thoſe that introduce new Cuſtoms, if they are uſeleſs; and declares how much he is troubled, to ſee thoſe Wholeſome Things neglected which the Church preſcribes; and that all is full of Humane Inſtitutions. He affirms, That endeavour ſhould be uſed, to aboliſh all ſorts of things, which are neither Expreſſed in Scripture, nor Enjoined by Councils, nor Confirmed by the univerſal Practice of the Church; but are done after different manners, according to the difference of Places, though no reaſon can be ſhewed why they were at firſt eſtabliſhed. For, ſaith he, though it doth not appear that they are contrary to the Faith, yet it is ſufficient to make us reject them; That they are ſervile Cuſtoms and Burdens to our Holy Religion: And which from that Liberty, wherein God's Mercy hath eſtabliſhed it, preſcribing but few Sacraments; the deſign and Vertue whereof are clearly Manifeſt, make it fall into a kind of Slavery, worſe than that of the Jews. But as the Church encloſeth much Straw, ſo it is forced to tolerate many things, yet without doing, or approving, yea without palliating, what it finds to be contrary to Faith or Good Manners. He afterwards blameth thoſe who through Superſtition abſtain from certain Meats; and thoſe who, that they may know what they have to do, will at all Adventures open the Book of the Goſpel out of a Superſtitious Cuſtom. Laſtly, He tells Januarius, That all Knowledge muſt have reſpect to Charity, which is the only end of all our Actions.

The 56th. and 57th. Letters were written to Celer, before the Conference at Carthage. He exhorts him to the Study of the Holy Scriptures, and to forſake the Donatiſts.

In the 58th. He applauds Pammachius, a Senator, for cauſing his Vaſſals that were Donatiſts to return to the Church. It ſeems to have been written at the latter end of 401, and ſent by the Legates of the Council of Carthage the ſame Year.

The 59th. Is an Anſwer to Victorinus a Biſhop; who writ to him, to come to a Council which he was then calling. He ſaith, That he could not be there, becauſe he was indiſpoſed; and beſides, he would not have gone otherwiſe, upon the account of his Letter; becauſe Xantippus Biſhop of Tagoſa, pretended to the Primacy, which ought firſt to be determined. It appears by the 65th. Letter, that Xantippus was in the right, and that he was acknowledged Primate in 402. which ſhews that this Letter was written in 401. Now to underſtand this Letter, and all the reſt of St. Auguſtin's, that ſpeak of Primacy or Metropolitical Rights, we are to obſerve, That this Right belonged not in Africa to the Dignity of Towns, but to the Seniority of the Biſhops.

In the 60th. St. Auguſtin acquaints Aurelius Biſhop of Carthage, That Donatus and his Brother had left a Monaſtery againſt his will; and that ſuch falls being ordinary to Men of that Profeſſion, thoſe do the Clergy an Injury, who admit Deſerters from Monaſteries into the Church again. That an ill Monk is ſo far from making a good Churchman, that on the contrary, it is hard to make a good Churchman of a good Monk; becauſe, though there may be Purity enough on the one ſide, yet there is often want of Inſtruction on the other; or at leaſt ſome other Imperfections which may make him unworthy of coming into the Church. Yet Aurelius had ordained Donatus, ſuppoſing that he had left the Monaſtery, by

St. Auguſtin's

St. Auguſtin's order, before that Canon was made; whereby it was forbidden to ordain a Monk of another Dioceſs. Wherefore St. Auguſtin writes to Donatus, That he was at liberty, to do what he pleaſed, if he was not acted by a Spirit of Pride: But as to his Brother, who was the cauſe of his deſertion, You know, ſaith St. Auguſtin, what I think of it, but I have nothing to ſay to you as to that matter; for I dare not contradict the Opinions of ſo Wiſe and Charitable a Man as you are, and whom I ought to reverence ſo much. The Canon mentioned in that Letter, is that of the Council held the 13th. of September 401. and it is in the African Code, Chap. 80. which ſhews, That the Letter was written ſoon after. St. Auguſtin. Tome I.

The 61ſt. is written to Theodorus, to aſſure the Donatiſt Clergy, That if they returned to the Church, they ſhould be admitted to the ſame Rank and Dignity, which they held before in their own Party. St. Auguſtin promiſes it ſolemnly and with an Oath. He confeſſeth, That there was no Evil in the Donatiſts, but only their Separation from the Church: That their Baptiſm, their Ordination, their Vows and all their Sacraments were good; though unprofitable to them whil'ſt they wanted Charity.

Both the following Letters directed to Severus, Biſhop of Milevis, are written about a Clerk, called Timothy, who had ſworn, That he would never leave Severus, though he was of the Church of Hippo, and had performed the Office of Reader in that Dioceſs. St. Auguſtin pretends, That the Oath which this Prieſt had taken, being diſapproved by his Biſhop, and not received by him with whom he had Sworn to abide, did not oblige him, nor free him from the Obligation which he was under to remain in that Church to which he belong'd. Yet he dealt very civilly with Severus; and though he cauſed Timothy to be ordained Sub-Deacon at Suſanna, which belonged to the Dioceſs of Hippo, yet he ſent him back to Severus, that he might have no occaſion to complain of him. It was upon this occaſion, probably, that a Canon was made in the Council of Milevis, of the 27*th.* of September, 402. whereby a Biſhop is forbidden to detain a Clerk, who had performed the Office of Reader in another Dioceſs.

In the 64*th.* Letter to Quintianus, he exhorts him not to be Impatient, becauſe Aurelius deferred to give Judgment in his Cauſe; declaring, That he could not admit him to his Communion before Aurelius had admitted him to his; adviſing him, likewiſe, not to ſuffer the Apocryphal Books to be read in his Church; and Anſwers the Complaint that was made againſt St. Auguſtin, for receiving into his Monaſtery, Perſons of another Dioceſs, againſt the Canon of the Council of Carthage, that was held in the Year 401.

In the 65*th* Letter, St. Auguſtin acquaints Xantippus, Primate of Numidia, That he had given Judgment againſt Abundantius the Prieſt, who was convicted of ſtaying, and eating upon a Faſt-Day in the Houſe of a Woman of ill Reputation. He ſaith farther, That he had admoniſhed him, and aſſured him, That according to the Canon of the Council of Carthage, in 401. he might, within the Year, have his Cauſe examin'd again: but he declares to Xantippus, That what Judgment ſoever, might intervene in his behalf, yet he would never truſt him with a Church in his Juriſdiction. It is obſerved in that Letter, that Eaſter Day, in that Year, wherein it was written, happen'd upon the 6*th.* of April, which is an infallible Proof, That this Letter was written in the Year 402.

In the 66*th.* St. Auguſtin upbraideth Criſpinus, a Donatiſt Biſhop at Calama, becauſe he Rebaptized thoſe of Mappalia, whom with Threatnings, he had forced to embrace his Communion. It appears by the Second Book againſt Petilianus, written in 402, that this happened not long before that ſame Year.

The 67*th.* and 68*th.* are Letters which St. Auguſtin, and St. Jerom writ to one another, in the Year 402.

In the 69*th.* both Alypius, and St. Auguſtin, exhort Caſtorius to fill up the Biſhoprick of Vaga or Bagaia, which was then vacant by the Demiſſion of his Brother Maximian; who, for Quietneſs ſake, being obliged to quit the Biſhoprick, had generouſly done it, as appears likewiſe by a Canon of the Council of Milevis, in the Year 402. which is the 88*th.* in the African Code.

The 71*ſt.* 72*d.* 73*d.* 74*th.* and 75*th.* of St. Auguſtin, to St. Jerom, and of St. Jerom, to St. Auguſtin, are about that Diſpute that was between them: Of which we gave an Account in the Abridgment of St. Jerom's Works.

The 76*th.* Is an Exhortation, in the Church's Name, to all Donatiſts, which contains the moſt prevailing Motives to make them return to the Church. It was written after the Donatiſt Biſhops had refuſed a Conference that was offered, in purſuance of the Order of the general Council of Africa, in the Year 403.

The 77*th.* and 78*th.* are concerning a Scandal that happened in the Church of Hippo. One Spes of St. Auguſtin's Monaſtery, had been accuſed of Uncleanneſs, by Boniface, a Prieſt. This Man charged the Crime upon the Prieſt; affirming, That he was the guilty Perſon. St. Auguſtin finding no Proof to Convict either of them, remited the Judgment to God. But Spes deſiring to come into the Clergy; and being denyed by St. Auguſtin, inſiſted, That if he might not be admitted, becauſe he had been accuſed, neither was Boniface to continue in the Order of Prieſthood. St. Auguſtin thought fit to oblige them both, to go to the Grave of St. Felix of Nola, that God might be pleaſed to diſcover the Truth by ſome Miracle. Now he intended, that this ſhould be kept Secret: but the Thing taking vent, St. Auguſtin wrote about it to the Clergy of Hippo, and to Two private Men, That none ought to be diſturbed at the Scandals happening in the Church; That no Man ſhould be raſhly Condemned; That there was no

Proof

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

Proof againſt the Prieſt Boniface: So that he could neither be Condemned nor Degraded before Conviction; yet he profers, till the thing be cleared, not to let the Name of Boniface be read with the Names of the other Prieſts, if that be judged convenient, not to ſcandalize the Weak: and ſo much the rather, becauſe it ſignify'd but little to Boniface, not to have his Name read in a Table that was written with his Hand, if the Impurity of his Conſcience did not cauſe it to be blotted out of the Book of Life.

The Seventy ninth is directed to a Manichæan Prieſt, who is thought to be that Felix with whom St. Auguſtin had a Conference in 404. whom he challenges to Anſwer that Difficulty wherewith he had exerciſed another Manichee, called Fortunatus.

By the Eightieth Letter, to St. Paulinus, he entreateth him to explain more clearly than he had done already, How it may be known what that is which God requireth of us, ſince we are always to preferr it before what we would our ſelves? This was written in the Year 405.

The Eighty firſt, is a Letter of Complement, from St. Jerom to St. Auguſtin, concerning the Diſpute that was betwixt them. He exhorts him to give over ſuch Queſtions, and to exerciſe himſelf about the Scriptures.

The Eighty ſecond, is the laſt of St. Auguſtin's Letters to St. Jerom, about their Conteſts. He inſiſts eſpecially upon what concerns the Expoſition of the Epiſtle to the Galatians; having delared, "That he valued none but Canonical Books ſo far, as to believe that the Authors of "them were never deceived: And as for other Authors, how holy ſoever they might be, he "doth not think, that what they ſay is a Rule to him, becauſe they believed it to be true; "but that he dependeth no further upon them, than the Reaſons and Authorities of Canonical "Books, which they lean upon, perſuade him that their Aſſertions are conformable to Truth. Having laid down this Principle, he proves, That St. Paul's correcting of St. Peter was ſerious: becauſe St. Paul ſaith it in his Epiſtle to the Galatians; at the beginning of which, he declares, that he lyes not; and takes God to witneſs what he ſaith. He endeavours to anſwer St. Jerom's chief Reaſon, grounded upon this, That it is incredible, that St. Paul would reprove in St. Peter what he did himſelf, by ſhewing that the Circumſtances were very different. He maintains, That the Ceremonies of the Law being of themſelves indifferent, neither good nor bad, the Uſe of them becomes good or bad, according to Times and Occaſions: That they were neceſſary to the Jews, before Chriſt came: That they ſignified, That he being come, it was not convenient immediately to forbid them, as Sacrilegious, and that it was ſufficient to let them die, and go out of themſelves; but that they were now neither to be looked upon nor practiſed, as neceſſary to Salvation: That St. Peter's Fearfulneſs having made him obſerve Legal Ceremonies, in ſuch Circumſtances as might have perſuaded others that he believed them neceſſary; St. Paul was in the right, to accuſe him of not walking uprightly, according to the Truth of the Goſpel, and to oblige the Gentiles to Judaize; whereas St. Paul could not be reproached with the like Fault, ſince he had kept them, only to ſhew that they were not to be condemned, as Criminal Superſtitions: And yet, That it is not now permitted to obſerve theſe Ceremonies, under any pretence, or for any purpoſe whatſoever, he does not examine the caſe of an officious Lye, and doth not decide whether it is permitted to tell a Lye at any time. He leaves to every Man to take what Side he pleaſes, provided that this be believed and laid down as an unalterable Principle, That there is no Lye in the Authors of the holy Scriptures. He ſets St. Cyprian and St. Ambroſe againſt the Authors that St. Jerom had alledged to juſtifie his Opinion; but chiefly he citeth St. Paul againſt them, who ſaith and declares at the beginning of his Epiſtle, That he lyes not; and, That God is Witneſs of the Truth of what he affirms. He concludes his Argument with a Complement, and Expreſſions of the high Eſteem and Reſpect that he had for St. Jerom: He approves of his Tranſlations of the Scripture, propoſing withal ſome Objections concerning the Correction of the Hebrew Text, repreſenting the difficulty of having his new Tranſlation publickly read to People who were accuſtomed to that from the Septuagint, which was authoriſed by the Apoſtles themſelves, who made uſe of it.

The Argument of the Eighty third Letter, as it is explained by the Tranſlator, is this; The Men of Thiana having renounced the Donatiſts Schiſm, they wanted a Prieſt to govern them: One Honoratus was Choſen, and for that purpoſe taken out of the Monaſtery at Tagaſta, and was Ordained Prieſt of Thiana. The Cuſtom was, That thoſe who enter'd into Monaſteries, did begin with parting with all they had, for the benefit of the Poor, or of the Monaſtery it ſelf: That if any offer'd to come in, that was not yet in a Condition to diſpoſe of his Eſtate, they refuſed him not, provided he was ſincerely reſolved to execute the Order as ſoon as he could. Honoratus was in this Condition, and Owner of his Eſtate when he was Ordained Prieſt of Thiana. The Queſtion was, Who ſhould have this Eſtate? The Men of Thiana pretended to have it by the Rule of thoſe Times: That the Goods of ſuch as were Ordained Prieſts of any Church, ſhould be converted to the Uſe of that Church. Alypius, on the contrary, pretended, That Honoratus's Eſtate belonged to the Monaſtery of Tagaſta; and was afraid, that if the Church of Thiana had it, and it were look'd upon as Honoratus's Eſtate, that Example would ſerve for a Pretence to thoſe that ſhould come into Monaſteries, to deferr the parting with their Eſtates; wherefore his Opinion was, That at leaſt they ſhould divide it, and that the Church of Thiana ſhould have but half. St. Auguſtin tells him, That he was not of that mind, but deſireth him to Sign the Letter which he had written to the Church of Thiana; whereby he utterly renounced all Pretenſions upon Honoratus's Eſtate; and he profers fers to return Half of it to the Monastery of Tagasta, when any considerable Donation should be conferred upon the Monastery of Hippo. This Letter is placed in the Year 405.

St. Augustin. Tome II.

In the Eighty fourth Letter, he excuses himself towards Novatus, (who is supposed to be the Bishop of Sitifi, that was present at the Conference in Carthage,) for detaining Lucillius the Deacon, his Brother, because he understood and spake the Punick Language well; the Use whereof being common at Sitifi, and not at Hippo, it was easie for Novatus to find a Churchman in those Parts, to Preach in that Tongue; whereas St. Augustin could not so readily meet with such a One in his Country. Thus is this Letter to be understood, as the Translator observeth, after a very Learned Man. It seems to belong to the same Year as the foregoing.

In the Eighty fifth, St. Augustin reproves Paul of Catagnæ, for parting with his own Estate when he was made a Bishop, that he might abuse the Revenue of his Church, to live more at ease; telling him, That so long as he liveth thus, he will not communicate with him. In this Letter there is this excellent Advice; Non est Episcopatus artificium transigendæ vitæ fallacis: "Episcopacy ought not to be look'd upon as an Establishment, or a Means to procure the "deceitful Pleasures of this Life." This Paul being dead before the Year 408. as is plain by the Ninety sixth Letter, this Letter must have been written about the Year 405.

In the Eighty sixth, he solliciteth Cæcilian, Governor of Numidia, to restrain the Donatists about Hippo, as he had done in other Places under his Government. It was written after the Edict of Honorius, of the Year 403. before Cæcilianus was created Præfectus Prætorio, in the Year 409.

In the Eighty seventh Letter, that was written about the same time, St. Augustin presses Emeritus, a Donatist Bishop at Cæsarea, to tell the Reasons which made him separate from the Church; and refuteth those which he used to alledge.

The Eighty eighth was written by St. Augustin, in the Name of the Clergy of Hippo, to Januarius, a Donatist Bishop, after the Donatists Deputies, that were sent in 406. to the Emperors, were rejected. It contains several Complaints against the Violences of some Donatist Clerks; and the authentick Acts of what happen'd in Constantine's time, concerning the business of the Donatists. About the end of the Letter, they propose a Conference.

The Eighty ninth Letter, to Festus, is much upon the same Subject. St. Augustin begins, by justifying the Emperor's Edicts against the Donatists: Then he relates the Original of that Schism, and the Judgments whereby it was condemned. He proves, That the Donatists had no Grounds for their Separation, nor for Re-baptizing Catholicks. Lastly, He giveth Festus notice, That the People about Hippo still persisted in the Schism, notwithstanding his Letters, and continued their Violences.

The Ninetieth Letter is from an Heathen, one Nectarius, who interceded with St. Augustin for his Fellow-Citizens that dwelt at Calama, who had sacrificed to Idols, contrary to the Emperor's Inhibitions, and offered Violence to some Christians. The Reason that this Pagan uses to prevail with St. Augustin, is, That it is the Duty of a Bishop to do nothing but Good to Mankind: Not to meddle with their Affairs, unless it be to make them better, and to intercede with God to pardon their Faults. Baronius is of Opinion, That this Letter was written immediately after the Laws of 399. In the last Edition it is placed in the Year 408. and what is said there of the Laws newly published, is apply'd to the Law of the 24th. of November, 407. directed to Curtius; which is the 19th. of the 10th. Title of the 16th. Book of the Theodosian Code.

The next Letter is St. Augustin's Answer to Nectarius; whereby he exhorts him to turn Christian; promising, That though the Violences of those at Calama had proceeded very far, yet he would contribute, as much as the Interest of publick Security would permit, to have them treated gently. He owns and approves the Maxim which he alledged concerning Episcopal Meekness; yet he asserts, That there must be Examples: The most guilty cannot be spared: That Christians do not desire to see them punished out of Revenge, but Charity obligeth them to provide for the future; yet however, they do not desire the Death of those that abused them, they desire only their Conversion: And they are but little concerned for the Losses which they sustained, but they seek after their Souls. This is (saith he in the Conclusion of his Letter) what we are seeking with the Price of our Blood: This is that Harvest which we would make plentiful at Calama; or at least, that what happened in that place, might not hinder us to make it any where else.

In the Ninety second, to Italica, a Lady, he comforts her upon the Death of her Husband; telling her, That God cannot be seen, either in this World or in the next, with bodily Eyes. This Letter is before the Ninety ninth, directed to the same Lady, which is written in 408.

The Ninety third, to Vincentius, a Donatist Bishop, containeth several Reasons to show that Secular Authority, and the Severity of the Laws, may be used against Schismaticks, to oblige them to return into the Church. One of the chiefest, is, The Usefulness and the good Effects which the Terror of the Imperial Laws had produced, since they caused the Conversion of several whole Cities.

St. Augustin confesses, That this Reason affected him most; That by such Examples his Collegues brought him to their Opinions: That it was his Opinion formerly, That no Man ought to be forced: That Words only were to be used; for otherwise they could make none but counterfeit Catholicks: But that having withstood all Reasons, he finally yielded to Experience. That the Laws had brought back those that continued in the Schism, only by Interest, Fear, Negligence, or other Conſiderations of the ſame Nature. Afterwards, he exhorts Vincentius to return to the Church; ſhewing, That the true Church is that which is ſpred throughout the Earth. He Anſwers what the Donatiſts objected, to prove that it might be comprehended within a ſmall number of Righteous Men; He ſhews, That it muſt neceſſarily be mix'd with both bad and good; And at laſt, declares againſt Re-baptizing. This Letter was written about the Year 408.

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

The 94th. Letter, is by St. Paulinus Biſhop of Nola; and the 95th. is St. Auguſtin's Anſwer to that of Paulinus. He diſcourſeth of the Nature of Bodies after the Reſurrection; and of that of Angels. It is incertain whether they have Bodies, or whether they are pure Spirits. Theſe Letters are of the Year 408.

The 96th. Letter, is an Excellent Example; ſhewing, How little Biſhops in St. Auguſtin's time, were given to Intereſt. Paulus Biſhop of Catagnæ, had bought an Eſtate in the Church's Name, with a Summ which he recovered; though he had Surrendered his own Eſtate for what he owed to the Royal Treaſure. Boniface his Succeſſor, not willing to benefit himſelf by that Fraud, declared the thing as it was; chuſing either to have nothing, or to receive the whole from the Emperor's Liberality, rather than keep a thing gotten by Fraud. St. Auguſtin writeth this Letter to Olympius, Surveyor of the Buildings, to obtain by his means this Gratification from the Emperour, in the behalf of Boniface. Olympius not being in that Employment before the Death of Stilico, which happen'd in Auguſt 408, this Letter cannot have been written till towards the latter end of that Year. To the ſame Magiſtrate, and at the ſame time, was the following written; whereby he prayeth him to ſee the Laws maintained that were Publiſhed in Africa, in the time of Stilico his Predeceſſor; and to let the Church's Enemies know, That theſe Laws having been Enacted freely by the Emperour himſelf, they were in full force after Stilico's Death.

In the 98th. to Boniface, St. Auguſtin reſolves a Queſtion that was made to him by that Biſhop, namely, How the Faith of Parents can ſerve for their Children that are admitted to Baptiſm, though the incredulity of Parents can be no Prejudice to their Children, when they offer them to Dæmons. St. Auguſtin Anſwers, That it is moſt certain, that after a Child is born, he partakes no longer of other Men's Sins; but before, he is partaker of Adam's Sin, from which he is delivered by the Operation of the Holy Ghoſt in the Sacrament of Baptiſm. That Water repreſents outwardly, both the Myſtery and Grace, but the Holy Spirit produces the Effect. That neither the Faith of Parents, nor yet of Godfathers is the cauſe of this Grace; but the Prayer of the whole Church, that begets Chriſt in each Member. In which ſence, the Godfathers Anſwer for the Child, that he believes, and reſolves to live Chriſtianly, becauſe he receiveth the Sacrament of Faith, and of Converſion to God. He explains this laſt Notion by ſeveral Examples, and among the reſt he alledgeth that of the Euchariſt, ſaying, "That as the "Sacrament of Chriſt's Body, is in ſome ſort the Body of Chriſt; ſo the Sacrament of Faith is "Faith it ſelf; and in this ſence it is ſaid, That whoſoever hath the Sacrament of Faith, hath "Faith it ſelf". This Compariſon would not be very Juſt, if St. Auguſtin did not conſider ſomething elſe in the Euchariſt, beſides the external and ſenſible part.

The 99th. is written to the Lady Italica, on the occaſion of the firſt Siege of Rome, by Alaricus in 408.

In the 100dth. Letter, St. Auguſtin intreateth Donatus, Proconſul of Africa, to reſtrain the Donatiſts; but not to puniſh them with Death. And having expreſſed himſelf with the moſt Pathetical terms that can be uſed to oblige him to Meekneſs, he concludes with theſe curious words: It is a more troubleſome than profitable Labour, to compel Men to forſake a great Evil, rather by Force, than by Inſtruction. This Letter was written at the time when they publiſhed new Edicts againſt the Donatiſts in 408.

The 101ſt. Letter to Memorius a Biſhop, was joyn'd to the Sixth Book of his Treatiſe of Muſick, which St. Auguſtin ſent by it ſelf to that Biſhop, becauſe he could not find his other Books upon the ſame Subject, that Memorius deſired. This Memorius was Father to Julianus, who writ afterwards againſt St. Auguſtin, who was now a Deacon. St. Auguſtin gives him great Commendations in that Letter.

The 102d. is placed in the Retractations, amongſt the Books compoſed before the Year 411. There St. Auguſtin anſwereth Six Queſtions propoſed by an Heathen to a Prieſt called Deogratias.

The Firſt is, concerning the Reſurrection; Whether that which is promiſed to us, ſhall be like that of Jeſus Chriſt, or like that of Lazarus; And whether after the Reſurrection, Men ſhall be Subject to the Infirmities and Neceſſities of the Fleſh. St. Auguſtin anſwereth, That our Reſurrection ſhall be like that of Jeſus Chriſt, and that after the Reſurrection, we ſhall be freed from all cares and inconveniencies of corruptible Fleſh.

The Second Queſtion is, If none can be Saved but by Jeſus Chriſt, what is become of thoſe that died before his coming? What is become of ſo many Millions of Souls, againſt whom nothing can be objected, ſince Chriſt had not yet appeared among Men? Why did not the Saviour come ſooner? Let it not be ſaid, that the Jewiſh Law ſupplied that want; for there was already an infinite number of Men upon Earth, when it was given, and yet it was neither known, nor practiſed but in a ſmall corner of the World.

St.

St. Auguſtin having ſhewed, That the Pagans were not leſs perplexed, with that Queſtion, than the Chriſtians, anſwers, That Jeſus Chriſt being the Word of God, who Governed the World from the beginning, all thoſe that knew him, and lived according to his Precepts, might be ſaved by the Faith which they had, that he was in God, and ſhould come upon the Earth. He adds, That Jeſus Chriſt would not appear in the World, and cauſe his Doctrine to be Preached, but at ſuch a time, and in ſuch Places, where he knew, that there were thoſe who ſhould believe in him; and that he foreſaw, that in all other Places, or at any other Times, Men would be ſuch as they have been, though the Goſpel had been Preached to them. This Notion was very favourable to the Semipelagians, and they failed not to make uſe of it; as appears by Hilary's Letter to St. Auguſtin. But this Father anſwered them in the 9 Chap. of the Book of the Predeſtination of the Saints; That he did make uſe of the Word Fore-knowledge only, becauſe he thought it was ſufficient to convince the Infidelity of the Pagans who made this Objection; and therefore he omitted to ſpeak of that which is hid within God's Counſels of the Motives of that Diſpenſation: And ſo when he ſaid, That Jeſus Chriſt would not ſhow himſelf, nor cauſe his Doctrine to be Preached but in thoſe places, and at ſuch a time, he knew thoſe Perſons liv'd, who ſhould believe in him: It is as if he had ſaid, That Jeſus Chriſt did not ſhow himſelf unto Men, nor ſuffer his Doctrine to be Preached, but in thoſe places and at that time, when he knew, that thoſe ſhould live who were Elected before the Creation. He expounds again in the ſame place, what he had ſaid in this Letter: That the Chriſtian Religion never failed of being Preached to thoſe that were worthy; and, that if it failed any, it was becauſe they were not worthy of it. Saying, That he had not declared his Opinion concerning that which renders Men worthy, whether it is the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, or their own Will.

This is the Third Queſtion: Why ſhould they condemn Victims, Incenſe and Sacrifices, ſeeing that from the beginning God was honoured after this manner; and that he is repreſented as having need of the Firſt-Fruits of the Earth?

Anſw. God hath no need either of our Offerings, or our Sacrifices. The Service we yield to him turns to our own profit, and not to his. At all times Sacrifices have been offered to God, but they ought only to have been offered to the true God. The Sacrifices that are offered to Creatures are Sacrileges. Both the Sacrifices and the Sacraments of the Old Law are changed, and this Alteration was foretold. The New Teſtament is eſtabliſhed upon the Sacrifice of the High-Prieſt; that is, upon the Effuſion of the Blood of Chriſt himſelf; and now all Chriſtians offer a Sacrifice that is ſuitable to the Manifeſtation of the New Covenant.

The Fourth Queſtion is concerning the Eternity of Puniſhments; againſt which this Maxim of the Goſpel was objected; With what meaſure ye mete, it ſhall be meaſured to you. Every meaſure, ſay they, is limited to a certain ſpace of time; What mean then thoſe Threatnings of Eternal Sufferings?

St. Auguſtin ſhews, That this Queſtion is idle and unworthy of a Philoſopher; That it is impertinent to ſay that all meaſures are limited by a certain ſpace of time, ſince there are other meaſures, beſides thoſe of time; That it is a common Saying, That a Man ſhall be dealt withal, as he dealeth with others, though he receiveth not preciſely the ſame Treatment; That theſe words of Jeſus Chriſt, It ſhall be meaſured unto you, after the ſame manner that ye meaſure unto others; ſignifie only, That Men ſhall be Puniſhed or Rewarded, by the ſame Will which made them do Good or Evil to others; that is, by the remorſe of their own Conſciences; That Sins and Puniſhments are not meaſured by time, but by the quality of the Will; That the Puniſhment of Sin is eternal; becauſe, as the Sinner deſired to enjoy Pleaſure for ever, it is juſt that he ſhould be Puniſhed for it for ever.

The Fifth Queſtion was not difficult to ſolve. It was ſuppoſed that Solomon had ſaid, That there was no Son of God. St. Auguſtin anſwers, That Solomon never ſaid it, but the contrary.

The Laſt, is a Serious Anſwer to the Jeſts of the Heathens, about the Hiſtory of Jonas.

The 103d. Letter, is a ſecond Letter of Nectarius of Calama, who reneweth the ſame Requeſt that he made in the 90th. for Pardon of his Heathen Countrymen, who had miſuſed the Chriſtians.

The 104th. is an Anſwer of St. Auguſtin, where he particularly refuteth the Opinion of the Stoicks, concerning the Equality of Sins. St. Auguſtin received Nectarius his Letter upon the 27th. of March 409. and it is probable that he returned an Anſwer inſtantly.

The 105th. is an Exhortation to the Donatiſts. After he had juſtified the Severity of the Imperial Laws, he examines the ordinary Points of Controverſie that were in diſpute with thoſe Schiſmaticks; Proving, 1. That the Validity of Baptiſm dependeth not upon the holineſs of the Miniſter. 2. That the Catholick Church cannot be confin'd to the Donatiſts. 3. That the Wicked, who were tolerated in the Catholick Church, could not hinder it from being the true Church.

In the 106th. St. Auguſtin intreateth Macrobius, a Donatiſt Biſhop at Hippo, not to Rebaptize a Sub-deacon that was gone over to their Party. St. Auguſtin gave this Letter to Maximus and Theodorus, who delivered it into Macrobius his own hands; who made them no Anſwer, but that he could not refuſe to give the Faith to them that came to him; which Anſwer, they returned to this Saint by the 107th. Letter. St. Auguſtin immediately ſet Pen to Paper to reprove that behaviour of the Donatiſts, as he doth by the 108th Letter; wherein he proves, That Baptiſm is not to be repeated, alledging chiefly the Example of the Donatiſts themſelves, who approved approved the Baptiſm of the Maximianiſts, whom themſelves had condemned and put out of their Communion. The time of this Diſpute with Macrobius, is not very certain; yet it is ſuppoſed to have happened in 409.

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

The 109th. is a Letter of Complement written to St. Auguſtin by Severus Biſhop of Milevis, wherein he tells of the Pleaſure that he found in reading his Works. He gives him high Commendations, eſpecially for his love towards God and towards his Neighbour. St. Auguſtin anſwers him by the 110th, in a very modeſt and civil manner. The time of theſe Letters is not well known.

The 111th. is a Conſolatory Epiſtle, to Victorianus the Prieſt, concerning thoſe Miſeries which the Barbarians, who then waſted both Italy and Spain in the Year 409. cauſed a great number of holy Perſons and Virgins conſecrated to God to Suffer.

In the 112th. Letter, St. Auguſtin exhorteth Donatus, who was leaving the Proconſulſhip, in 410, to renounce the Pomps of the World, and to follow Jeſus Chriſt, and to bring back to the Communion of the Church, thoſe that had any Dependency upon him.

The 113th. is a Letter of Recommendation to Creſconius, concerning Frumentius his Buſineſs, who was taken out of the Sanctuary of a Church, whither he was fled to ſecure himſelf from the Purſuit of one of whom he Rented a Foreſt.

The Three following Letters are about the ſame Buſineſs. St. Auguſtin cites a Law that was made by Honorius the Emperor, the 21ſt. of January, 410. ſo that theſe Letters were written after that Year.

The 117th. is a Note from Dioſcorus, to which he joins ſeveral Queſtions to St. Auguſtin, taken out of Cicero's Dialogues. St. Auguſtin Anſwers him in the next, That it is unworthy of a Biſhop to ſpend time in explaining ſuch kind of Queſtions. He treateth afterwards of the Deſign which Men ought to have in their Studies, and of the chiefeſt Good. He Rejects the Philoſophet's Opinions upon that Subject; and ſhews, That God is the chiefeſt Good. He exhorteth Dioſcorus to ſtudy Chriſtian Philoſophy, diſcovering the Blindneſs and the Errours of the Heathen Philoſophers. St. Auguſtin ſpeaking in this Letter of the Hereticks he was to Diſpute with, ſaith nothing of the Pelagians; which makes it probable, that it was written before the Year 411. but it could not be written long before, becauſe he declares there, that he was growing Grey.

The 119th. containeth Conſentius his Queſtions concerning the Myſtery of the Trinity. And the 120th. containeth St. Auguſtin's Anſwers, who expounds the Faith, touching that Myſtery. He treateth there of Faith, and Underſtanding.

The 121ſt. Letter is written by St. Paulinus, who propoſes to St. Auguſtin ſome Queſtions upon certain Paſſages of the Pſams, of St. Paul's Epiſtles, and the Goſpels.

In the 122d. St. Auguſtin excuſeth himſelf to his Clergy, and People, becauſe he was obliged to be abſent. He exhorts them to diminiſh nothing of what they were wont to do for the Poor. This Letter was written in the Year 410. when Alaric took Rome. I ſuppoſe alſo, that St. Jerom hinted at the Calamity, in Ænigmatical Terms, in the following Letter, which is the laſt of the Second Claſſe of St. Auguſtin's Letters.

The Third Claſſe.

THE Letters of the Third Claſſe are all thoſe that St. Auguſtin writ from the Year 411. to the end of his Life.

The Firſt, which is the 124th. is directed to Albina, old Melania's Daughter, to Pinianus, and to the younger Melania, who had retired into Sicily, and from thence into Africa, after the Death of Rufinus, in the Year 411. and were come to Tagaſta, when St. Auguſtin wrote this Letter; whereby he excuſeth himſelf, that the Condition of the Church at Hippo, rather than the Severity of the Winter, hindred him from coming to them.

Pinianus being come to Hippo, to ſee St. Auguſtin, as he was celebrating the Holy Myſteries, the People demanded, that he ſhould be ordained Prieſt, and obliged him to Swear, That he ſhould not leave the Town of Hippo; and that, if he took Orders, he would be ordained no where, but at Hippo. Albina, and her Children, complained of that Violence; believing, that the Men of Hippo had no other Deſign in doing ſo, but to fix in their Church ſo Rich a Man as Pinianus was; pretending, that the Oath forced upon him was not binding. St. Auguſtin writes to Alypius, the 125th. Letter, to juſtifie both himſelf, and his People, of the Suſpicions entertained of him upon that Subject, praying Alypius to remove them. He ſpeaketh afterwards of Pinianus his Oath, and of the Obligation to keep it; whereupon, he layeth down the following Principles about the Matter of Oaths. Firſt, That none ought to Swear to a Thing forbidden, whatſoever Fear he may be in of Death if he Sweareth not; and that he ought rather to ſuffer Death. 2. That when a Man has Sworn, by conſtraint, to a lawful Thing, he is bound to Diſcharge it; and cannot diſpenſe himſelf from it, without being guilty of Perjury. 3. That the Bond of an Oath is performed, not when we do what is ſignified by the Letter, or the Terms, wherein the Oath is expreſſed, but when we obſerve what the Impoſer of the Oath expects, if it be known when the Oath is taken: and ſo a Man may be Perjured in keeping what

what is signified by the Terms of the Oath, if he defeats the Expectation of him to whom the Oath is made; and that, on the contrary, this being done, there is no Perjury, though the Letter of the Oath is not observed in its proper Sence. From whence he concludes, That though Pinianus is not bound to abide at Hippo, as if that City were made a Prison for him; yet he is obliged, by his Oath, to dwell there as an Inhabitant, with Liberty to go and come, but not to go away never to return. St. Augustin. Tome II.

In the following Letter to Albina, St. Augustin justifies himself from the Accusation that was made against his People, for detaining Pinianus out of Covetousness. He saith, That such Imputations reflect upon him, because he is Administrator of the Church's Goods, whereas the People neither disposes of, nor profits by them. Wherefore, to clear himself absolutely, he is obliged to make Oath, and to take God to witness, as he doth in this Letter, That the Administration of the Church's Goods is a Charge to him. He discourses again of the Validity of Pinianus his Oath, and of the Obligation he lay under to execute it.

The 127th. to Armentarius, and Paulina his Wife, was written soon after Rome was taken. He exhorts them not to regard this present Life; shewing also, how much they were obliged to keep the Vow of Continency, which they had made. This Letter is full of most Excellent Thoughts against the Love of the World, and of Life. Among other things, he particularly takes notice, That if, to prolong this Transitory Life, Men are not afraid to take so much Pains, to undergo so many Dangers, and Losses, much more ought they to expose themselves, for that Life which is Eternal: That all the Pains we take in this Life, to prevent Death, tend to nothing else but to keep us in Misery; that we constantly avoid the present Death; that we may be exposed to the Fear of all possible Ones. What (saith he) do not those Men endure, whom the Physicians force to endure, Fire, and the Knife; and, What is the Consequence of so many Pains? Is it to escape Death? No! but to die a little later. The Pains are certain, but the preserving of Life is uncertain; and very often the Patient dies in those Torments, to which he exposes himself for fear of Death; and chusing to suffer not to die, instead of chusing to die to prevent suffering, it happens that they meet with Death in the midst of those Sufferings, which they chuse to undergo to avoid it ∴ ∴ But the greatest Evil, and the most to be abhorred, is, That to lengthen this wretched Life a little, we displease God who is the Spring of true Life. ∴ ∴ ∴ ∴ Besides, tho such a miserable Life, as this is, could continue for ever, yet were it not to be compared with an happy Life, tho' never so short. In the mean time, the love of this Life, as short as miserable, makes us lose a Life that is not only Happy, but Eternal; tho' in that very Life, which we so unhappily love, we seek for nothing but what we may be secure of in the other, and which the love of this makes us lose. For what do we love, by loving a Life so wretched, and so short? It is not the misery of it, since we desire to be happy, nor the shortness of it, since we fear to see the end. We love it therefore only because it is Life; and this alone, makes us love it, tho' short and miserable. From these Principles he concludes, That we should love nothing but eternal Life; shake off all Clogs, and Cares of present Things; cleave solely to Jesus Christ, to whom we should have our Recourse, as to the chief Physician, who alone is able to ease our Pains, and satisfie our Desires.

The 128th. Letter, is a Declaration of the Catholick Bishops to Marcellinus. The Emperor's Commissioner, appointed to be at the Conference betwixt the Catholick Bishops, and the Donatists, by which Declaration they submit themselves to all the Conditions of the Order, given by Marcellinus; and give their consent, That in case the Donatist Bishops yield in the Conference, and be convicted of Schism, yet they should be maintained in their Dignity; so that in the Places, where there was a Bishop of each Communion, they should Govern jointly, till the Death of the one; or that both should give up, and a Third be chosen: And, that though they granted this Advantage to the Donatists, yet they made no Conditions for themselves, but were contented to lose their Dignity, if the Donatists had the better in the Conference.

Marcellinus, by his Order, had appointed a certain Number of Bishops of each Party, to be at the Conference; but the Donatists desiring to be all there, made a Solemn Declaration. The Catholick Bishops gave their Consent by the 129th. Letter. The time of these Two last cannot be doubted, seeing they relate to the Conference at Carthage, appointed the 14th. of October, 410. and began the 1st of June, 411.

The 130th. is directed to the illustrious and pious Lady Proba Falconia, the Widow of Probus, Præfectus Prætorio, and Consul in 371. who withdrew into Africa after the taking of Rome. This Holy Widow having desired St. Augustin to write to her concerning Prayer, this Saint gives her, by this Letter, excellent Instructions about the manner how we ought to Pray, and the necessary Disposition to do it well. He discourses there of the Contempt of Riches, of renouncing the World, of that true Happiness which ought to be pray'd for, and of love of our Neighbour. He proves, That true Praying is from the Heart. He explains in few Words, the Lord's Prayer; shewing, That it contains what we are to Pray for. He observes that we may desire to be delivered from Pain, Sickness, and Afflictions; but that we are not to desire with impatience, nor to think that God regards us not, when we obtain not that ease which we desire. This Letter is full of very Christian and Sublime Maxims, and Notions, very useful for Pious Persons.

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

The 131ſt. to the ſame Lady, hath nothing Remarkable; he thanks her for enquiring after his Health.

In the 132d. Letter, St. Auguſtin exhorts Voluſian, to whom it is written, to read the Scriptures, and to propoſe to him thoſe Difficulties which he ſhall meet with.

In the 133d. Letter, St. Auguſtin entreateth Marcellinus not to puniſh thoſe Donatiſts with Death, who had confeſſed their Crimes by Torture; and to have reſpect, in the Choice of Puniſhments, to that Meekneſs which the Church profeſſeth to exerciſe towards all Men.

The next Letter contains the like Entreaties to the Proconſul, Apringius. Both theſe were written after the Imperial Law againſt the Donatiſts was enacted in 412.

By the 135th. Voluſianus deſires a Solution of the Difficulties propoſed againſt the Chriſtian Religion, which centred all in this Objection, How God ſhould ſo humble himſelf as to become Man? With this Letter came another from Marcellinus, which is the 136*th.* wherein he deſireth St. Auguſtin, to anſwer the Queſtions made by Voluſianus; adding ſome other Objections of the Enemies of the Chriſtian Religion. They ſaid, That God had aboliſhed the Old Law, either out of Inconſtancy, or becauſe he was weary of it. That the Doctrine of the Goſpel was contrary to States; and that the Chriſtian Emperors had done great Diſ-ſervice to the Affairs of the Common-wealth.

St. Auguſtin in the 137th. anſwereth Voluſianus his Queſtions. He lays down this Rule at Firſt, That though there are ſuch Deep Things in the Scripture, that a Man may daily make new Diſcoveries, how Learned and Quick ſoever he be; yet it is not difficult to arrive to the Knowledge of what is neceſſary to be known to be Saved. Afterward, he anſwereth Voluſianus his Queſtion concerning the Incarnation; ſhewing, That though the Word was made Man; yet he did not give over the Care of Things upon Earth, nor ceaſed to be every where, and to Govern all Things: That the Union of the Soul with the Body, which daily happeneth, is not leſs difficult to be comprehended than that of God with Man; which happened but once to ſave Men from their Sins. Here he lays down very powerful Arguments, to perſwade Men to believe the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt; as, The Original of the People of Iſrael; God's Dealings with them; his chuſing them to be his beloved People; the Laws and Ceremonies of the Old Teſtament, which had all a relation to Jeſus Chriſt; the Predictions of the Prophets; the Life, Actions, and the Death of Chriſt; the Eſtabliſhment of the Church; its Encreaſe, and Preſervation; the greatneſs and ſublimity of the Morals that were taught in it; the plain Stile of the Scripture, which makes it acceſſable to all Mankind, though there are ſuch Depths, as few Minds can penetrate, and other ſuch Conſiderations which are ſufficient to prove the Truth of the Chriſtian Religion.

In the following Letter, St. Auguſtin replies to the Objections made by Marcellinus: The Firſt is about the Alteration of the Old Law, which they imputed either to Envy, or to Inconſtancy in God. St. Auguſtin ſaith, That God is unchangeable in all that concerns himſelf; and, that as he hath given Precepts, and Ordinances for the Good of Man, ſo it is for the ſame End that he ſometimes changeth them; as he judgeth it may be more convenient for them.

The Second Objection, propoſed by Marcellinus, ſeems more difficult. They accuſed Chriſt's Doctrine, as inconſiſtent with the Well-being of the State; becauſe it forbids rendring Evil for Evil; Commands turning the other Cheek; giving the Cloak alſo to them that offer to take our Coats; and to go Two Miles with him that forceth us to go one. Theſe Precepts ſay they, are contrary to the Practice of Common-wealths: For who is he that will ſuffer his Enemy to take away his Goods? Who doth not ſeek to return Evil for Evil to Barbarians, who come to lay the Provinces of the Empire waſte?

St. Auguſtin refutes this Objection; ſhowing, that this Maxim here looked upon as contrary to the good of the State, was a Maxim of the Old Romans, who thought it worthy of their Greatneſs, and profitable for the Common-wealth to forgive Injuries: That Cicero exalting Cæſar for a great Prince, commendeth him for his readineſs to forgive Injuries: That ſuch Things are read with Admiration in Profane Writings, whilſt they are deſpiſed in Chriſtian Books, where they are more Plainly, and more nobly expreſſed. He proves afterwards, That theſe Divine Books are ſo far from being contrary to the Happineſs of Governments, that they are moſt proper to maintain Peace and Concord: That however, they are not to be underſtood literally; and that we are not abſolutely forbidden to defend our ſelves, or to puniſh Crimes; but only, that Men ſhould not act by a Principle of Revenge, but with a Deſign to do good to him that offends us: So that theſe Precepts of Jeſus Chriſt, have reſpect to the Diſpoſition of the Heart, rather than to what is done outwardly, and tend only but to preſerve Patience, and Charity in their Hearts, leaving us the Liberty to do what we think may conduce moſt to the Advantage of thoſe to whom we deſire to do Good.

Having alledged both Chriſt's, and St. Paul's Example, to juſtifie ſuch a Carriage; he adds, That this hinders not the Execution of Juſtice againſt Evil Doers, provided it be done with a Spirit of Charity: That War it ſelf may be managed with the ſame Spirit, when Men deſire to Conquer, with a Deſign to do Good to the Vanquiſhed, and keep them from doing Hurt. Then he anſwereth Marcellinus's laſt Objection; ſhewing, That the Chriſtian Emperors ought not to be charged with the decay of the Empire; the Heathen themſelves having confeſſed, That their own Manners, and the Vices of the Romans, were the main Cauſes of it. He ſheweth,

ſheweth, likewiſe, how Contemptible the Juglings of Apollonius, and Apuleius were, in compariſon of the Miracles of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles.

The 139th. Letter is likewiſe directed to the ſame Marcellinus, but upon another Subject. He ſpeaks of Publiſhing the Acts of the Conference at Carthage: He earneſtly conjures him to hinder the Donatiſts, that were caſt into Priſon, from being put to Death. He mentions his Books of Baptiſm; His Abridgment of the Conference of Carthage; A Lettter to the Donatiſts; Two foregoing Letters; and that which follows, directed to Honoratus: Whereby it appears, that all theſe Diſcourſes belong to the Year 412.

St. Auſtin. Tome II.

The 140th. Letter, is this juſt now mentioned, directed to Honoratus, and written concerning Five Queſtions. He treats of Grace, of the New Covenant, and of the Deſign of Chriſt's Incarnation. He obſerves, at firſt, that every Man hath a Soul endued with Reaſon; but very different Uſes are made of it. Some uſe their Reaſon with no other proſpect but to pleaſe their Senſes; others on the contrary, ſeek after thoſe good things which concern their Soul, and which are of a Nature above their own. The Soul may make a good uſe of Temporal Happineſs, but that is only when it is apply'd to the Service of the Creator: for all Subſtances being good in their Nature; it is a good thing to uſe them in order, and not thereby to oppoſe the Order of the Creator: And the ill uſe which Men make of good things, doth not hinder the good uſe, which God knows how to make, even of evil ones. For his Juſtice by Puniſhing, brings into order thoſe whoſe Injuſtice put them out of order by Sin. God granted this Temporal Felicity in the Old Covenant, which neither promiſed, nor afforded any but Temporal Advantages; but at the ſame time he revealed the New Covenant, whereof the Old was but a Figure; Tho' but a ſmall number of Saints have taken notice of it, and even theſe, though Miniſters of the Old Covenant, belong'd to the New. But in the fulneſs of time, the Word of God was united with Man to be a Light to the Nations, and thoſe that received it, became the Children of God, not Children by Nature as Jeſus Chriſt is, but Children by Adoption and Grace. It is he that taught us to deſpiſe the things of this Life, and to value none but thoſe which we ſhall enjoy in the other. This is the Oeconomy of the New Covenant, which St. Auguſtin explains at large in this Letter. He proveth it by the Expoſition of the 22d. Pſalm, which begins with theſe words, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? Which was the Subject of Honoratus's firſt Queſtion. He inſiſts chiefly upon ſhewing, That Chriſtians ought not to put their Truſt and Confidence in the good things of this World; but to love and ſeek after that only which concerns the next. This is almoſt the ſole deſign of this Letter, to juſtifie that the love of Spiritual and Eternal Bleſſings is the only aim of the New Covenant; To the ſame purpoſe he expounds alſo the beginning of St. John's Goſpel; the Parable of the ten Wiſe and ten Fooliſh Virgins; theſe words of St. Paul, Eph. 3. I pray God that being firmly ſettled, rooted and grounded in love, you may be able to comprehend with all Saints, what is the breadth, and length, and heighth, and depth; and what is ſaid in the Goſpel concerning utter Darkneſs, which were the Subject of Honoratus's five Queſtions. This Man was but a Catechumen, and yet St. Auguſtin ſets before him the moſt ſublime and the higheſt things of the Chriſtian Religion; and yet when he ſpeaks of the Euchariſt, he doth not clearly explain it; but only tells him, That he ſhall know after Baptiſm, in what time, and after what manner it is offered: But he declareth plainly enough what he believed concerning the Euchariſt, ſaying, That Proud Men who come to the Lord's Table, do indeed receive his Body and Blood, and adore it, but they are not fed therewith; becauſe they imitate him not, and though they eat it, yet they refuſe to become poor as he was. At the latter end of his Letter, he ſpeaketh againſt thoſe who put their Confidence in their own Strength, and not in the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt. This is in ſhort what St. Auguſtin treats of in this Letter, which may be looked upon as a Treatiſe, as he ſays himſelf in the Concluſion, and in his Retractations; where he places it amongſt his entire Diſcourſes.

The 141ſt. is a Synodical Epiſtle of an Aſſembly of Catholick Biſhops held at Cirta, directed to all the Donatiſts, whereby they are exhorted to return into the Church; Their Biſhops having been ſo ſolemnly confounded and convicted in the Conference at Carthage, of which he gives a ſhort Abridgment in that Letter. It bears Date the 14th. of June 412.

The next Letter to Saturninus, Euphratus, and the Clergy newly returned into the Unity of the Church, is of the ſame time. St. Auguſtin Congratulates their re-union, endeavours to confirm them in the good Reſolution they had taken, and exhorts them to diſcharge their Miniſtery faithfully.

In the 143d. Letter, St. Auguſtin anſwereth a Queſtion propoſed to him by Marcellinus, to whom it is written: namely, where the Magicians of Egypt could find VVater to turn into Blood, when Moſes had turned all the VVater that was there already. He ſaith, That this Queſtion may be anſwered two ways; either by ſaying, That they took Water out of the Sea; or, by ſuppoſing, That the Plagues of Egypt had their Effect only where Egyptians were, but not where the Children of Iſrael dwelt. Having thus diſ-entangled himſelf of the Queſtion, he explains ſome Paſſages of his Books concerning Free-Will, and the Original of Souls. He confeſſes, That his Writings having been written with Precipitation, ſome faults could not but creep in. He ſincerely acknowledgeth, That even in Writing he perceived faults, and that he corrects and reproves them, being far from hiding or defending them. He ſaith, That he is not like thoſe, who through exceſſive love of themſelves, and to cover their own Errors, would leave others in theirs; That he would not have his beſt Friends to ſay, That he was not miſtaken.

He

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

He wiſely obſerveth, That none ought to approve the Commendation given by Cicero to one, That he never uttered one word which he wiſhed afterwards he had not ſpoken. This ſays he, belongeth to a Mad man, rather than to a Wiſe man; This cannot be applied but to Divine Perſons, by whom the Holy Ghoſt hath ſpoken. He confeſſes, That he is ſtill uncertain concerning the Origin of our Souls; becauſe neither Scripture nor Reaſon have determined the Point. He further ſaith, That Scripture and Reaſon cannot be contrary to one another; That if Reaſon ſeems to be contrary to the Scripture, it is a falſe Light, it is not right Reaſon. That if what is drawn from Scripture, is found directly oppoſed to clear Reaſon; there muſt be a miſunderſtanding of the Scripture. Laſtly, He refutes Voluſianus, who would hardly believe what he had writ to him, that the Bleſſed Virgin could conceive Jeſus Chriſt, and remain a Virgin ſtill: This Letter is of the Year 412. for it is written after the 139th. and there St. Auguſtin Anſwers a Letter of Marcellinus, brought by Boniface, who was with Marcellinus when St. Auguſtin writ the 139th. Letter.

In the 144th. Letter, St. Auguſtin Congratulates the Men of Cirta, who returned to the Church exhorting them to give God thanks for it, as being the effect of his Mercy. He ſaith, That the Change of thoſe who quit a Debauched Life to lead a better, without giving up themſelves to God; as that of Polemon was, ought however to be look'd upon as God's Work. For, ſaith he, nothing but the heighth of Pride and of Ingratitude, can imagine that the Beauty of the Body, Strength, and Health are God's Gifts; and that Chaſtity, which makes the Beauty of the Soul, can be the work of Man. Whence he concludes, That the Converſion of thoſe to whom he writ, is much the rather the Work of God's Mercy. He exhorts them to acknowledge it. To God, ſaith he, you are to give Thanks; fear him if you will be kept from falling, love him if you intend to go forward. DEUM TIMETE NE DEFICIATIS, AMATE UT PROFICIATIS. This Letter was written after the Conference at Carthage.

The 145th. to Anaſtaſius comprehendeth moſt of St. Auguſtin's Principles of Juſtification, for having obſerved that the World is more to be feared when it fawns upon us, than when it torments us, he layeth down theſe following Principles, 1. That the love of earthly Goods cannot be totally laid aſide in this Life, and it will always have a ſhare in our beſt Actions. 2. That the Will of Man cannot be called Free, without the aſſiſtance of Grace. 3. That the Law ſerveth to make us know our Impotency, that we may have our recourſe to Grace. That Sin is not overcome whil'ſt Men forbear it meerly for fear of Puniſhment. For, ſaith he, though Men go not ſo far as to the outward Action, yet the ſecret Deſire of doing Evil, in the heart, which is reſtrained only by the fear of Puniſhment, is a Tyrant that keeps us in Slavery, And thus it may be ſaid, That whoſoever abſtaineth from Sin, only for the dread of Suffering, is not altogether an Enemy to Sin; becauſe he is not perfectly in love with Righteouſneſs; and that Sin is not properly hated, but proportionably as Righteouſneſs is loved. INIMICUS ERGO EST JUSTITIÆ QUI POENÆ TIMORE NON PECCAT... TANTUM PORRO QUISQUE PECCATUM ODIT, QUANTUM JUSTITIAM DILIGIT. 5. That the love of Righteouſneſs ought to go further than the love of Sin; becauſe it ſhould proceed ſo far as that all the Miſchief which can thereby befall our Bodies, may not hinder us from practiſing our Duty; and ſo nothing may ſeparate us from the love of Jeſus Chriſt, and Righteouſneſs. 6. It is the Holy Ghoſt who poureth that Charity into our Hearts; we have it not of our ſelves, and when we find our ſelves deſtitute of it, we muſt, Ask, Seek, and Knock; addreſſing our ſelves to God by Prayer. This Letter was written about the time that the Pelagian Hereſie began to be known in Africa, in 413.

The following, which is a Letter of Thanks to Pelagius, is likewiſe about the ſame time, as St. Auguſtin obſerves in the 26th. Chap. of the Book of the Acts of Pelagius. He having already heard that this Man oppoſed the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, he hints at ſome thing of it in this Letter; wiſhing, That God would give him ſuch Grace as might make him good always; praying him, That he would beg of God to make him ſuch, as he believed him to be already; adding in the end of the Letter, I pray God, my Dear Brother, that he would be pleaſed to make you acceptable in his ſight.

St. Auguſtin in his Retractations, mentions the two following Letters; The 147th. to Paulina, and the 148th. to Fortunatianus Biſhop of Sicca, and placeth them after the Books compoſed in 412. And indeed, this Biſhop of Sicca, who was at the Conference of Carthage, died in 413. and Urbanus ſucceeded him, and was deputed that very Year to go to Rome. St. Auguſtin proves in both thoſe Letters, That God cannot be ſeen with bodily Eyes. In the former, he explains, What it is to ſee God; How he is ſeen; Who they are that have ſeen him; and, Who ſhall ſee him hereafter.

The 149th. is an Anſwer of St. Auguſtin, to the Queſtions propoſed by St. Paulinus, in the 121ſt. Letter, about ſome Paſſages of Scripture; He critically examines the Difficulties that were raiſed about St. Paul's Epiſtles, and gives a Rational Account of them. This Letter was written about the Year 414. after the Promotion of Urbanus to the Biſhoprick of Sicca.

The 150th. is written to Proba, and to her Daughter Juliana; He wiſhes them joy, That Demetrias, Juliana's Daughter, had conſecrated her ſelf to God in vowing Virginity. It is full of noble Expreſſions, in Commendation of Virginity.

Count Marcellinus, who preſided at the Conference of Carthage, was Executed in the Year 413. at Carthage, with his Brother Apringius, by order of Count Marinus, being Accuſed of abetting abetting Heraclianus his Rebellion: St. Auguſtin being his Friend, and knowing his Innocency, uſed all his Endeavours to hinder that Judgment; and was ſenſibly affected for the Death of thoſe innocent Perſons. A great Lord, one Cæcilian, St. Auguſtin's Friend, and an Enemy to the two Brothers, being at Carthage the ſame time when this Judgment was given, was ſuſpected to have had a hand in it; and St. Auguſtin having forborn writing to him for ſome time, this Lord thought that he had alſo conceived the ſame Suſpicion; wherefore he wrote to St. Auguſtin about it. To this Letter St. Auguſtin returns an Anſwer in the 151ſt. wherein he repreſents, both the Cruelty and Injuſtice of Marinus's Judgment, and what had made the World believe that Cæcilian had a hand in it. Yet he profeſſes not to believe it, conſidering what he had written to juſtifie himſelf; but he exhorts him to renounce all manner of Friendſhip with Marinus. Afterwards he makes a Panegyrick upon theſe two Brethren without naming them, and particularly of Marcellinus; giving an Account of the edifying Diſcourſes he made in the Priſon: This is a remarkable thing. St. Auguſtin declares, That having been to viſit him in the Priſon, he demanded of him, whether he had ever committed any Sin for which he ought to have done Penance; and that Marcellinus made him this Anſwer, That he took to witneſs thoſe Sacraments which that hand brought him, that neither before nor after Marriage, he ever touch'd any Woman, but his own Wife. This Paſſage teaches us, That Paſtors were careful to viſit Priſoners, to aſſiſt, and carry the Sacraments to them, and enjoyned them Penance when they found them guilty of great Sins; and there is no doubt, but that after Penance they alſo gave them Abſolution, when they feared that they ſhould be Condemned to Die; but upon condition, that if they eſcaped Death they ſhould fulfil their Penance. At laſt, St. Auguſtin ſets Marcellinus his Innocence againſt the Cruelty and unworthineſs of Marinus's Action, whom he deſcribes as a very ill man, who had Sacrificed thoſe two innocent Perſons to pleaſe the Donatiſts. He again adviſes Cæcilian to abhorr that Action, and to conceive ſuch an Indignation againſt him that committed it, as might oblige him to a Penance proportionable to the greatneſs of his Crime. At laſt, he tells him, That being of ſuch an Age, and of ſuch Probity, he ought no longer to continue a Catechumen. Marcellinus, who had been ſo barbarouſly uſed by Marinus, was juſtified at Court. St. Auguſtin ſaith, That there was not ſo much as need of a Pardon from the Emperor, and had not Marinus haſtned the Judgment againſt Marcellinus, without waiting for the Biſhop's Anſwer, who was ſent to the Emperor to ſollicit his Pardon, he had been acquitted; and accordingly, Marinus was diſgraced, and the Memory of Marcellinus honoured by the Emperor Honorius, who by a Law of the Third of Auguſt 414. Regiſtred in the Theodoſian Code, B. 16. Tit. 5. L. 55. confirms all that he had done againſt the Donatiſts, and gives him the Title of Marcellinus of Glorious Memory.

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

The 152d. Letter is from Macedonius, Lieutenant of Africa, who deſires to know of St. Auguſtin, whether Religion permits Biſhops to make Applications to Judges to obtain favour for Enemies, as they did at that time, and as St. Auguſtin often did of Macedonius. This Magiſtrate could hardly believe that Religion authorized that Practice; Seeing that God doth ſo ſeverely forbid Sin, that a Man is not admitted to Penance after the firſt time; and that it ſeems to be a countenancing of Crimes when we ſhow an unwillingneſs to have them puniſhed.

St. Auguſtin in the 153d. Letter, anſwereth, That Biſhops intercede for Criminals, becauſe they hope they may amend: They abhorr the Crime, but they pity the Criminals: That Repentance having no place but in this Life, there is reaſon to intercede for the Guilty, leſt by this finite Puniſhment which ends their life, they may fall into a Puniſhment that ſhall never end. So that none can doubt but that Religion approveth that Practice, ſince God himſelf, in whom is no Injuſtice; who ſeeth what every Man is, and what he ought to be, and cannot be miſtaken in his Judgments, cauſeth his Sun to riſe upon the bad as well as upon the good, and by his long forbearance invites Sinners to Repentance. That when Biſhops by their Interceſſions, have reſcued any from the ſeverity of the Judges, they put him to do Penance, that the Crime may not remain unpuniſhed. For, ſaith he, a true Penitent hath no other proſpect, than that the Evil which he hath done may be puniſhed. That if there be any Perſons whoſe Malice is ſo great, that after Penance, and being reconciled and admitted to the Holy Myſteries, they relapſe into their Diſorders, and ſometimes into greater; then indeed, the Church admits them no more to do Penance, leſt a Remedy, (which is ſo much the more profitable, that it is leaſt expoſed to the contempt of Sinners) ſhould loſe its Virtue, if it become more common: But yet, we deſpair not of their Salvation, which they may obtain through God's Mercy, by being converted and altering their Life. Afterwards, St. Auguſtin alledgeth ſeveral Reaſons in Equity, and ſeveral Examples, to ſhew, That we are not forbidden to intercede for Criminals; and that all Men ought to be inclined to Meekneſs and Pity. The principal Conſideration which he makes uſe of, is the State of Man in this Life, which cannot be without Sin. For, ſaith he, Though the Sins which we commit, after the general aboliſhment in Baptiſm, are not of the ſame quality with thoſe for which Men are ſeparated from the Altar; yet they muſt be expiated, not by a barren Sorrow, but by a Sacrifice of the Works of Mercy.

St. Auguſtin acknowledgeth, That the Soveraign Power of Princes; the Power of Life and Death, and the dread of Puniſhments, are all neceſſary to reſtrain Wicked Men, and the Terror which theſe things ſtrike into the Hearts of Men, is of great advantage, not only to the good, who by this means live ſecurely among the wicked, but even to the wicked themſelves; becauſe whil'ſt their Hands are tied by the fear of Puniſhment, their Hearts may call upon God, and turn from Evil to Good: For (ſaith he) they are not good Men, becauſe they abſtain from Evil through fear of Suffering; for Fear does not make Men Good, but only the Love of Righteouſneſs.

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

He tells us further, That upon ſome occaſions, it is Mercy to Puniſh; and in others, Cruelty to Forgive: Sicut enim eſt aliquando miſericordia puniens, ita eſt crudelitas parcens. He ſpeaketh at laſt, of Reſtoring Stoln Goods, or ſuch as are ill gotten: And concerning theſe, he ſaith, (1.) That it is a Mockery, not to do Penance; not to reſtore, when it is in our power, the Goods that are gotten by thoſe Crimes for which we pretend to do Penance. (2.) That though a Judge may, without Injuſtice, appoint Puniſhments to oblige a Thief to make Reſtitution; yet one may intercede for him, not to prevent reſtoring what is taken away, ſince we bind them to it by the dread of God's Judgments, and debarr them from the Communion till they have done it; but only by way of preventing unneceſſary Cruelty againſt a Man that is ſuppoſed not to be in a capacity of making Reſtitution, or not fully convicted of the Theft. (3.) That when we have not evident Proofs that ſuch a one is poſſeſſed of our Goods, it is better to hazard loſing them, though perhaps he is guilty, but denies it, than to torment and put him to Death, perhaps unjuſtly, if he hath them not. An excellent Caveat to teach Maſters not to be too forward to ſeize upon their Servants, merely upon Suſpicion. (4.) That Lawyers may take Money for their Advice in a juſt Cauſe, but not Judges to do Juſtice, nor Witneſſes to give Teſtimony to Truth: and that both are exceedingly guilty when they take Money; the one for an Unjuſt Sentence, and the other for a Falſe Witneſs. (5.) That Lawyers having taken Money to defend an ill Cauſe, or to blind the Judge, are obliged to make Reſtitution, as well as the Witneſſes or Officers, who exact Fees beyond what belong to their Places. (6.) That Eſtates gotten by Stealth, Falſe Accuſation, or Oppreſſion, ought to be reſtored; and that it is not enough, to beſtow them upon the Poor. (7.) That in ſome ſence it may be ſaid, That wicked Men have Nothing, but that All things belong to the Faithful. "For (ſaith St. Auguſtin) whatſoever we "have which we have no Right to, belongs to another, and we have Right to nothing but what "we juſtly poſſeſs; and we poſſeſs nothing juſtly, but what we poſſeſs as we ought: and all "that we poſſeſs not as we ought, is another's; and we poſſeſs nothing as we ought, if we "make not good uſe of it.... So that wicked Men never poſſeſs any thing as they ought; and "good Men enjoy it ſo much the more juſtly, becauſe they love it leſs." Strange Conſequences would follow from this Poſition, had not St. Auguſtin added this Reſtriction immediately; "But their Iniquity is tolerated, who poſſeſs not this World's Goods as they ought; "yea, Laws are eſtabliſhed to ſecure their Poſſeſſion; and are called Civil Laws, becauſe that "by them Civil Society is preſerved; not by obliging them to uſe thoſe Goods as they ought, "but by preventing their abuſing them for the Oppreſſion of others.... Yet we have reſpect "to theſe Humane and Temporal Laws; and our Interceſſions never go ſo far, as to hinder the "reſtoring of what is ill gotten, according to the Laws."

The 154th. Letter is from Macedonius; who ſendeth St. Auguſtin word, That he had done what he deſired; and, That he had read the Three Firſt Books of The City of God, which St. Auguſtin ſent him.

St. Auguſtin anſwers him in the 155th. wherein he diſcourſes of Happineſs; ſhewing, That God is the Spring of a happy Life, and that true Vertue conſiſts in the Love of God: "Vertue "(ſaith he) is nothing elſe but the love of what ought to be loved: To know how to make a "good Choice, is called Prudence; not to be turned away from it, for any Evil, by Pleaſure "or Pride, is called Fortitude, Temperance and Juſtice. Thus God is the chiefeſt Good: ſo "that to love any other thing more, or as much as him, is not to love our ſelves; for our "Condition is ſo much the more happy, as we approach with greater violence towards that "which is beſt.

Theſe four Letters were written immediately after St. Auguſtin had compoſed his three firſt Books of The City of God; which were compleated in 413. before the Fourth and the Fifth, which were publiſhed in 415.

The 156th. Letter was written from Syracuſe, by one Hilary; who deſireth St. Auguſtin to let him know what he ſhould think of certain Propoſitions, ſet forth by ſome at Syracuſe; That "it is in Man's power to keep himſelf pure from all Sin; That it is eaſie for him, if he pleaſe, "to keep the Commands of God; That Men are born without Sin, and by conſequence, that "it is inconſiſtent with the Juſtice of God, that Children dying before Baptiſm, ſhould periſh; "That rich Men cannot enter into the Kingdom of God, without renouncing their Riches, "and ſelling all they have, and giving it to the Poor; And that whil'ſt they keep them, all the "good Works they may do, according to God's Law, will profit them nothing: And laſtly, "That we ought to Swear in no caſe. He asketh further, Whether the Church without ſpot or wrinkle, ſpoken of by St. Paul, is that to which we now belong, or that which we hope to make up one day with the bleſſed in Heaven. This Hilary, of Syracuſe, is very like that Hilary who joined with St. Proſper to refute the Semi-Pelagians, and who writ to St. Auguſtin the 226th. Letter; both were Lay-men, ſince St. Auguſtin calleth them Sons: They were both great Enemies of the Pelagians, Diſciples and great Admirers of St. Auguſtin: The Style of both Letters ſeems to be the ſame, which makes it probable that they were both written by the ſame Perſon.

Be that as it will, in the next St. Auguſtin anſwereth the Queſtions propoſed in this Letter; which gave him opportunity to treat at large of Original Sin; Of the Corruption of our Nature;

ture; Of Juſtification, and of the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt: And to prove againſt the Pelagians, (1.) That no Man can be free from Sin in this Life. (2) That no Man can fulfil the Law without the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, which is obtained by Labour and by Prayer. (3.) That Grace doth not take away Liberty; becauſe the Will of Man is by ſo much the more free, as it is the more ſubject to Chriſt's Grace, and delivered from the Dominion of Sin: We ſhould not think that Free-Will is deſtroy'd, becauſe it needeth ſuch Helps; on the contrary, it ſuppoſes that it ſubſiſts ſtill, when we ſay that it hath need of help. (4.) That we learn of St. Paul, That all the Children of Adam are born in ſin; and periſh eternally, if they are not ſanctified by the Grace of Baptiſm. Here he refuteth the Pelagians very fully; who anſwered, That Sin was not from Adam, but by Imitation: And he enlargeth upon the Oppoſition which St. Paul makes between Adam and Jeſus Chriſt; between the Condemnation cauſed by the Old Man becauſe of Sin, and the Juſtification which the New Man worketh in us by his Grace. Having handled theſe Points, he ſpeaks occaſionally againſt Cœleſtius, who had been both accuſed and convicted of thoſe Errors which St. Auguſtin had lately refuted. Afterwards this Saint diſcourſes againſt another Pelagian Error concerning Manners; and proveth, (1.) That to be ſaved, Men need not part with their whole Eſtate, and reduce themſelves to entire Poverty. And laſtly, he obſerves, That the Church here below conſiſts both of Good and Bad. He adds further, concerning Swearing, That Men ſhould avoid Swearing as much as poſſibly they can: That it is beſt, not to Swear at all; no, not in Truth; becauſe thoſe that are uſed to Swearing, are every moment upon the brink of Perjury: That it is a moſt dangerous thing to play with Oaths; but the ſureſt way, is, never to Swear, and uſe only Yea and Nay. St. Jerom mentions this Letter in his Dialogue, written in the Year 415. and ſpeaks of it as a Diſcourſe newly publiſhed. It was read in the Council of Paleſtine, aſſembled in July, 415. as St. Auguſtin obſerves in the Book of The Acts of Pelagius, chap. 11. which ſhews that it was written in the Year 414.

St. Auguſtin Tome II.

The Subject of the 158th. Letter is as followeth; Evodius, Biſhop of Uzala, having given an Account of a Young Man's happy Death, who had led a moſt holy Life, and had appear'd to ſome after his Death; propoſes ſome Queſtions to St. Auguſtin about ſuch Apparitions, and asks, Whether the Soul hath not a Body after Death? We ought not to forget that this Biſhop, ſpeaking of that Young Man's Death, obſerves, That in his Sickneſs he repeated Pſalms, and in his Agony he made the Sign of the Croſs upon his Forehead: That they buried him honourably, and for Three Days together Hymns were ſung upon his Grave, and on the Third Day they offer'd the Sacrifice of our Redemption. At the latter end of this Letter, Evodius asks St. Auguſtin ſome other Queſtions about the difference betwixt God's and Man's Wiſdom.

St. Auguſtin anſwers that Biſhop in the 159th. and tells him, That this Queſtion requireth much Labour and Study to reſolve all the Difficulties that may be in it. But to let him know his Opinion in one word, He did not believe that the Soul did go out of the Body with a Body: That as to Viſions and Apparitions, nothing can be ſaid, without deciding after what manner an infinite number of different Idea's are raiſed in our Souls: which is a thing very hard to be comprehended; though it is certain, that ſuch Repreſentations are neither Corporeal Motions, nor Corporeal Qualities. He referrs Evodius to what he had ſaid concerning that Matter, in his Book upon Geneſis; and contents himſelf to tell him what happened to Gennadius, a Phyſician at Carthage; who doubting whether there was another Life, was convinced of it by a Young Man that appeared to him in a Dream; and made him apprehend, that ſince he did both hear and ſee him, though his Eyes were ſhut, and had no uſe of his Ears, that even ſo after Death, though he ſhould have no bodily Eyes, yet he ſhould ſee, and feel, and live.

The 160th. and 161ſt. are both by Evodius. In the firſt, he asketh St. Auguſtin what God is? and what is Reaſon? And in the Second, he deſireth him to explain a Paſſage in his 137th. Letter to Voluſianus.

St. Auguſtin anſwereth both by the 162d. Wherein he tells Evodius, That he had not Time enough to anſwer thoſe Queſtions, but he had already reſolved ſeveral of them, in his Books of the Trinity; Of Free-Will; Of the Quantity of the Soul; and, Of True Religion. He confirms what he had ſaid in the 159th. Letter, touching a Soul ſeparated from the Body; and about Apparitions. And at laſt juſtifieth what he had ſaid of the Incarnation to Voluſianus; If a Reaſon could be given of that Myſtery, then would it ceaſe to be Wonderful: Were there an Example of it, it would not be Singular.

Though St. Auguſtin had ſignified to Evodius, That he was not at leiſure to anſwer ſuch ſort of Queſtions; yet this Man propoſes two more in his 163d. Letter: The former, concerning the Original of Chriſt's Soul; and the other, about a difficult Paſſage in St. Peter's Epiſtle, where it is ſaid, That Jeſus Chriſt preached in the Spirit to the Spirits in Priſon; which ſome time were diſobedient, when the long-ſuffering of God waited in the days of Noah.

St. Auguſtin reſolveth both theſe Queſtions in the 164th. Letter: And beginning with the latter, he ſaith, (1.) That no Man can doubt of Chriſt's Deſcent into Hell. (2.) That he did not deliver all Men from thence, but only ſuch as he judged worthy to be delivered. (3) That almoſt the whole Church believes that Jeſus Chriſt delivered our Firſt Father; and ſome others think, That he brought out the other Patriarchs and the Prophets: But that it is more probable that theſe righteous Men were not in Hell, but in another Place, called Abraham's Boſom. (4.) That thoſe

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

theſe juſt Men who were raiſed again when Chriſt died, did take again their Bodies to die a ſecond time. (5.) In cannot be ſaid, That Jeſus Chriſt preached the Goſpel in the other World, to thoſe that were Incredulous in this Life. (6.) That that Paſſage of St. Peter, is not to be underſtood of the Spirits or Souls detained in Hell; but of the Spirits who lived in the days of Noah, whom the Word did then enlighten: So that St. Peter's meaning, in St. Auguſtin's Opinion, is not, that Chriſt deſcended into Hell, to preach the Goſpel to thoſe who believed not, in Noah's time; but that Jeſus Chriſt dying for us, was raiſed again by the ſame Spirit by whom he formerly preached, or by which he formerly inſtructed Unbelievers, in the days when Noah prepared the Ark, whil'ſt God's Patience waited and invited them to Repentance. (7.) That Chriſt's Birth was not defiled with Sin; and though he took in the Womb of a Virgin true Humane Fleſh, yet was it not ſinful Fleſh, becauſe Luſt had no hand in forming of that Fleſh. This brings him inſenſibly to the other Queſtion, about the Original of the Soul. St. Auguſtin is ſtill to ſeek about that Subject, and dareth not declare for any of the four Opinions that divided the Chriſtians at that time, but clearly diſowns the Notion, That for the Puniſhment of ſome Sins committed in another Life, the Soul is caſt into the Body, as into a Priſon: But maintains, That it is certain that Chriſt's Soul was not ſubject either to the Death of Sin, or to Condemnation. All theſe Letters of Evodius, and theſe Anſwers of St. Auguſtin, were written not long after one another, after that to Voluſianus, in the Year 414.

The 165th. is a Letter of St. Jerom to Marcellinus and Anapſychia: Wherein this Father having related the ſeveral Opinions about the Origination of the Soul, adviſeth them to addreſs themſelves to St. Auguſtin, if they deſired to know more. It is viſible, that this was written before the former; becauſe it is directed to Count Marcellinus, who was executed in 413. but it is placed here, becauſe of its relation with the following Letter of St. Auguſtin, which is a Treatiſe upon the Soul's Original, dedicated to St. Jerom, and ſent to him by Oroſius, in the Year 415.

St. Auguſtin having obſerved, That the Soul cannot be called a Body, if by Body be underſtood an extended Subſtance; though it might be termed Corporeal in another ſence, if this Term be taken at large to ſignifie Subſtance in general: he propoſes then to St. Jerom the ſeveral Opinions concerning the Soul's Original; ſtarting ſome Difficulties upon that which St. Jerom ſeemed to approve beſt; yet it is that which we now hold, That Souls are created and put into our Bodies at the Birth of each Perſon. He inſiſts particularly upon this, That it is difficult to make that conſiſt with Original Sin, and with what the Church believes concerning Children that die without Baptiſm; and ſo he asketh of St. Jerom a Solution of theſe Objections, having anſwered the Reaſons alledged againſt that Opinion which ſeemed moſt probable to St. Auguſtin. He takes notice, That the Innocents were honoured in the Church, as Martyrs.

The next Letter to St. Jerom, upon theſe words of St. James, ch. 2. v. 10. He that tranſgreſſes in one point, is guilty of all, was written immediately after the fore-going, as St. Auguſtin obſerves in his Retractations. He deſireth St. Jerom to explain that Paſſage to him; and himſelf giveth an Explication of it, which he ſubmits to St. Jerom's Judgment. He examineth the Stoicks Opinions, who taught, That all Sins were equal; and that of the Philoſophers, who affirmed, That it was impoſſible to have any one Vertue, without being endowed with all. Having bandied theſe Queſtions on both Sides, he concludes, That though it were true, That One Vertue could not be alone; yet it would not follow, That All Sins were equal: But however, it is not true, That all Vertues muſt neceſſarily be joined together: becauſe Vertue being no other thing than the love of what one ought to love, a Man may have more or leſs of this Love; for no Man can attain to perfect Charity in this Life. This being ſuppoſed, he ſaith, That whoſoever tranſgreſſeth the Law in One Point, is guilty of breaking the Whole; becauſe Sin is againſt Charity, and Charity is the fulfilling of the Law. But from hence it doth not follow that all Sins are equal; becauſe that though every Sin violates Charity, upon which the Law dependeth; yet that hinders not but that a Man is more or leſs guilty, according as the Sins he commits are greater or leſs. In a word, There is more or leſs Sin in us, according as there is more or leſs Charity; and we ſhall never be perfect in Charity, before we are delivered from the weakneſs of this mortal Fleſh. Laſtly, We ought not to deſpiſe ſmall Sins, or daily Faults; but ask God Pardon for them, and blot them out by conſtant Prayers, and good Works. Whoſoever ſhould neglect to expiate them; and who thinking himſelf over-righteous, ſhould ask of God to be judged without Mercy, would doubtleſs come to Chriſt's Judgment-Seat overwhelm'd with Sins that would weigh him down, and would find no Mercy.

The 168th. is a Letter of Thanks, which both Timaſius and James return to St. Auguſtin, for his Book of Nature and Grace, compoſed in 415. which was dedicated to them.

In the 169th. St. Auguſtin anſwereth Evodius about two Queſtions which that Biſhop had put to him; one concerning the Trinity; and the other about the Dove, under whoſe Shape the Holy Ghoſt appeared; and there he explains the Faith of the Church, concerning the Trinity and the Incarnation, very clearly and exactly. This Letter is of the ſame Year with the Book of Nature and Grace; that is, in 415.

The next Letter, in St. Auguſtin's and Alypius's Name, is upon the ſame Subject: There they inſtruct Maximus the Phyſician, who was newly converted from the Arian Hereſie; and exhort him to reduce thoſe to the Faith whom he had led into Error.

The

The next is a Note from St. Augustin, and Alypius, to Peregrinus, a Bishop; whereby they desire him to give them an Account of what Success their Letter to Maximus had; and not to be offended at the length of their Letter, because they used to write such to those Persons, whom they esteemed most. This Peregrinus not being made Bishop before the Year 413. it is likely both these Letters were not written before 415. St. Augustin. Tome II.

The 172d. is an Answer of St. Jerom to St. Augustin's 166th. and 167th. Letters. There he commendeth what St. Augustin had writ, and excuseth himself from making any Answer. This Letter was brought by Orosius, in 416.

The 173d. is directed to Donatus, a Donatist Priest, of the Town of Carthagena, in the Dioceſs of Hippo, who having been informed, That there was an Order to Arrest, and to carry him to Church, had purposed to throw himself into a Well. St. Augustin shews him, in this Letter, the Excess of his Folly; proving, That it is just to force them to do Good that are bent to do Evil. This Letter was written after the Conference at Carthage.

The 174th. Letter of St. Augustin to Aurelius, Bishop of Carthage, was sent with his Book of the Trinity, completed in 410.

The 175th. to Pope Innocent I. is not a particular Letter of St. Augustin's, but a Synodical Epistle of the Council assembled at Carthage in 416. whereby the Bishops of that Council, to the Number of 68. inform the Pope of what they had done in the Council against Pelagius, and Cœlestius: How Orosius having delivered them the Letters of Heros, and Lazarus, against Pelagius, and Cœlestius, after they had revised what they had done before at Carthage, Five Years since, against Cœlestius, they had again Anathematized their Errours, to reclaim those that started them, from that Extravagancy; or, at the least, to Cure such as were infected already, and to preserve such as might be infected, in process of time, from the Contagion. They make the Pope acquainted with it, that so the Authority of the See of Rome, being joined with the Judgment of the African Bishops, might secure the Salvation of many, and call back, into the right way, those that had gone astray. They refute afterwards, the Principal Errors of the Pelagians, against Grace, and Original Sin. They add, That though Pelagius had been justly acquitted in the Council of Palæstine, yet now the growing Errour, that over-spreads the Church, ought to be Anathematized. Lastly, That though both Pelagius, and Cœlestius, seem to disown their Errours, and have undertaken to deny that they ever owned them, and to affirm, that the Writings objected to them, are none of theirs; yet Anathema's ought to be pronounced against any one who dares teach, and averr, That the natural Strength of Man, is sufficient to avoid Sin, and to accomplish God's Commandments -.....- And that dares affirm, That Children need not be delivered from Perdition, by the Baptism of Jesus Christ; or, that they can have a share, in eternal Life, without that Sacrament.

The 176th. is likewise a Synodical Letter of the Council of Milevis, made up of 60 Numidian Bishops, and Assembled at the same time with the foregoing. They exhort Pope Innocent to use his Authority, to Condemn that new Heresie which was an Enemy of the Grace of Jesus Christ. They accuse Cœlestius, and Pelagius, as the Authors of it; yet hoping that they will renounce their Errours.

Besides these Two Letters, St. Augustin writ a particular one in the Name of the Bishops, Aurelius, Alypius, Evodius, and Possidius, his Collegues, and familiar Friends; wherein he represents to him, That Pelagius having lived long at Rome, it was a thing of great Consequence there, to Condemn plainly the Errour which he taught; and, that it were convenient to send for Pelagius, to examine him, and oblige him to make such a Confession of Faith, as might not be capable of an ill Explication; and to anathematize the Errours that were found in his Books. They refute likewise the Pelagian Doctrine, explaining the Difference betwixt the Law, and Grace; and shewing the Necessity of the Latter to fulfil the Commandments.

St. Augustin wrote again upon the same Subject, and about the same time, the 178th. Letter to Hilary, supposed to be Bishop of Narbon; and the 179th. to John of Jerusalem, to whom he sendeth his Book of Nature, and Grace, with that of Pelagius, desiring, in exchange, The Ecclesiastical Acts; whereby it appeared, That Pelagius had been Justified; he means, the Acts of the Council of Diospolis. All these Letters are written in 416. Orosius being come back again, who brought from Palæstine, into Africa, Heros's, and Lazarus's Letters against Pelagius.

The 180th. to Oceanus a Gentleman of Rome, is also of the same time. This Man had embraced St. Jerom's Opinion about the Origination of Souls, and concerning an officious Lye. St. Augustin shews him, in few Words, the Difficulties that attend St. Jerom's Opinion, about the Origination of Souls, with the difference betwixt Tropes, or Metaphors, and Lying. He observes, That St Jerom, with whom he had had a Dispute about that Subject, had altered his Mind in his Dialogue against Pelagius. He desireth Oceanus to send him a Treatise of that Father, whereof Orosius had spoken to him, and wherein he treated of the Resurrection of the Flesh.

The 181st. 182d. 183d. and 184th. Letters, are Pope Innocent's Answers to those of the African Bishops; whereby he approves, and confirms all that was done in Africa, against Pelagius, and Cœlestius; they are of the Year 417.

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

The 185th. Letter, is amongſt thoſe Diſcourſes that St. Auguſtin mentions in his Retractations, where he calls it the Book of the Correction of the Donatiſts, againſt thoſe who found fault, that the Imperial Laws were put in Execution to make them return into the Church. He directs it to Bonifacius a Tribune, and afterwards Count in Africa.

Having ſhewed there the difference betwixt the Arian Hereſie, and the Donatiſts Schiſm, he proves, That keeping within the Rules of Chriſtian Moderation, the terrour of the Laws may be uſed to reduce Hereticks to the Church. He ſpeaketh at large of the Cruelties which the Donatiſts, and particularly the Circumcellians exerciſed againſt the Catholicks. He refutes all the Reaſons then alledged at large; which Reaſons were now made uſe of, to perſwade Men, that Hereticks are not to be reclaimed from their Errors, by Force, or Puniſhments. He ſays ſome Things concerning Penance, and Remiſſion of Sins: That Baptiſm blots out all Sins; and that, by Penance, they may alſo be remitted; and, "That if the Church hath ordained, That none of thoſe, who have been under Penance, ſhall be admitted into the Clergy, or kept in it, this is only for the upholding of Diſcipline, leaſt ſome ſhould do Penance, out of Pride, with a Deſign to obtain Eccleſiaſtical Dignities; not that ſhe would caſt Criminals into Deſpair, how Guilty ſoever they be, ⁂ but that this Method is altered upon thoſe Occaſions, where the Buſineſs is not only to ſecure the Salvation of ſome particular Men, but to deliver whole Nations from Death. In which Circumſtances, the Church hath remitted much of the Severity of her Diſcipline, to find a Remedy for greater Evils and for this very Reaſon, ſhe dealeth thus with the Donatiſts: That ſhe is ſatisfied if they expiate their Sin of Separation by as bitter Grief as was that of St. Peter; and ſhe preferveth their Rank and Dignity among the Clergy. That the Church practiſed this, when whole Nations were to be reclaimed from Errour, or Hereſie: That Lucifer Calaritanus was looked upon as a Schiſmatick, for being of another Opinion: That the Sin of the Holy Ghoſt is not Errour, or Blaſphemy, ſince it would thence follow, that no Heretick ought to be admitted to Penance, or obtain Remiſſion of his Sin; and that, by this, no other thing can be underſtood but final Impenitency. St. Auguſtin obſerves, in his Retractations, that he wrote this Letter at the ſame time that he compoſed the Book of The Acts of Pelagius, in 417.

The 186th. Letter of St. Auguſtin, is written to Paulinus, Biſhop of Nola; not to Boniface, as it is entituled in ſome Manuſcripts; ſiince it is quoted as directed to Paulinus, in the Book of the Gift of Perſeverance, Ch. 21. and by St. Proſper, Ch. 43. againſt Caſſianus his Conferences. And indeed, St. Auguſtin quotes a Paſſage out of a Letter, from the Perſon to whom he wrote, which is found in the 8th. Letter of St. Paulinus to Sulpitius Severus. This whereof we now ſpeak, is written in the Names of St. Auguſtin, and Alypius, who was an intimate Friend of St. Paulinus, againſt Pelagius, whom this Saint had in great Eſteem. In this Letter St. Auguſtin layeth open all his Principles, concerning Grace, and Predeſtination, and refuteth Pelagius his Notions. He begins with the Relation of what had been done againſt him in Africa, and ſends Copies of it to St. Paulinus. Then he layeth down theſe Poſitions, That the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, that is neceſſary to enable us to do Good, is altogether of Free Gift; That God ſheweth Mercy to whom he pleaſeth; That he takes whom he thinks fit, out of the Maſs of Corruption, into which Mankind is fallen, through Adam's Sin. He inſiſteth, particularly, upon the Example of Infants, whereof ſome are ſaved through God's Mercy, and others damned, becauſe of Original Sin. He refutes Pelagius's Opinion, touching the State of Infants, whom he ſuppoſes to be in a middle State between Heaven, and Hell, which he calleth Eternal Life. He proves, That Free-Will does not conſiſt in an Indifference, to Good or Evil; for it is enclined to Evil, and cannot do Good, without the aſſiſtance of the Grace of God. He tells St. Paulinus, that Pelagius maintained the contrary in his former Books, that afterwards he ſeems to have retracted his Errours in the Council of Dioſpolis, whereof he had received the Acts; and then he diſſembled again ſometimes, confeſſing the Neceſſity of Grace, and often affirming, That the Will had Power of it ſelf to abſtain from Sin: So that God's Aſſiſtance, in his Opinion, was afforded us over and above, to enable us to do that which is good with the greater Eaſe. Theſe are the Opinions refuted by St. Auguſtin in this Letter, where he urges a Paſſage from a Letter, written by St. Paulinus, to convince him, that he ought to reject them, and condemn Pelagius.

The next Letter to Dardanus, is a Didactical Treatiſe, mentioned by St Auguſtin in his Retractations. There he ſhews how God is ſaid to be Omnipreſent, upon occaſion of Two Queſtions, which Dardanus had propoſed to him: The one upon theſe Words of Jeſus Chriſt to the good Thief, This Day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe; and the other, Whether Children have any Notion of God in the Womb. The former Difficulty is grounded upon this, That the humane Nature of Chriſt was not in Paradiſe immediately after his Death, becauſe his Soul deſcended into Hell, and his Body was laid in the Grave. St. Auguſtin ſaith, That the Soul of Jeſus Chriſt, may be ſaid to have been in the ſame Place where the Souls of the Righteous were, which may be called Paradiſe. But he thinks it more probable, That this is meant of Chriſt's Divinity, which never ceaſed to be in Paradiſe. This puts St. Auguſtin upon treating of God's Immenſity, whereof he ſpeaketh after a very high manner; ſhewing, That we ought not to conceive of it, as of a Corporeal Extention. He diſcourſeth, likewiſe, of the particular manner, how God dwelleth in the Saints, and in Baptized Infants that do not yet know him. And this leads him to the Second Queſtion, about the Knowledge of Children that are yet in their Mother's Womb. He affirms, affirms, That they have no knowledge, no, not after their Birth, and that the Holy Ghoſt dwelleth in them, and they know it not; whereupon he enlargeth upon Juſtification that is wrought by Regeneration, and ſpeaketh of Birth in Sin, the Neceſſity of Baptiſmal Grace, and of Faith in Jeſus Chriſt. It is evident by St. Auguſtin's Retractations, That this Letter was written in the Year 417. It is directed to the Prefect of Gaul, to whom St. Jerom wrote alſo a Letter. St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

The 188th. Letter to Juliana, the Mother of Demetrias, is a warning given to that holy Widow by St. Auguſtin and Alypius, not to ſuffer her ſelf to be ſurprized by the hidden Poiſon in the Letter to Demetrias, whereof they did not yet know Pelagius to be the Author. He ſhews her, That this Letter aſcribeth all to Free-Will; whereas the Principle of Chriſtian Piety is to attribute all to God.

In the 189th. St. Auguſtin lays down ſeveral very uſeful and edifying Rules to Boniface, to live Chriſtianly in the Profeſſion of Arms; recommending to him, above all things, Charity towards God, and towards his Neighbour; as the Foundation of all Vertues. He ſhows, That to be a Soldier is no unlawful Profeſſion, and that a Soldier may be a good Chriſtian, if he be deſirous of Peace, and goes to War with no other deſign but that of procuring it. And that Neceſſity alone ought to put him upon taking away his Enemy's Life, and that his own Will ought not to have any hand in it. That he ought to do no Injuſtice nor Violence, nor get Wealth by wicked means. At laſt, he adviſes him to remember, That every good thing cometh from God: It is not certainly known in what Year this Letter was written.

The 190th. to Optatus contains St. Auguſtin's Opinions touching the Original of the Soul. Firſt of all he ſuppoſes Original Sin as an indubitable thing; Then he ſaith, That whereas he had written; that we may without danger be ignorant of the Soul's Extraction, it is with this Proviſo, that we certainly hold, 1. That it is not of God's Subſtance, but a Creature. 2. That it is a Spirit, and not a Body. 3. That it is not placed in the Body for a Puniſhment of Sins committed in another Life. He ſaith afterwards, That no Man can be juſtified but by Faith in Jeſus Chriſt, and that it was that Faith which juſtified the Patriarchs. He enlargeth alſo upon the free Predeſtination of God's Elect, which is the choice that God made of them to take them by his Grace out of the maſs of Perdition, and upon the eternal Death of Children dying before Baptiſm. Laſtly, He endeavours to prove, That if we reject Tertullian's groſs Opinion, who ſuppoſed the Soul to be Corporeal, the Notion of the Propagation of Souls agreeth beſt with Original Sin, though it hath ſome Difficulties. He obſerves, That it was the moſt general Opinion in the Weſt, and he believes it more probable, than that of conſtant Creation; yet he dares not decide any thing upon this Matter, neither will he condemn the Pelagians for holding this latter Opinion; But becauſe they draw from it a Conſequence againſt Original Sin, he ſpeaks of the Condemnation of Pelagius's Doctrine by the Popes, Innocent and Zoſimus, and quotes a Letter of the latter which is not extant: St. Auguſtin writ this Letter at Cæſarea, where he dwelt ſome time after the Council of Carthage, in the Year 418. There are theſe two curious Sentences: The firſt, We make our ſelves unworthy of Knowledge, if we deſire that others ſhould believe that we know them, when we are ignorant of them. The ſecond, It is raſhneſs to decide by Conjecture what Reaſon doth not diſcover, and what the Holy Scripture doth not clearly teach.

In the 191ſt. Letter, St. Auguſtin congratulates Sixtus the Prieſt, afterwards Biſhop of Rome, who was ſuſpected to have been a favourer of the Pelagians, becauſe he declared himſelf for Grace. He deſireth him to beware of thoſe, who not daring to ſet forth their Doctrine openly, did notwithſtanding ſow it ſecretly; praying him to reclaim thoſe with Meekneſs, whom Fear kept in deep ſilence, but preſerved ſtill the ſame Venom in their Hearts.

In the 192d. he entertaineth Cœleſtinus the Deacon, afterwards Biſhop of Rome, with the Duties of Chriſtian Charity. He ſaith, That this Vertue is not of the Nature of thoſe Things which ceaſe to be after performance; for the more a Man performs Actions of Charity, the more Charitable he is. That no Man ought to want this Duty towards his Friends, ſince all Men are obliged to exerciſe it towards their Enemies: That Charity towards Enemies, is the way to make them Friends: for it makes us deſire that they ſhould become vertuous, which they cannot be, unleſs they be in Charity with thoſe that wiſh them ſo much good, even the ſame Charity that others have for them. That it is not with Charity as it is with Money: for the leſs we think to be re-imburſed, the more we love thoſe that we give Money to; whereas the more deſirous we are that thoſe ſhould prove Charitable towards us, to whom we ſhew Charity, the more we love them. One may plainly ſee that this Letter is a Chriſtian Complement wittily written. It was ſent at the ſame time with the two next to Albinus, after St. Auguſtin's return to Hippo, whither he did not come till the 20th of September of the Year 418. for it appeareth by the Acts of the Conference which he had with Emeritus, that he was then in Mauritania.

The 193d. Letter lately Publiſhed out of a Manuſcript, is directed to Mercator, who is thought to be the ſame that writ againſt Pelagius and the Neſtorians. St. Auguſtin having excuſed himſelf, that he had not given him an Anſwer ſooner, by reaſon of his Journey into Mauritania, ſhows him here, That ſince the Pelagians own that Children in Baptiſm believe through other Men's Faith, they may own likewiſe, That Original Sin is remitted to them, by reaſon of others believing. He addeth ſome proofs, of their being born in Sin; and that they cannot enjoy

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

enjoy Eternal Life without being Baptized. He holds Death to be a Puniſhment for Sin, and anſwereth the Objection of ſome Pelagians; who, to prove the contrary, alledged the Examples of Enoch and Elias, who died not. St. Auguſtin anſwereth, That it is probable that they ſhall die ſome time or other; but if they die not, it is by the ſpecial grace of God, who is able to remit the Puniſhment of Sin no leſs than Sin it ſelf. This Objection raiſes another that is better grounded: How can the Penalty of Sin remain, after the Sin is remitted? St. Auguſtin doth not reſolve it here, but referrs us to his Book of Infant-Baptiſm. What followeth concerning the Reſurrection, is taken out of St. Auguſtin's Anſwers to Dulcitius his Objections.

The next, which is the Second Letter to Sixtus Presbyter of Rome, was written ſome time after the former; He relates there the Pelagian Errors, which he refutes by confirming the contrary Doctrine. Theſe Errors are, 1. That Free-Will can do no Good without God's help. 2. That God were Unjuſt, if he ſhew'd Mercy to ſome and not to others. 3. That God doth indeed afford help, but that is only to Merit. 4. That Faith, which is the beginning of Juſtification, depends upon Mens Free-Will. St. Auguſtin oppoſes to theſe Opinions St. Paul's Doctrine in the Epiſtle to the Romans; from which he concludes, That all Men are in the State of Perdition, and that God gives his Grace, and ſheweth Mercy to whom he pleaſeth; He oweth it to none, and they that receive it not, cannot accuſe him of Injuſtice, ſince they are condemned either for Original Sin, or for thoſe which they have added beſides; That he grants not this Grace to Merit, ſince there are no Merits previous to Grace; That he hardneth the Heart, not by inſpiring Malice, but by withdrawing his Grace. Theſe are the Maxims laid down by St. Auguſtin in this Letter, and which he confirms by the Example of Children dying either before or after Baptiſm, as it pleaſeth God; and by what St. Paul ſaith in the Epiſtle to the Romans, of Jacob's Predeſtination, and Eſau's Reprobation.

The 195th. is a Note of S. Jerom's to St. Auguſtin, wherein he calls him Happy, becauſe he was hated by Hereticks for refuting them; and had in Veneration by Catholicks, for defending the Doctrine of the Church.

In the 196th. to Aſellicus, St. Auguſtin having proved, That it is not lawful for Chriſtians to obſerve the Jewiſh Laws and Ceremonies, treats of the Uſefulneſs and Effects of the Law, and of the Neceſſity of Grace againſt the Pelagians. Donatus was Primate of Numidia when this Letter was written; he was in that Station in the Council of Carthage in 418, and the Pelagians were Condemned already.

The 197th. Letter is directed to Heſychius Biſhop of Salona. St. Auguſtin endeavoureth to undeceive that Biſhop, who fanſied that the End of the World was at hand, ſhowing, That that time is unknown to Men. He doth not believe it to be very near, becauſe the Goſpel had not yet been Preached throughout the whole Earth. Towards the latter end, he diſapproves the fanciful Opinion of a certain Man, whom St. Jerom in his Commentary upon the Prophet Daniel, had accuſed of raſhneſs, for affirming, That Daniel's Weeks related to the laſt, and not to the firſt coming of Jeſus Chriſt.

Heſychius returns this Anſwer to St. Auguſtin in the 198th. Letter, That though none knoweth either the Day or the Hour of the laſt Judgment, yet we may know whether it be far off, by the Signs, which Jeſus Chriſt told us ſhould precede his appearing; but however, it is an act of Piety to look for it, as near at hand. He anſwereth what St. Auguſtin had ſaid, That the Goſpel not having been Preached all the Earth over, it was not likely that the Day of Judgment ſhould happen ſo ſoon. He anſwers it, I ſay, by ſhewing that the Apoſtle St. Paul had look'd upon that Prophecy as already fulfilled; and at laſt approveth of their Opinion, who believed that the Weeks ſpoken of by Daniel, were not yet fulfilled. One of the Reaſons this Biſhop grounded his Opinion upon, is that Jeſus Chriſt foretelleth the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the End of the World at once: And he aſſures him, That the Son of Man will be at hand, when Jeruſalem is deſtroy'd.

St. Auguſtin having received this Letter, writes back to Heſychius the 199th. Letter; wherein, after a long Diſcourſe upon this Principle of Morality, That without enquiring when Chriſt ſhall come, we ought rather be ready to receive him when he cometh: He ſaith, That no place of Scripture doth mark the time of the Laſt Judgment, nor teaches whether it be near or far off. He refutes the Inferences which Heſychius had drawn from ſome Paſſages of Scripture; and ſhews, That Daniel's Weeks cannot be underſtood of Chriſt's laſt coming: And at laſt he diſtinguiſheth in the Prophecies in the 24th. Ch. of St. Matthew's Goſpel, and in the 13th. Ch. of St. Mark, what concerns the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, from that which relates to the End of the World; and clears the Circumſtances of thoſe Predictions. Finally, he concludes, That we ſhould have a care not to be miſtaken upon that Queſtion. That none is miſtaken, but when he thinks he knows, and affirms what he knows not. He repreſents the Diſpoſition of three ſorts of Perſons who wait for the Appearance of Jeſus Chriſt; One believeth, That he will ſhortly come; The other thinks, That it will be a great while firſt; And the third confeſſes, That he doth not know whether he will come ſooner or later. He ſaith thereupon, That the Notion of his coming quickly, is more according to our Wiſhes; but it is moſt dangerous if we ſhould be deceived. He on the contrary, who believes, That Jeſus Chriſt will not come ſo ſoon, but yet believeth, hopeth, and deſireth his coming, cannot be deceived, but his Error will turn to his Comfort: As for the Third, who owneth that he knows nothing of it, he wiſhes for what the firſt promiſeth, and if ready to bear patiently what the other puts him in fear of, and aſſerts

Nothing,

Nothing, is out of danger of being deceived. Experience hath taught us, That the Condition of the last is best, and to be embraced of all Men, until the Day of Judgment comes. These three Letters in all probability belong to the Year 418. or 419. St. Augustin. Tome II.

St. Augustin wrote the 200dth. Letter to Count Valerius, about his Books of Concupiscence and Matrimony, which he sent unto him after he had finished them in 418.

The 201st. is an Order from the Emperors Honorius and Theodosius, directed to Aurelius Bishop of Carthage, whereby they enjoyn him, to let all the Bishops know, That they must subscribe the Condemnation of Pelagius and Cœlestius, whom they had expelled out of Rome; and that as many as through impious obstinacy should refuse to do it, should be deprived of their Dignities, Banished for ever out of their Cities, and Excluded from the Communion of the Church. This Letter is dated the 8th. of June 419. At the latter end it is observed, That another like this was directed to St. Augustin, which shows, That the respect which the Emperors paid to the Dignity of the Church of Carthage, they paid likewise to the Merit and high Reputation of St. Augustin.

The 202d. is a Letter of St. Jerom's to Alypius and St. Augustin, expressing his joy for their Victory over Pelagius and Cœlestius; and excusing himself for not having yet refuted the Books of one Anianus, a Pelagian. It is the same Anianus who translated some of St. Chrysostom's Homilies, and dedicated them to Orontius, a Pelagian Bishop, condemned in the Council of Ephesus. Bede mentions a Letter of this Author directed to Evangelus, where he gives to those of St. Augustin's Party the name of Traducians.

By the 203d. Letter, St. Augustin exhorteth Largus to despise the Goods of this Life, whereof he knew the Vanity by his own Experience, and to profit by the Mischiefs that happened to him. This Largus was yet Proconsul in Africa in 419. This Letter seems to have been written in 420. after his being recalled.

In the 204th to Dulcitius, St. Augustin shews, That he had already fully answered the Donatists, and laments the fury of those Wretches that murthered themselves, when they could do the Catholicks no further harm. Upon this occasion he treateth of Murder, and shows, That it is not lawful for a Man to kill himself, nor any other that was desirous of Death; He Answers the Case of Razias, which is well told in the Maccabees, and was looked upon as a noble and generous Action, but not approved by him as Wise and Vertuous. This Letter was written in Gaudentius's time, and composed in 420.

The 205th. Letter to Consentius, contains the Explication of some Difficulties about the Nature of glorified Bodies. Consentius had asked St. Augustin, whether our Saviour's Body, hath now Flesh and Bones, with the same parts and features which he had upon Earth. St. Augustin resolveth this question, saying, That Christ's Body is altogether such in Heaven as it was upon Earth, when he left it to ascend into Heaven, and that it appeareth by the Gospel, that he had Hands and Feet, Flesh and Bones, as well after as before the Resurrection: That no mention is made of his Blood, and it is not convenient to ingage too far in those Matters, for fear of entring upon other very hard Questions, such as these; If there is Blood, is not there also Phlegm, Choler, or Melancholy, since the mixture of these four Humours make up the Temper of Humane Bodies: Yet St. Augustin denieth not but that these Humours may be in glorified Bodies; but that we ought to have a care of believing them alterable and corruptible; whereupon he undertakes to show by the Testimony of St. Paul, that glorified Bodies shall be incorruptible and freed from all corporeal and earthly qualities. Consentius had asked likewise, whether those that had been baptized and died without Penance for Sins committed after Baptism, should obtain Remission of them in a certain time. St. Augustin remits him to his Treatise of Faith and Good Works, where he had handled that Question. Lastly, Consentius desired to know, Whether God's breathing upon Adam was his Soul. St. Augustin answers, That it was either his Soul, or that which produced it; but we must be sure not to believe that the Soul is any part of God. Consentius to whom this Letter is written, is the same to whom St. Augustin dedicated his Treatise of Lying, composed in 420. It is probable, that, if this Letter be of the same time, it was written after his Book of Faith and Good Works, which was made in 413.

The 206th. is a Letter of Recommendation to Count Valerius in the behalf of Bishop Felix.

The next, is that which St. Augustin writ to Bishop Claudius, when he sent him his Books against Julianus, published after St. Jerom's Death in 421.

In the 208th. St. Augustin exhorts the Virgin Felicia, newly returned to the Church from the Donatist's Party, and Scandalized by some Bishops disorders; to continue always in the bosom of the Catholick Church, notwithstanding all those Scandals where she was afflicted. And this gave occasion to his Discourse of Good and Evil Pastors. It is thought, that the occasion of this Letter, was the Scandal given by Antonius Bishop of Fussala, mentioned in the following Letter, supposed to have been written in the end of the Year 422. but that is uncertain.

It is equally uncertain that the next Letter to Pope Cœlestine is written by St. Augustin; some Criticks doubt it, 1. Because the Stile of this Letter is not, as they pretend, perfectly like that of the other Letters of St. Augustin. 2. Because it is found but in one only Manuscript of the Vatican Library, which is not above 200 Years old. 3. Because St. Augustin seems to speak there after a low manner, and unworthy of his wonted Courage. 4. Because it seemeth not to agree with the Opinions of St. Augustin, nor of the other Africans, about Appeals. 5. Because Cœ- leſtine could not threaten then to ſend Clerks into Africa, to ſee his Judgments executed, as he doth in this Letter; becauſe Affairs in Africa were then in great Diſorder, and the Emperors had not much Authority in thoſe Provinces that were Uſurp'd by a Tyrant. Yet it muſt be confeſſed, That this Letter agrees exceeding well to the Cuſtoms and Manners of the African Church in St. Auguſtin's time, and has a Character of Sincerity. However, If this Letter be truly St. Auguſtin's, he writ it in the beginning of Cœleſtine's Pontificat, ſince he begins it with congratulating his Promotion, which was compaſſed without Intrigues or Diviſion. He ſpeaks afterwards of Antonius his Buſineſs, whom he had ordained Biſhop of Fuſſala, a Town in the Dioceſs of Hippo, where no Biſhop had been before. This Man was brought up in St. Auguſtin's Monaſtery, and looked upon by him as a Man of great Probity: but ſeeing himſelf exalted to ſuch a Dignity, he gave way to his Paſſions, lived diſorderly, and greatly vexed the People that were under his Juriſdiction: Being accuſed before the Provincial Council, he could not be convicted of the Sin of Uncleanneſs that was laid to his Charge; but it appeared that he had oppreſſed and tyrannized over the People intolerably: Thus the Judges finding not ſufficient cauſe utterly to deprive him, and being withal unwilling his Fault ſhould paſs without Puniſhment, left him the quality of Biſhop, upon condition that he ſhould not perform the Functions thereof, nor have any Authority over a People whom he had uſed ſo unjuſtly.

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

To hinder the Execution of this Judgment, Antonius appealed to the Pope, who pretended a Right to receive Appeals from the Judgments of the African Biſhops, though theſe conteſted his Right. This happened at a time, when they had bound themſelves to ſee the Canons of the Council of Sardica, which the Pope had alledged, as the Canons of the Council of Nice, executed with this Proviſo, Till they were aſſured that they were actually made by the Council of Nice. Antonius therefore obtained of Boniface a Letter, enjoyning that he ſhould be reſtored, if he had truly ſtated his Caſe. He returned triumphing with that Letter. But the African Biſhops regarded it not: And being threatned, that the Civil Authority ſhould be made uſe of to make them obſerve the Pope's Orders, St. Auguſtin took upon himſelf to write this Letter to Cœleſtine, wherein he intreateth him by the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, and by St. Peter's Memory, who forbad the Paſtors of the Church to exerciſe Dominion; not to ſuffer things to go to that extremity: telling him, That his Heart was ſo ſet upon that Buſineſs, That he would renounce his Biſhoprick, if Antonius was reſtored at Fuſſala. He was not reſtored; and we learn by the 224th. Letter, That his Dioceſs was immediately dependant upon St. Auguſtin, though afterwards we meet with a Biſhop of that place.

Antonius flattered himſelf with theſe hopes, either that they would have degraded him from the Epiſcopal Dignity, or have left him in the Biſhoprick. St. Auguſtin affirms on the contrary, That there are Examples of Judgments given, or approved by the Holy Apoſtolick See, whereby Biſhops were Puniſhed, without being abſolutely degraded: He citeth three of the lateſt; That of Priſcus Biſhop of the Province of Mauritania Cæſarienſis, who was ſuffered to continue in his Biſhoprick, being only barr'd from the Metropolitan Dignity, to which his Seniority might have promoted him in his turn; That of Victor, Biſhop of the ſame Province, who was likewiſe excluded the right of Primacy, and with whom no other Biſhop did communicate in his Dioceſs; And that of Biſhop Laurentius, with whom they proceeded as they had done with Antonius of Fuſſala. St. Auguſtin might have alledged beſides, thoſe Canons which allow to Biſhops the Rank and Honour of their Dignity, and yet deprive them both of the Function and Juriſdiction.

In the 210th. Letter St. Auguſtin inſtructeth Felicitas and Ruſticus how the Evils of this Life are to be endured, and gives them Rules for brotherly Correction. It is probable, that the occaſion of Writing upon this Subject, was the Diſſention which happened among the Virgins conſecrated to God, ſpoken of in the following Letter, about their Superior, whom the Nuns deſigned to change. St. Auguſtin having reproved them for it, and exhorted them to Peace and Obedience, preſcribeth them a moſt wiſe and prudent Rule of Life. This Letter was written after the Death of St. Auguſtin's Siſter, who governed that Monaſtery at the time when moſt of the Donatiſts were re-united, in 424.

The 212th. is a Letter of Recommendation to Quintianus, in the behalf of an holy Widow named Galla, and of her Daughter Simpliciola, who carried about with them the Reliques of the Martyr St. Stephen.

After this Letter, comes the Act made at Hippo, upon the 14th. of September, 426. in the Church of Peace: whereby St. Auguſtin chuſeth Heraclius the Prieſt to be his Succeſſor and Coadjutor, yet without admitting him into Biſhop's Orders; and the People approve his Choice with their Acclamations.

The Occaſion of the 214th. Letter is this: St. Auguſtin having been informed by two Brethren of the Monaſtery at Adrumetum, that there had been ſome Diſputes among the Monks of that Convent, about Grace and Free-Will; becauſe, ſome willing to eſtabliſh the Doctrine of Grace, went ſo far as to deny Free-Will: whereas the others acknowledging Free-Will, did confeſs notwithſtanding, that it was aſſiſted by the help of the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt; approves of the latter Opinion; affirming, That he taught no other Doctrine, in his Letter to Saint Sixtus.

He again handleth the ſame Matter in the next Letter, directed to Valentinus, Abbot of the Monaſtery at Adrumetum, and to the Brethren of the ſame Monaſtery. He joined to

to this Letter his Book of Grace and Free-Will, which he ſent at the ſame time to inſtruct them.

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

Valentinus anſwered St. Auguſtin in the 216th. Letter: wherein, after he had thank'd him for his Letters, he gives him an Account how that Diſturbance happened in his Monaſtery, by the Imprudence of five or ſix that were offended at thoſe Diſcourſes of St. Auguſtin, which Florus had brought from Uzala to their Convent. That Evodius, Biſhop of Uzala, not being able to ſatisfie them, they came to him: That this Viſit had produced a good Effect, ſeeing it brought to their Monaſtery ſuch holy Inſtructions as his were, and had confirmed them in their Belief touching Grace and Free-Will. Theſe Letters are of the Year 426.

The 217th. Letter of St. Auguſtin is written to Vitalis, to undeceive him of thoſe Notions which he had then taken up; namely, That the Beginning of Faith was not a Gift of God, but the mere Product of Man's Will. St. Auguſtin refutes this Opinion, by the Prayers of the Church; by St. Cyprian's Teſtimony, in his Book of The Lord's Prayer; and by ſeveral other Paſſages of Scripture. Afterwards he explains the difference betwixt the Law and Grace; proving, That the True Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, doth not conſiſt in Natural Helps, or in External Graces. At laſt he propoſes Twelve Articles; wherein he comprehends whatſoever he thinks neceſſary to be believed concerning Grace. The Twelve Articles are theſe:

" I. We know, That before Men were born into this World, they had no other wherein they " did either Good or Evil.... But deſcending from Adam according to the Fleſh, they par- " take, by their Birth, of the Poyſon of that ancient Death which he became ſubject to by his " Sin; and that they are not delivered from Eternal Death, except they are regenerated in " Jeſus Chriſt through his Grace.

" II. We know, That the Grace of God is not given upon the account of any Merit, either " to Infants, or to Men that are come to the Age of Reaſon.

" III. We know, That Grace is an Aſſiſtance afforded for every Action, to thoſe that have " attained to the Age of Reaſon.

" IV. We know, That it is not given to all Men; and that thoſe to whom it is given, re- " ceive it, without having deſerved it by their Works, or by their Will; which appears parti- " cularly in Infants.

" V. We know, That it is out of God's mere Mercy, that it is given to thoſe to whom it is " given.

" VI. We know, That it is by a juſt Judgment of God, that it is not given to thoſe to whom it " is not given.

" VII. We know, That we ſhall all appear before the Judgment-Seat of Jeſus Chriſt, that " every one may receive either Reward or Puniſhment according to what he ſhall have done in " the Body, and not according to what he ſhould have done had he lived longer.

" VIII. We know, That Infants ſhall not receive Recompence or Puniſhment, but ac- " cording to what they ſhall have done in the Body; that is, whil'ſt they were in the Body; " that is, according as ſome have been regenerate, and others not.

" IX. We know, That Eternal Happineſs is enſured to all thoſe that die in Jeſus Chriſt; " and that nothing is imputed to them of what they might have done, had they been " alive.

" X. We know, That as many as Believe in God, Believe willingly, and by an Action " of their free Will.

" XI. We know, That we ought to pray unto God for thoſe that Believe not, that they " would Believe.

" XII. We know, That whenſoever any of theſe embraces the Faith, we are to give God " Thanks ſincerely, and from the bottom of our Hearts, as being an Effect of his Mercy, and " that when we do it as we are wont to do, we perform a Duty incumbent upon us.

Theſe are the Twelve fundamental Points of St. Auguſtin's Doctrine of Grace; to the which he reſtrains the Faith of the Catholick Church about that Matter. He applieth them likewiſe to his particular Diſpute with Vitalis, to know whether Grace goes before, or only followeth the Will; that is, Whether Grace be given us, becauſe we will have it? as Vitalis affirms: Or, Whether the Will it ſelf is not a thing which God worketh in us by his Grace? as St. Auguſtin pretends that it followeth upon the Twelve Principles which he lays down. To ſhew this, the reſt of this Letter is taken up; wherein he concludes, That the Beginning of Faith, Converſion, and a good Mind, comes from God, and not from Free-Will. This Letter, in all probability, is one of the laſt of St. Auguſtin's Works concerning Grace.

In the 218th. Letter St. Auguſtin exhorts one Palatinus to perſevere and to proceed in Piety, and not to truſt to his own Strength. This likewiſe is one of the laſt of St. Auguſtin's Letters.

The 219th. is a Letter written in the Names of Aurelius, St. Auguſtin, and Florentius, Biſhops in Africa, to Proculus and Cilinnius, Biſhops in Gaul, concerning Leporius the Monk; who having been expelled out of the Dioceſs of Marſeilles, becauſe of his Errors about the Incarnation, made a Retractation of them in Africa; which was drawn up by St. Auguſtin, and ſent to the Gallican Biſhops with this Letter; whereby they entreat the Biſhops to whom they they write, to receive him, ſeeing he had condemned thoſe Errors for which they had expelled him. This Letter was written after the Books of Correction and Grace.

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

The 220th. is directed to Count Boniface; who being married again after the death of his former Wife, was engaged in worldly Buſineſſes, and had committed very conſiderable Faults. St. Auguſtin adviſeth him by this Letter, to Contain, if he could perſuade his Wife to conſent to it; and to make uſe of his Authority, only to do good. This Letter is full of excellent inſtructions for Men of the World.

Quodvultdeus, a Deacon of Carthage, deſireth St. Auguſtin, by the 221ſt. Letter, to draw up a Catalogue of Hereſies. St. Auguſtin excuſes himſelf from doing it, in the 222d. The Deacon having again urged it by the 223d. he promiſes him in the 224th. to do it when he is at leiſure. Theſe Letters were written after his Book of Retractations, in 428.

The 225th. Letter is St. Proſper's; whereby he gives St. Auguſtin notice, That ſeveral Chriſtians of Marſeilles having ſeen his Works againſt the Pelagians, had believed, That what he taught concerning the Vocation of the Elect, was contrary to the Doctrine of the Fathers; and that they were more averſe to his Notions, when they had read his Book of Correction and Grace. Then he relateth their Opinions, and ſaith, (1.) "That they indeed acknowledge "that all Men have ſinned in Adam; and that our Salvation is not the Product of our Works, "but of Grace, that works the ſame by the means of Regeneration: But they hold, That the "Propitiation made by the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, is offered to all Men without Exception; ſo that as many as will embrace the Faith, and be Baptized, may obtain Salvation. "(2.) That before the Creation, God by his Fore-knowledge, did know thoſe that ſhould "Believe, and who with the ſuccour of that Grace enabling them to preſerve that Faith which "they had once embraced, ſhould maintain the ſame unto the end; and that he had predeſtinated them to his Eternal Kingdom, foreſeeing that after he had freely called them, they "would make themſelves worthy of his Election, and end their Life holily. (3.) That God "calls all Men to the Faith, and to good Works, by his Inſtructions; and that Salvation is "the Reward of thoſe that are willing to do good. (4.) That whatſoever is ſaid of the Decree "of God's Will, touching the Call of Men, whereby it is ſaid that the Elect have been ſeparated from the Reprobate, is fit for nothing but to inſpire Men with Deſpondency, Idleneſs, "Negligence and Lukewarmneſs; becauſe it ſeems to no purpoſe to work, if the Reprobate "cannot be ſaved, nor the Elect be damned. (5.) That thereby all Vertues are deſtroyed. "(6.) That this Doctrine doth eſtabliſh, under the Name of Predeſtination, a fatal and unavoidable Neceſſity, or forceth Men to ſay that Mankind were created of different Natures. "(7.) That what is alledged out of the Epiſtle to the Romans, to prove, That Grace doth "prevent the Merits of the Elect, was never underſtood in this ſence by any Eccleſiaſtical Author. (8.) That ſome reduce that Grace which prevents our Merits, to the natural Faculties of "Free-Will, and of Reaſon; by the good uſe whereof we arrive to that Grace which makes us to "be regenerated in Jeſus Chriſt. (9.) That God hath indeed reſolved to communicate his Grace "only to thoſe that are Regenerate; but that all are called to partake of that ſaving Gift, whether it be by the Natural Law, or by the Preaching of the Goſpel. (10.) That Men are as "much diſpoſed to Good as Evil: That the Spirit and the Will may equally turn to Evil; and, "That Obedience or Diſobedience to God's Command, wholly depends upon our Liberty. "(11.) That Infants dying before the Uſe of Reaſon, are either ſaved or damned, according to "what God foreſees that they would have been, had they come to the Age of Acting and "Deſerving. (12.) That the ſame is to be ſaid of the Nations which God hath not enlightned with the Light that is neceſſary to Salvation". Theſe are moſt of the Points of the Semipelagians Doctrine, and of the Objections which they made againſt that of St. Auguſtin. St. Proſper intreateth him by this Letter to refute theſe Perſons Opinions, and to clear the Difficulties propoſed by them, telling him, That Hilary Biſhop of Arles, a conſiderable Man, and much addicted to the Study of Spiritual and Eccleſiaſtical Matters; and who did much admire and approve St. Auguſtin's Doctrine in all other things, could not reliſh his Principles about the Decree of the Vocation of the Elect.

This is not that Hilary, who had been St. Auguſtin's Diſciple, who writ at the ſame time with Proſper to St. Auguſtin upon the ſame Subject.

This Letter is the 226th. therein he gives a more particular Account than St. Proſper had done, of thoſe Points of St. Auguſtin's Doctrine, that diſturbed the Prieſts of Marſeilles, of the Objections which they made, and of their Anſwers to thoſe Paſſages of Scripture that were quoted by St. Auguſtin; which may be all reduced to theſe four Propoſitions. 1. That Man may believe, and deſire to be healed, by the ſtrength of his own Free-Will. 2. That when he is gone ſo far, God never denieth him his Grace. 3. That Election and Reprobation are Conſequences of God's Preſcience, whereby he ſees the Good or the Evil which Men ſhall do, or ſhould have done if they had lived. 4. That Grace is not effectual of it ſelf, and what help ſoever God affords to thoſe that are Predeſtinated; it is ſtill in their own Power either to make uſe of, or to reject it. Both theſe Letters were written in 429. after Hilary's promotion to the Biſhoprick of Arles. St. Auguſtin anſwered them by his Books of the Predeſtination of the Saints, and of the Gift of Perſeverance.

The 227th. to the holy old Man Alypius, is written upon the Converſion of two Pagans who had been baptized at Eaſter; The Name of the one, was Gabinianus; the other was a Phyſician called called Dioscorus, for whom God had wrought several Miracles, related by St. Augustin in this Letter. It is here placed among those that were written in 429. but the Date of it is uncertain. St. Augustin. Tome II.

The Date of the next to Honoratus is certain by Possidius's Testimony, who quotes it in the Life of St. Augustin; and affirms, That he writ it about the latter end of his Life; when the Vandals were almost Masters of Africa. He examines the Question in this Letter, Whether Priests, Clerks, and Bishops, may fly and forsake their Flocks in time of Persecution? St. Augustin affirms, That there are but two Occasions upon which they are permitted so to do. 1. If the Persecutors designed Mischief to some particular Pastors by name, because then it is profitable, even for the Good of the Church, for them to flee, and leave the others quiet. 2. When the Ministers of Jesus Christ meet with none that have need of their Ministery. In all other Cases, Pastors are obliged to watch over the Flock which Christ hath committed to them; neither can they forsake it without a Crime. This St. Augustin excellently proves in this Letter, and in terms dictated by the Fire of his fervent Charity, and with Reasons supported by a Zeal altogether Divine. He represents the desolation of a Town which is like to be taken; and the Necessity of the presence of Christ's Ministers. " In such occasions, saith he, What flocking " is there to the Church of Persons of all Ages and Sexes; whereof, some require Baptism, others " Reconciliation, others to be put under Penance, and all crave comfort. If then no Ministers " are to be found. What misfortune is that for such as go out of this Life, being Unregenerate, " or not loosed? What Grief is it to their Kindred, if they be Faithful, that they cannot hope " to see them with them in everlasting rest? What Crys, what Lamentations, nay, what Im- " precations from some, to see themselves without Ministers, and without Sacraments? If on " the contrary, Ministers have proved Faithful, in not forsaking their People; they are help- " full to all the World, according to the Abilities which it hath pleased God to endue them with; " Some are baptized, others are reconciled; none is deprived of the Communion of the Lord's- " Body. All are conforted, fortified, and exhorted to implore by fervent Prayers the Assistance " of the Mercy of God. This Passage is very remarkable, since it shews what was the Church's Opinion at all times concerning the Necessity of Sacraments

St. Augustin handleth two other Questions upon the same Subject: The First, Whether it be lawful for Pastors to flee in such Calamities, that they may preserve themselves for the Service of the Church in more peaceable times. He saith, That they may do it if there be other Ministers, to supply their places, and who are necessary to the Church. The Second, if it happens that the Persecution were only against the Pastors, in this case they may flee; and whether is better, That the Church should want them by their going away, or be deprived of them by their Death? St. Augustin answers, That this Supposition is very extraordinary; That it seldom happens, that they aim only at Church-men; That in this case they might hide themselves. It is to be presumed, That as all the Laity shall not perish, so some of the Clergy may escape. That it were to be wished, that in such occasions some should fly, and others remain; Then it would be a fine thing, if among Ministers there should be a Dispute, who should stay behind, that the Church might not be forsaken. That to decide this Difference, it should be convenient to cast Lots, that none might go about to free himself from the necessity of staying, under pretence of being more necessary for the Church than others.

He concludes with these words, We do what Jesus Christ, either Permits or Commands, if we withdraw when there are other Ministers to serve the Church. But when by our flight Christ's Sheep are deprived of the Food that is to sustain the life of their Souls, then we are hirelings.

The 229th. Letter is directed to Count Darius, who was sent into Africa to treat of Peace. St. Augustin wishes him Joy of that Employ. The Count gives him Thanks by the 230th. Letter, and prayeth him to send him his Book of Confessions. This Saint satisfies him by the 231st. Letter, wherein he treateth occasionally of the love of Praise. He saith thereupon, 1. That Men ought not to desire Praises for that which is not praise-worthy in them. 2. That they should not propose to themselves as the end of their good Actions, to get Commendations from Men. 3. Yet they may desire the Praises of Men, for the sake of those very Men, because the Praises given to them, are profitable for others. 4. That such as find not in themselves those Vertues for which they are commended, ought to be ashamed that they are not what they are thought to be, and what they should be indeed; and this may make them desire to become such. 5. That on the contrary, if there be in them something of that which is commended, they are to give God thanks for it, and be glad to see that others have an esteem for Vertue. Towards the end of the Letter, he speaks of Prosperity and Adversity. The Caresses, saith he, of this World are more dangerous than its Persecutions, unless we look upon the Rest which we may enjoy here, as a means to make us lead a quiet and a peaceable Life in all Godliness and Honesty. This the Apostle commands us to ask of God: for if the heart be not full of Charity and Piety, rest and ease from the troubles of Life is but Perdition: and serves only as an Instrument or Provocation to Lust. If therefore we desire to lead a quiet Life, let it be only upon this account, that we may the better practise both Piety and Charity. These Letters are supposed to have been written about the latter end of St. Augustin's Life.

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

The Fourth Claſſe.

THE Laſt Claſſe of St. Auguſtin's Epiſtles, containeth thoſe whoſe Date is not well known.

The Firſt of theſe is the 232d. Letter, in anſwer to the Inhabitants of Madaura, whereof the greater Part were yet Idolaters. He exhorts them to embrace the Chriſtian Religion; and to enduce them to it, he mentions the dreadfulneſs of the Laſt Judgment, which he proves ſhall infallibly come, becauſe the other Prophecies are fulfilled: He alſo ſaith ſomething concerning the Myſtery of the Trinity, and that of the Incarnation. This Letter was probably written ſome time after the Edict Publiſhed by Honorius in the Year 399. againſt the Temples.

The 233d. Letter, is a Challenge from St. Auguſtin to a Philoſopher, one Longinianus, to oblige him to give an Account in Writing after what manner he believed, that God was to be Worſhipped; and what he thought of Jeſus Chriſt.

Longinianus anſwers St. Auguſtin in the 234th. Letter; and ſaith, according to Plato's Principles, That the way to come to God, is to live Well, and to get the Favour of the inferior Gods by Propitiatory Sacrifices, that we may come to the Supreme Creatour. As for Jeſus Chriſt, he anſwereth, That he can ſay nothing of him, becauſe he knew him not.

St. Auguſtin deſireth Longinianus to explain himſelf about what he had ſaid, That the Way to come to God was to live Well, and to purifie our Selves by Expiations and Sacrifices; he asketh him, Whether it be the ſame Thing, or Two different Things. This is in the 235th Letter.

By the 236th. he gives Deuterius notice, That he had degraded, and expelled a Deacon, one Victorinus, convicted of being a Manichee, though he was but a Hearer among them, and not one of thoſe they call Elect. He ſpeaks of the difference which they made betwixt thoſe Two ſorts of Perſons; and he ſpeaks of their principal Errours.

In the 237th. Letter, he oppoſes the Dreams of the Manichees, and Priſcillianiſts, concerning the Apocryphal Books; and ridicules the phantaſtical Interpretations, which they made of the Canonical Books.

The 238th. is a Relation of a Conference that St. Auguſtin had about the Myſtery of the Trinity, with an Arian, called Paſcentius. The Three following Letters directed to this Arian, carry on the ſame Diſpute.

The 242d. is alſo written to Elpidius, an Arian, to whom he ſhoweth, That the Son of God is equal to his Father.

In the 243d. St. Auguſtin exhorts Latus, who having quitted the World, was tempted to return to it: He exhorts him, I ſay, to perſevere in his former Reſolution; and not to ſuffer his tenderneſs for his Relations, to weaken his Courage. He ſhews, in this Letter, That the renouncing of all Things to follow Chriſt, ought to proceed ſo far, as to leave Father and Mother, to ſerve God.

The 244th. is a Letter of Conſolation to Chryſinus, for a Loſs which he had ſuſtained.

In the 245th. to Poſſidius, St. Auguſtin ſpeaks, with great moderation, of Women's Dreſſes: He thinks, That fine Cloaths ought not to be forbidden to Married Women, who are obliged to pleaſe their Husbands; but he would not have them Paint, or Waſh, to make them appear fairer, or freſher, becauſe it is not probable, that their Husbands ſhould deſire to be thus deceived; for the true Ornament of Chriſtians, of both Sexes, is neither deceitful Painting, nor Gold, nor precious Stuffs, but Purity of Manners. Laſtly, he prohibits thoſe Superſtitious Dreſſings, which they uſed to render a kind of Homage to Dæmons. He tells Poſſidius, That he would not adviſe him to ordain a Man that had been Baptized among the Donatiſts.

The 246th. Letter to Lampadius, is againſt thoſe who accuſe Fate for the Faults which they commit themſelves.

By the 247th. Letter, St. Auguſtin reproves one Romulus, a Rich Man, that would make his Debtors to pay twice; pretending, That they had pay'd his Receiver in his Wrong.

The 248th. to Sebaſtianus, is concerning that Sorrow which affects the Righteous, becauſe of the impiety of the Wicked.

In the 249th. St. Auguſtin Comforteth Reſtitutus the Deacon, who could hardly bear with the Diſorders of ill Chriſtians; and inſtructs him to keep Peace with the Wicked.

The 250th. Letter is very conſiderable. There St. Auguſtin reſolveth a very nice Queſtion: Whether a whole Family, or Community, may be Excommunicated for the Sin of one Member. It is directed to a young Biſhop, called Auxilius, who had Excommunicated one Claſſicianus, with his whole Family, becauſe he came to the Church to demand certain Perſons who had taken Sanctuary there, after he had, by a falſe Oath, profaned the Sanctity of the Goſpel. He asks that Biſhop, VVhat Reaſon he could have for ſo doing; and how the Son can be Excommunicated for the Father's Sin, the VVife for her Husband's, and the Servant for his his Master's, yea the Children that are yet unborn: Excommunication being not a Punishment which falls upon the Body, but an Effect of the Power given to Christ's Ministers, to bind and to loose, which properly concerns the Soul. St. Augustin confesses, That this Bishop might ground his Proceeding upon the Example of some great Bishops, who had Anathematized whole Families for one particular Person's Sin. But he affirms, That they could hardly justifie their Action, and that he never durst do it himself. Yet he addeth, rather in Jest, than Earnest, that he is ready to hear his Reasons, "Your Youth (saith he) and the shortness of the "time that you have been Bishop, will not hinder me from hearing your Reasons. I am ready "to learn of you, how young soever you be; though the Grey Heirs that I wear, and all the "Experience I may have got by those many Years that I have been Bishop, give me some small "Authority over you. After that, he Aggravates the Injustice of that Pretence which might prove the Loss of a Soul for want of Baptism, through the Impossibility to which the Sentence of Excommunication reduced those that were Excommunicated, from having recourse to the Sacraments. Wherefore he exhorteth Auxilius to revoke a Sentence, wherein Anger had a greater share than Justice; and so much the rather, because he, against whom it was pronounced, had no ways deserved it. St. Austin. Tome II.

In the next Letter, St. Augustin sendeth Word to Classicianus, That he will propose that Question in a Council; that he was much concerned at Auxilius his Behaviour, especially because it might happen, that some might die without Baptism; that he will also cause to be examined there, if need be, this Question; Whether those ought not to be Excommunicated who deal unfaithfully with their Securities; and that, if it should be requisite, he would write to the See of Rome about it, that so what was to be done in such Occasions, might be settled with general Consent. But he sticks not to affirm, "That an unjust Excommunication is of great-"er Prejudice to him that pronounces it, than to him against whom it is pronounced; for-"asmuch as the Holy Ghost, who dwelleth in the Saints, never puts any to Pain who deserves "it not: For if Charity is neither rash, nor hasty, What shall we say of him that diffuseth it "into our Hearts?

The 251st. Letter was written by St. Augustin to Pancarius, concerning one Secundinus a Priest, that was accused before him. He tells Pancarius, That he will receive the Accusations of Catholicks, but not of Hereticks; and prays him not to suffer any Disorder to be committed in that Priest's House.

The Four following Letters were written about a Virgin that was an Orphan, who was committed to the Church's Trust. St. Augustin declares, in these Letters, That he takes all the Care of her that may be; and that he will not marry her, without her consent, to a Catholick; and that he was looking out for an advantageous Match for her.

The 256th. is an Answer of St. Augustin's to Christinus, who desired, That he would write to him, to exhort him to give himself to God.

The 257th. is a Letter of Complement to Orontius.

In the 258th. he Congratulates Martianus for being a Catechumen, exhorting him speedily to receive Baptism.

The 259th. was written to reclaim a very lewd Man, one Cornelius, from his evil Way; and adviseth him to imitate his Wife, who lately deceased; upon whom St. Augustin promiseth to write a Panegyrick, if he will follow her Vertue.

By the next, Audax desireth St. Augustin to write longer than he used to do, and concludes with Four Verses in his Commendation. St. Augustin excuseth himself for his great Business, advising him to read his Works, and to come and see him. That's the Subject of the 261st. Letter.

In the 262d. St. Augustin reproves one Ecdicia, a Lady, severely; who (unknown to her Husband, whom she had brought to consent to live in Continence with her) had distributed his whole Estate to the Poor, and put on a Widow's Habit. He enjoyns her to make her Husband Satisfaction; who, out of Anger for his Wife's Behaviour, lived disorderly. This Letter is full of excellent Instructions for married Wives, teaching them not to give their Husbands any occasion of Discontent, by indiscreet Devotion.

The 263d. is a Letter of Consolation to Sapida; who having wrought a Garment for her Brother Timothy, and he dying, desired, for her Comfort, that St. Augustin would wear it. St. Augustin thanks her; but wishes her to seek in the Scripture some more solid Consolations.

In the 264th. he comforteth a Lady called Maxima, who beheld with Grief, and Disturbance, her Country infected with Errors.

The 265th. to Seleuciana, is a Refutation of the Enthusiastical Notions of a certain Novatian, concerning Baptism, and St. Peter's Repentance. He affirmeth, in the First place, That St. Peter was Baptized as well as the other Apostles: That it is an Errour to say, That he had not received the Baptism of Water before his Sin, though he had not yet received the Baptism of the Holy Ghost; yea, he thinks it probable, That the Apostles were Baptized by Christ himself. He saith, Secondly, That when it is said, that St. Peter did Penance, we are not to think that he did as they do in the Church, who are properly called Penitents. Thirdly, he distinguishes Two sorts of Penance, that which goeth before Baptism, and that which cometh after; when after Baptism Men have committed any of those Sins, for which they ought to be Excommunicated

St. Auguſtin. Tome II.

municated, and cut off from the Altar, after which they are reconciled if they deſerve it: And this ſort is the Penance of thoſe to whom is properly given in the Church the Name of Penitents. Beſides theſe two ſorts, They admit alſo a daily Penance of thoſe very Faithful, that live in Piety and Humility; whereby they Petition, and obtain the forgiveneſs of light, but Cuſtomary Sins, which Humane Frailty makes us fall into; and which, ſaith he, we ought to expiate continually, leſt we be over-whelmed with their Number.

In the 266th. Letter, St. Auguſtin offers to Florentina, a Virgin, to explain all the Difficulties which ſhe ſhould deſire to have cleared.

The 267th. is a Pious Letter to Fabiola; wherein he rejoyceth, becauſe ſhe bore the Exile of this Life with difficulty.

St. Auguſtin having borrowed a Sum of Money to pay the Debt of one Faſcius, who retired into the Church, being purſued by his Creditors; intreateth his People in the 268th. Letter, to make a Gathering, that he might repay that Summ.

By the 269th. St. Auguſtin intreateth Biſhop Nobilius to excuſe him, becauſe he could not be preſent at the Conſecration of a new Church, to which that Biſhop had invited him.

The laſt, is a Letter directed to St. Auguſtin, but the Author of it is not known. By it, he that wrote it, complaineth to St. Auguſtin, That he had not met him with Biſhop Severus in the City of Leges, where he hoped to find him.

To theſe Letters, we ought to add the Fragment of a Letter of St. Auguſtin to Maximus, which the Benedictines have taken out of Primaſius his Commentary upon the Revelations, and placed at the latter end of the Second Tome in their Edition. This Fragment contains ſeveral Rules concerning the degrees of Chriſtian Perfection.

It is manifeſt by theſe Extracts from St. Auguſtin's Letters, That they are an inexhauſtible Spring of Principles, Rules, Precepts and Maxims upon the Articles of our Faith, and the Diſcipline of the Church upon Chriſtian Morals, and the Government of Life: For which Reaſon, I inſiſted the longer upon them, and drew the Extracts at large, there being hardly one that deſerves not particular Attention, and where there is not ſome fine ſtroke to be taken notice of. I intend to diſcourſe more briefly of the reſt of this Father's Works.

The Addition of Spurious Pieces annexed to this Volume, is not very large.

There are at firſt Thirteen Letters or Notes under the Names of St. Auguſtin to Boniface, and of Boniface to St. Auguſtin; containing ſeveral Paſſages taken out of St. Auguſtin's Genuine Letters, and ſeveral things may be obſerved, which do not agree with the Hiſtory of that time: They are compoſed by one who had a mind to exerciſe his Pen with that Fiction.

We need not ſpeak here of Pelagius his Letter to Demetrias, which is after theſe to Boniface.

The two next, whereof the one is entituled, St. Cyril of Jeruſalem's Letter to St. Auguſtin concerning the Vertues of St. Jerom: And the other, St. Auguſtin's Anſwer to St. Cyril about St. Jerom's Miracles; diſcover their Impoſture by their very Title; as is obſerved, in another place; ſince St. Cyril of Jeruſalem died long before St. Jerom.

Laſtly, St. Auguſtin's Diſpute with Paſcentius, that was formerly placed among the Letters, Number 178. is very rightly placed by the Benedictines among the Spurious Books. It is certain by the 238th. Letter, That St. Auguſtin had a Conference with Paſcentius; but nothing like that which is mentioned in this Letter. For he obſerves, 1. That he could not obtain, that what was ſaid on both ſides, ſhould be committed to Writing, but every thing is written in this Conference and inſerted into the Publick Acts. In the former, no body Preſided; in this, there is a Judge called Laurentius. That whereof St. Auguſtin ſpeaks, was held at Carthage; This is ſuppoſed to have been at Hippo. Both Poſſidius and St. Auguſtin mention one Conference with Paſcentius; but this ſuppoſeth that they had had a Diſpute before. The Character of both the Perſons introduced ſpeaking in this, is nothing like either St. Auguſtin's or Paſcentius's. This is but a cold Diſpute, and there is little ſaid to the purpoſe. The Anſwers made for St. Auguſtin are weak, and the Objections attributed to Paſcentius, have nothing of that Fire and Rage which Poſſidius taxeth him with. The Stile of thoſe Anſwers, ſuppoſed to be St. Auguſtin's, comes not near that of this Saint, either in his Letters or in his Conferences. There are terms and manners of Expreſſion, which he never uſed, and which do not belong to that time. In a word, This Treatiſe is found in no Manuſcripts annexed to St. Auguſtin's Works or Letters. Theſe Reaſons ſufficiently prove, That this Work is not a Conference which St. Auguſtin really had with Paſcentius, but a Dialogue compoſed by ſome other Author. Now we know none to whom it may be more properly aſcribed, than to Vigilius Tapſenſis, who compoſed ſeveral Dialogues of that ſort under the Names of ſeveral great Men.

The

The THIRD TOME.

THE Third Tome of the New Edition of St. Auguſtin, containeth his Treatiſes upon the Holy Scripture, which in the former Editions were diſperſed in other Volumes. St. Auguſtin Tome III.

The Benedictines have placed the Books of Chriſtian Doctrine firſt, which may ſerve in ſtead of a Preface to St. Auguſtin's Commentaries upon the Holy Scripture; becauſe they contain ſuch Precepts and Rules as he thought were to be obſerved, both for the underſtanding and the explaining of the Scriptures: He began this Work ſoon after he was Conſecrated, about the Year 397. but he ſtop'd at the 36th. Chapter of the Third Book; and afterwards added the reſt of this Book with the Fourth in 426. as he ſays himſelf in his Retractations; where he makes two Remarks upon that Work. 1. That it is not certain, as he affirmed, That the Wiſdom of Solomon was written by Jeſus the Son of Syrach, the Author of Eccleſiaſticus. 2. That when he ſaith, That the Old Teſtament containeth 44 Books, he uſed that word in the ſence of the Church; though St. Paul ſeems to underſtand by the Old Teſtament no more than the Law given upon Mount Sinai; He confeſſeth likewiſe, That he committed a Fault of memory, in quoting one of St. Ambroſe's Books for another.

In the Preface to this Work, he anſwereth three ſorts of Perſons who might find fault with it; Some, becauſe they did not underſtand it; Others, becauſe they could not make uſe of the Precepts and Rules which he gives to underſtand, and to expound the Scripture; and the laſt, becauſe they underſtand and expound the Holy Scripture without making uſe of his Rules, only by the light of the Holy Ghoſt. He tells the Firſt and Second, That it is not his fault if they want Underſtanding or Light. And the Third, That they ought not to judge of others by themſelves, ſince God hath not granted the ſame Gifts to all Men: and that we ſhould tempt him, if we neglected thoſe Humane means which God affords us to underſtand the Holy Scripture, under pretence that he can give us that knowledge, without either Study or Labour.

The deſign of this Book is, as we have obſerved, to give Rules and Precepts, both to Underſtand and to Explain the Holy Scripture. Theſe two divide the whole Work. He treateth in the Three firſt Books of the Underſtanding of the Scripture; and in the laſt, of the way to Expound it, and make it intelligible to others.

The Firſt Book contains looſe Reflections and general Principles. He obſerves at firſt, That all Knowledge is either of Signs or of Things; and that Things are expreſſed by Signs. He diſtinguiſheth two ſorts of Things; ſome which we may enjoy, and others which we are only to uſe. The three Perſons of the Divinity, are the only Thing we are to enjoy. They are that ineffable God, whom we look upon as the Supreme Being, as the immutable Wiſdom to be preferred before all Things; to know him, we muſt Purifie our Minds: And to teach us this, the Wiſdom of God was incarnate; it is that which Cures Man of his Diſtempers, Weakneſſes, and Blindneſs. He confirmed our Faith by his Reſurrection and Aſcenſion; and he increaſes and upholdeth it by the Hope of Reward, the Fear of Puniſhment, and by the Expectation of the Laſt Judgment. He hath eſtabliſhed a Church, to which he hath granted neceſſary Gifts and Graces to lead Men to their Heavenly Country. He gave it Keys to bind Sinners, and to looſe them that are Penitent. As for created Beings, we are not permitted to enjoy them; that is to ſay, to eſteem them as our Ultimate End; but we may uſe them, and they ought to be loved with reſpect to God. Thus we are to love both our Selves and our Neighbour. The Scripture commands us not to love our Selves; we are but too prone to this naturally, but it enjoyns us to love our Neighbour. The whole Law centers in this twofold Charity, which makes us love God above all things, and our Neighbour as our ſelves. Our Charity towards our Neighbour ought to be regulated: We muſt not love Sinners as Sinners, but as Men; and though we are more ſtrictly obliged to ſuccour thoſe that are near to us, whether by Kindred or Friendſhip, yet we ought to love all Men alike, becauſe they are our Neighbours; even Angels are to be comprehended under this general Name. St. Auguſtin having laid down theſe Principles, ſaith, That the double Precept of Charity, is to be a Rule for the underſtanding of the Holy Scriptures. That any ſence that hath no relation to Charity, is not certainly the true ſence; but on the contrary, every ſence which hath reſpect to it, is uſeful; though not always conformable to the Writer's intention; and yet we ſhould endeavour not to depart from their particular meaning. He ſaith, in the laſt place, That the underſtanding of the Scripture is compriſed in Faith, Hope, and Charity; So that a Chriſtian who is endued with theſe three Vertues, hath no abſolute need of the Scripture for himſelf; but only for the Inſtruction of others: Yea, That ſeveral Perſons live very Chriſtian Lives in their Solitude without the help of the Sacred Books. He concludes from all that he hath ſaid in this Book, That whoſoever is throughly perſwaded, that the Scripture is that Charity which proceedeth out of a pure Heart, of a good Conſcience and Faith unfeigned, may without fear betake himſelf to the reading of the Holy Scripture.

In the Second Book, he comes to the Knowledge of Signs; and having given the Definition, and Diviſions of them, he obſerves, That Words hold the Firſt place among Signs. He ſhows how the Sound of VVords is formed, and how the variety of Tongues was introduced into the VVorld. He ſuppoſes that the Scripture is not plain every where; and that there is need of

St. Auguſtin. Tome III.

Application to underſtand it; that the moſt Skilful meet with Difficulties; that the Allegories and Figures, there to be met with, ſometimes render it dark; but commonly what is obſcure in one place, is cleared in another; and ſo the Holy Ghoſt feeds the Hungry with what is clear, and prevents their being nauſeated by exerciſing them with what is obſcure. He ſheweth, at laſt, by what Degrees we may attain to the perfect Knowledge of the VViſdom, contained in the Holy Scripture. Theſe Degrees are, The Fear of God, Piety, Knowledge, Courage, Counſel, and Purity of Heart. Afterwards followeth a Catalogue of the Canonical Books, * the very ſame with ours. The Rule he makes uſe of to diſtinguiſh them, is this. I deſire (ſaith he) that to know the Canonical Books, the Authority of the greateſt part of the Catholick Church may be obſerved, and particularly of thoſe that have Apoſtolical Sees, or which have had the Happineſs of receiving the Epiſtles of the Apoſtles. But among the Canonical Books, thoſe that are received by all Churches, muſt be preferred before thoſe which are rejected by ſome. Again, among theſe we ſhould pay a greater regard to thoſe which are acknowledged by a great number of Churches, and by the moſt conſiderable, than to ſuch as are admitted only by few Churches, and thoſe of no great Authority. And if ſome have been received by the greater Number of Churches, and rejected by thoſe that have greater Authority; though it is hard to meet with ſuch, yet they ought to be put in the ſame Rank, and to obtain the ſame Authority. He adviſeth all Pious Perſons, that fear God, and ſeek to know his VVill, to read all the Canonical Books, to draw from them Precepts for Manners, and Rules of Faith, and at laſt, he furniſheth them with the means to arrive to the underſtanding of hard and obſcure Paſſages. The Firſt is the Knowledge of that Language, wherein thoſe Books were written. The Second is to conſult and compare the ſeveral Tranſlations, whereof ſome ſerve to explain the reſt. Among the Tranſlations, he preferrs the Vulgar Latin, as being more literal, and clearer: And among the Greek Verſions, he adheres to the Septuagint, to which he aſcribes much Authority. He doth not decide, Whether the Seventy compoſed it ſeparately, every one in his Cell by God's Inſpiration, or by conferring together. But he affirms, That however it was compoſed, it ought to be followed, and preferred even before the Hebrew Text, becauſe it is not credible, that they made this alteration, without a ſecret Aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit, for the good of the Church. As to the Books of the New Teſtament, he ſaith, That, without doubt, the Latin Tranſlation is to be Corrected by the Greek Copies.

[* By theſe Words our Author means, That St. Auguſtin's Canon of S. S. was the ſame with that now received in the Church of Rome: But that does not appear from St. Auguſtin's Words; for of thoſe Books which the Church of England condemns as Apocryphal, he names none but Tobith, Judith, Wiſdom of Solomon, Eccleſiaſticus, and the Maccabees. By the Book of Esdras, he does not mean thoſe which we call by that name, but the Books of Ezrah, and Nehemiah, which he mentions no where elſe, and which were never diſputed in the Church; and it is uncertain, whether he owned thoſe Additions to the Book of Eſther, that are now received in the Church of Rome.]

The Third Thing which St. Auguſtin looks upon as neceſſary for the underſtanding of the Scripture, is the Knowledge of Things ſignified; as the Nature of Animals, Plants, Herbs, and of other Things which are made uſe of in Compariſons and Figures in Holy Scripture. He lays great weight upon the Knowledge of Numbers, and Muſick, which he pretends to be of great uſe: And he would not have Profane Sciences neglected; provided, that ſuch as are Falſe, and Superſtitious, be laid aſide; and particularly, judicial Aſtrology, and Magick. He reckoneth Painting, and Mythology, among thoſe Things whoſe Knowledge is Superfluous; but he ſhews the uſefulneſs of Hiſtory, Mechanicks, Logick, Rhetorick, and other Sciences, provided that a good Uſe be made of them, that Men depend not too much upon them, nor be lifted up becauſe of them, but that both Charity, and Humility, be preſerved as the Two Keys, without which the Holy Scripture cannot be underſtood.

The Third Book lays down Rules to clear thoſe Difficulties that ariſe from the different Senſes, in which a Diſcourſe may be taken; as for inſtance, when the Parts of a Diſcourſe are diſtinguiſhed by Points, and Comma's, which variouſly placed, alter the Sence. St. Auguſtin would have Men referr themſelves, in ſuch caſes, to the Rule of Faith, and reject that Diſtinction which makes an Heretical Sence: That if both Senſes be Catholick, that is to be followed, which agreeth beſt with the connexion of the Diſcourſe; and laſt of all, if both agree with the Text, then we may follow that which ſeems moſt probable. He applies the ſame Rules to determine the pronunciation, and ſignification of undetermin'd Terms: At laſt he deſireth, that Men ſhould conſult the original Text.

There is much more difficulty, when the Words are taken in a Metaphorical, and Figurative Sence; then we muſt have a care how we underſtand them in a Proper, and Natural Sence. The Jews were for a long time, Slaves to this literal Meaning. The Gentiles likewiſe were Slaves to unprofitable Ceremonies. But Chriſtians deliver the Jews, by diſcovering to them the Truths that were hid under the Letter, and they ſet the Gentiles at Liberty, by utterly rejecting their profane Ceremonies. Themſelves are charged but with a ſmall Number of Signs eaſily practiſed, whoſe Signification is very Majeſtical, and their Obſervation very Pure. Chriſt himſelf inſtituted them, and the Apoſtles taught the Church the Knowledge of them: Such are the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the Celebration of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt.

After this, St. Auguſtin goes to the neceſſary Rules, whereby we may diſtinguiſh the proper Sence from the Figurative. The Firſt, and moſt general is, That whatſoever cannot be made to agree, either with Purity of Manners, or with the Truth of Faith, when 'tis underſtood according cording to the Letter, muſt neceſſarily have a Figurative Sence. But we are not to judge of what may be Pure, or True, according to the Prejudices, either of Cuſtom, or Opinion, but only by the Rules of Faith, and Charity, becauſe the Holy Scripture teacheth nothing but Charity, and condemns nothing but Luſt. St. Auguſtin. Tome III.

Neither muſt thoſe Opinions, and Actions, be taken in a Figurative Sence, which ſeem to imply a kind of Cruelty, which in Scripture, is aſcribed either to God, or to Righteous Men, when they are made uſe of againſt the Luſts of carnal Men. But a Word, or an Action which is abſolutely unjuſt, and that cannot be excuſed by any Circumſtance, when it is attributed to God, or to thoſe whoſe Sanctity is commended in Scripture, muſt neceſſarily be expounded by a Figure. This Rule takes place in Things that are expreſſed in the Form of a Command. If the Letter forbids a Crime, and enjoins a good Thing, there is no Figure; but, on the contrary, if it ſeems to command a Crime, and forbid a Vertue, it is a Figure. It often happeneth, that ſuch as are in a more perfect State, do underſtand Figuratively, what is ſaid of a State leſs Perfect; but let thoſe Men conſider, that there are Precepts for all Men in general, and ſome that relate to each State in particular. He adds, That we ſhould not believe, that ſince the Coming of Jeſus Chriſt, thoſe Things can be obſerved, which were either permitted, or preſcribed only for the time of the Old Law, though at that time, they were to be taken in their proper Sence. He inſtanceth in the Polygamy of the Patriarchs, becauſe they lived Holily in Marriage, with a proſpect of having Children; and he confidently preferreth that State, before that of ſuch Men, who having but one VVife, abuſe Matrimony to ſatisfie their brutiſh Luſt.

Finally, it muſt be confeſſed, That when the Scripture mentions great Men's Faults, we may not only ſeek there for a Figurative Sence, but alſo for Inſtruction in the Hiſtorical Sence, becauſe their Fall teaches the Holyeſt Men, not to be lifted up through Preſumption.

St. Auguſtin addeth, beſides the following Obſervations, that the ſame Figurative Expreſſion ſometimes ſignifies Two different Things, and ſometimes contrary Things. That a dark Place of Scripture ought to be explained by thoſe that are clearer; and that Reaſonings may likewiſe be uſed to clear it: But it is ſafer to have recourſe to other Paſſages of Scripture; and that the ſame Paſſage may have ſeveral Significations equally good. He concludes with the Seven Rules of Tychonius, the Donatiſt; but they are very far from the good Sence, and the Uſefulneſs of St. Auguſtin's: They diſcover great Subtilty; but it is very difficult to apply them.

In the laſt Book of Chriſtian Doctrine, St. Auguſtin ſhows how to Expound the Holy Scripture for the benefit of others. He ſays at firſt, That they were not to expect Rhetorical Rules upon that Subject from him; which though they are not uſeleſs, yet ſince they may be found in other places, they ought not to be introduced into this Work; He enlargeth however upon the Qualifications of a Chriſtian Orator. He ſhews, That it were an Errour to think, that Truth cannot make uſe of Rhetorical Ornaments to refute Errour; ſo that he would have Chriſtians ſtudy to ſpeak Eloquently. He adviſeth young Men to learn the Precepts and Rules of Art; but as for Men in Years, his Opinion is, That they ſhould only read Books that are well written, and frame their Diſcourſes after their Pattern, without regarding the Precepts of Art, which are of little uſe. The Deſign of a Preacher who expounds the Holy Scripture, who ſets forth God's VVord, who defends the Faith, and oppoſes Errours, ſhould be to teach that which is Good, and to perſwade others to depart from that which is Evil; to bring over thoſe of contrary Opinions, to quicken the Sloathful, to inſtruct the Ignorant, to ſoften, and convert hardned Sinners.

VVhen the Queſtion is only how to inſtruct the Ignorant, it is enough to declare the Doctrine of the Church; but if Gain-ſayers are to be perſwaded, it muſt be eſtabliſhed by ſolid Arguments: And Laſtly, If Men's Hearts are to be moved, there is need of Prayers, Reproaches, Threatnings, Exhortations, and other Figures proper to affect them. Such as want Eloquence to excel in theſe Things, ought to make up their Diſcourſes with Paſſages, and Expreſſions out of Holy Scripture. He proves by ſeveral Examples, That there is much Eloquence in the Holy VVritings; yet he would not have a Preacher imitate that Obſcureneſs which is to be met with in ſome Paſſages of the Holy Scripture, but charges him, above all things, to be clear; not to content himſelf to pleaſe with agreeable Notions, but to inform by ſolid Inſtructions. As the Matter which a Preacher treateth of is high, ſo he ought never to loſe his Gravity, though he may alter his Stile according to the variety of Subjects. St. Auguſtin produces Examples, both out of the Holy Scripture, and out of the Fathers, of Three kinds of Eloquence; ſhewing, at the ſame time, upon what Occaſions, and to what Subjects they are to be apply'd. Laſtly, Having laid down ſeveral uſeful Rules to compleat a Preacher, he adviſes him, above all, to prepare himſelf by Prayer, and to be ſure that his Life be anſwerable to his Sermons. He blames not thoſe who Preach Sermons compoſed by others, when they cannot make Sermons themſelves.

After this Treatiſe of Chriſtian Doctrine, follows St. Auguſtin's Writings upon the Holy Scripture.

The Firſt is his imperfect Book upon Geneſis. It is the Firſt, not only according to the Order of the Books of the Holy Scripture, but alſo according to that of its Compoſition. St. Auguſtin wrote wrote it in Africa, in the Year 393. before he was Biſhop. He deſigned to prove againſt the Manichees, That the Hiſtory of Geneſis, taken literally, was no ridiculous thing, as they pretended: But he confeſſes, That being not well inſtructed in thoſe Matters, he found this Undertaking to be above his ſtrength; which obliged him to ſtop in the way, even before he had finiſhed the Firſt Book, which remained imperfect. He was once reſolved utterly to ſuppreſs it; but he thought it more convenient to leave it as a monument of his Firſt Enquiries upon the Holy Scripture, and he added ſome Periods to it. He begins this Book with an Account of the Doctrine of the Church, concerning the Trinity, and the Incarnation. He adds againſt the Manichees, That Sin is none of God's Creatures, but that it conſiſts in the Abuſe of Free-Will. Afterwards he diſtinguiſhes Four Sences of the Scripture: The Hiſtorical, which takes place when a Relation is made of Matters of Fact, as they happen'd: The Allegorical, which explaineth what is ſpoken by Figures: The Analogical, when the Old and New Teſtament are compared together, and their Agreement is juſtified: And the Ætiological, whereby Reaſons are given of the Actions and Diſcourſes that are related in the Holy Scripture.

St. Auguſtin. Tome III.

This being ſuppoſed, he undertakes to Explain the Hiſtory of the Creation, ſet forth in the beginning of Geneſis. He frames Difficulties upon every Word, and makes ſeveral Objections to himſelf, but often anſwers them not; or if he doth, his Anſwers are not commonly very juſt, nor ſufficient to ſatisfie the leaſt ſcrupulous. This Work endeth at Man's Creation.

He purſues very near the ſame Method in the Twelve following Books upon Geneſis, which he writ when he was Biſhop: They were begun in 401. and compleated in 415. He explains the Text of Geneſis from the beginning, to that place where it is ſaid that Adam was driven out of Paradiſe. He examines the Words, and ſtarts an infinite number of Queſtions: ſome he anſwers, but moſt are left unreſolved. He often gives Myſtical and Moral Solutions, which are not very literal. He diſcourſes likewiſe by the bye, of ſeveral common places, concerning the Nature both of Angels, and of the Soul; the Fall of Angels, and that of Man; concerning the Myſteries of the Number Six; concerning Hell and Paradiſe, Viſions, and ſeveral other Subjects which he meets with in his way.

The Seven Books of the Ways of Speaking, in the ſeven firſt Books of the Bible, which follow this Work we have now ſpoken of, is a Critical Treatiſe; wherein St. Auguſtin explaineth ſeveral VVays of Speaking that are peculiar to theſe Books, and which ordinarily are not met with in others. This VVork is of the Year 419.

In making theſe Remarks upon the VVays of Speech, in theſe Seven Firſt Books of the Bible, he finds ſeveral Difficulties about the things themſelves, which he collecteth in the Form of Queſtions, which he propoſeth to himſelf; whereof he gives a Solution in few words, though without going to the depth. This is both the Subject and the Method of the Seven following Books: where he takes a ſhort view of the principal Difficulties that he met with in the Pentateuch, in the Book of Joſhua, and in that of Judges. This is a very curious and uſeful VVork. There he does not recede from the literal Sence, as in his other Treatiſes, but makes very learned and judicious Remarks, which ſerve very much to clear the Text of the Bible.

The Notes upon Job are a very imperfect VVork. St. Auguſtin had writ them in the Margin of a Copy of the Book of Job; from which ſome body took them, and compiled them into a Book by themſelves: which makes him ſay, That he knew not whether it was to be called his VVork or theirs who had thus collected and reduced them. He findeth there much Obſcurity, proceeding from their great Brevity, and becauſe they added ſome Notes to thoſe words of the Text to which they do not referr. In one word: He found ſo many Faults in that VVork, that he had ſuppreſſed it, had he not known that there were ſeveral Copies of it abroad. This is the Account which he gives of it in the 13th. Chapter of the Second Book of his Retractations. Yet this Treatiſe is not ſo contemptible; it is a kind of Paraphraſe, or literal Explication of the Book of Job, which explains it, and diſcovers ſuch Notions as may be further improved.

The Looking-glaſs taken out of the Scripture, is neither a Commentary, nor a particular VVork upon the Scripture, but barely a Collection of Paſſages out of the Old and New Teſtament, containing Precepts and Inſtructions for Manners. Poſſidius affirms, That St. Auguſtin wrote a Book of this Nature, and Caſſiodorus recommends the reading of it. It is not certain whether this is that which St. Auguſtin wrote. The Preface is in his Style, but in the Body of the Book the Scriptures are cited according to St. Jerom's Tranſlation. Perhaps the Text uſed by St. Auguſtin was changed, and the more common Verſion was put in the room of it: For I can hardly believe that St. Auguſtin would quit his Old Tranſlation, to make a conſtant uſe of St. Jerom's. Father Vignier hath alſo publiſhed A Looking-glaſs taken out of Scripture, attributed to St. Auguſtin: But this relates to Doctrine, more than to Manners; which doth not agree with what Poſſidius ſaith of St. Auguſtin's.

Theſe are all St. Auguſtin's Treatiſes upon the Old Teſtament, which make up the Firſt Part of the Third Tome. The Second contains Treatiſes upon the New Teſtament, and begins with a Harmony betwixt the Four Goſpels divided into Four Books.

In the Firſt, having ſpoken of the Number, Authority, and of the Style of the Goſpels, he refuteth thoſe who refuſe to give Credit to the Goſpel, becauſe it was not written by Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, but by his Diſciples, whom they ſuppoſe to have receded from their Maſter's Doctrine, Doctrine, that ſo they might perſuade the VVorld that he was God, and thereby deſtroy the VVorſhip of the Gods. He obſerves, That Two of the Four Evangeliſts were Apoſtles, St. Matthew and St. John; and Two were not, St. Mark and St. Luke; that ſo none might ſay, that there was a difference betwixt thoſe who had ſeen with their Eyes Chriſt's Actions, and thoſe who wrote them upon the Relation of thoſe who had ſeen them. He addeth, That other Men's VVorks, who undertook to write the Hiſtory of Chriſt, were not received by the Church as Canonical; becauſe the Authors of theſe Hiſtories were not to be believed, having ſtufft their Works with falſe Relations, and Errors, contrary to the Rule of the Catholick and Apoſtolick Faith, and to ſound Doctrine. He believes, That the Four Goſpels were compoſed in the ſame Order as we ſee them in at preſent: That St. Matthew's Goſpel was written in Hebrew, and the others in Greek: That each Evangeliſt hath obſerved a particular Order, yet without obliging himſelf not to ſpeak any thing that had been ſpoken by another: That St. Matthew deſigned particularly to give an Account of Chriſt's Royal Deſcent, and to repreſent him according to that Humane Life which he led among Men: That St. Mark did little elſe but abridge St. Matthew: That St. Luke apply'd himſelf to ſet forth Chriſt's Prieſthood; which is the reaſon why he doth not reckon his Genealogy from King David, by Solomon, as St. Matthew doth, but by Nathan: and for the ſame reaſon, he takes notice, That the Virgin Mary was a-Kin to Elizabeth, who was of the Sacerdotal Race, and Wife to Zacharias the Prieſt. Laſtly, That St. John taketh his Subject above Chriſt's Humane Actions, to ſpeak of his Divinity, and to diſcover the Equality of the Word with his Father: So that it may be ſaid, that the Three Firſt Evangeliſts are more for the Active Life, and St. John for Contemplation. After this, St. Auguſtin makes Application of the Four Beaſts in the Revelations to the Four Evangeliſts; and having made theſe Remarks, he anſwereth thoſe who found fault that Chriſt had written nothing. He propoſes to them the Examples of Socrates, Pythagoras, and of the wiſeſt Heathen, who left to their Diſciples the care of committing to Writing both their Doctrine and their Inſtructions. He ſhews, That Chriſt cannot be ſaid to have written Magical Books, or that he approved the Worſhip of Falſe Deities. He particularly enlargeth upon this laſt Head, ſhewing, That the Apoſtle's Doctrine, touching the Worſhipping of One only God, is conformable to that of the Prophets, who fore-told, That the Meſſiah ſhould preach the ſame upon Earth, and that it ſhould be publiſhed and received throughout the VVorld. The Three other Books, are a Harmony of the Evangeliſts. In the Second and Third, he followeth the Text of St. Matthew's Goſpel, and compareth the three other Goſpels with that. In the laſt, he takes notice of what the three other Evangeliſts have peculiar to themſelves. He doth not only compare the Text of the Evangeliſts, but makes them agree together, and reſolves the ſeeming Difficulties and Contrarieties that are betwixt them, as to the Order and Manner of their relating both of the Words and Actions of Jeſus Chriſt. This Work was very difficult and laborious, and it was finiſhed by St. Auguſtin with great exactneſs. It was compoſed about the Year 400.

St. Auguſtin. Tome III.

After this Treatiſe, we find in this Volume the two Books of St. Auguſtin, upon the Sermon of Chriſt in the Mount, written about the Year 393. They contain Moral Reflections, with Inſtructions and Precepts contained in Chriſt's Sermon, recorded by St. Matthew in the 5th. 6th. and 7th. Chapters of his Goſpel. St. Auguſtin likewiſe clears the Difficulties that he meets with in the Letter of the Text. Among the Paſſages of this Treatiſe which he reviſeth in his Retractations, there are Two of Conſequence: The former, is, about the Divorce allow'd by Jeſus Chriſt, in caſe of Fornication. He had extended what is ſaid of Fornication, to all thoſe Crimes that ſet us at a diſtance from God. Here he retracteth this Opinion, and confeſſeth, That this Notion is not very certain. He ſaith alſo, That it is a very hard Queſtion, VVhether a Man may Marry another VVife, having been Divorced from a former? The Second Point of any importance, taken notice of in his Retractations, is, touching an Expreſſion he had uſed when he ſpake of Jeſus Chriſt: He had called him Homo Dominicus: He diſapproves that Term, though he had read it in Eccleſiaſtical VVriters. He retracts likewiſe what he had ſaid, That the Sin unto Death, was Envy againſt our Brother: with ſome other Explications that were not very juſt. However, the Treatiſe it ſelf is very inſtructive, and very uſeful: It contains ſeveral Moral Precepts, which may be of very great Uſe. In the Second Book, he explains the Lord's Prayer.

Both the Books of Queſtions upon ſome Paſſages of St. Matthew's and St. Luke's Goſpels, were compoſed by St. Auguſtin with great precipitation, to ſatisfie the Requeſts of a Perſon that read the Goſpel. Moſt of his Anſwers are either Myſtical or Moral Explications. He places this Book in his Retractations, among thoſe which he writ about the Year 400. and takes notice of ſome Faults of Inadvertency. The Firſt Book is upon St. Matthew's Goſpel. The Second, upon that of St. Luke. He makes no mention of the Seventeen following Queſtions upon St. Matthew's Goſpel, neither are they mentioned in the beſt Editions of the Catalogue of St. Auguſtin's VVorks, made by Poſſidius: which gives us reaſon to doubt whether they are St. Auguſtin's, though Rhabanus hath quoted them under his Name, and though they are written in a Style very much like his.

The 124 Treatiſes upon St. John's Goſpel are of a very different Nature from the former; they are Homilies preached by St. Auguſtin to his People, wherein he followeth the Text of St. John, and draws important Inſtructions from it upon the principal Points both of Doctrine and Morality. He attacks three ſorts of Hereticks principally; the Arians, the Donatiſts, and the

St. Auguſtin. Tome III.

Pelagians. He maintains againſt the Firſt, the Divinity and Conſubſtantiality of the VVord. He oftens refutes the Reaſons alledged by the Second to juſtifie their Separation, and earneſtly exhorts them to re-unite themſelves with the Church; and proves againſt the laſt, the neceſſity of Chriſt's Grace, and the free Predeſtination of the Elect. Theſe are the principal Subjects treated of in theſe Homilies, which he preached after the Pelagian Hereſie broke out, before the Deſtruction of the Donatiſts Schiſm, ſome time after they had found St. Steven's Body, as he affirms in the 120th. Sermon; which makes us conjecture that they are the Sermons which he preached to his People in the Years 416. and 417. For he began with them about the end of VVinter, towards February, in the Year 416. as appears by the beginning of the Sixth: He continued them in Lent, as it is obſerved in the 10th. and 11th. They were interrupted during Eaſter Holy-days. After the Holy-days he undertook the Expoſition of St. John's Epiſtle, and then proſecuted his Goſpel. He had got but to the 27th. Homily, about the Feaſt of St. Lawrence, and ſo could not finiſh theſe Sermons before the next Year.

St. Auguſtin's Ten Homilies upon St. John's Epiſtle, interrupted, as we ſaid juſt now, the courſe of thoſe which he compoſed upon the Goſpel. He gives notice of it himſelf in his Preface; where he obſerves, That having been obliged by the Solemnity of thoſe Feſtivals, wherein particular Leſſons are yearly recited, to interrupt the courſe of his Explications upon St. John's Goſpel; before he returned to it, he thought it convenient to Expound, during thoſe ſeven or eight Days, the Epiſtle of the ſame Evangeliſt, that was moſt agreeable to that joyful Time, becauſe it ſpeaks of nothing but Charity. St. Auguſtin, in his Homilies, makes excellent Reflections upon this Vertue. He obſerves, That Fear brings in Charity, but that Charity drives away Fear. He diſtinguiſheth two ſorts of Fear; that which is conceived by a dread of Puniſhment, which goes before Charity; and that which he calleth a Chaſte Fear, which conſiſts in the Fear of Loſing Charity. He explaineth theſe two ſorts of Fear, by the different Diſpoſitions of two VVomen, whereof the one loveth her Husband, and the other hateth him, though both Fear him. There are other excellent Inſtructions in theſe Homilies of St. Auguſtin, concerning the Love of God and our Neighbour. He ſpeaks alſo occaſionally, concerning Grace and the Church: "And expounds theſe words of Chriſt to St. Peter, Thou art Peter, and upon this rock "I will build my church, of the Faith whereof St. Peter had immediately before made Profeſſion."

St. Auguſtin compoſed at Carthage, in 394. his Expoſition of ſeveral Paſſages of the Epiſtle to the Romans, in Anſwer to the Difficulties that were propoſed to him. He had not then perfectly found his Syſtem of Grace, which made him let ſlip ſome Explications different from ſome which he hath given ſince: And this very thing gave Occaſion for his Remarks upon this Book, in his Retractations, where he corrects what he had ſaid, whereby ſome might be made to believe, That the Beginning of Faith cometh from Man, and not from the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt.

He undertook alſo at the ſame time a larger Commentary upon this whole Epiſtle; which would have been prodigiouſly large, ſince the ſingle Expoſition of the Salutation with which St. Paul begins the Epiſtle, makes up a whole Book. True it is, that he makes there a Digreſſion of ſeveral Pages, upon an incidental Queſtion concerning the Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, which he thinks to be final Impenitency; but both the Extent and the Difficulty of that Work made him give it over: however, he left that Book, and entituled it, The Beginning of an Expoſition upon the Epiſtle to the Romans.

At the ſame time likewiſe he made a continued Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Galatians, wherein he contents himſelf with clearing the whole Text, with Explications and Reflections, without departing from his Subject by long Digreſſions.

The Addition at the latter end of this Volume, containeth ſeveral Diſcourſes upon the Scripture, which are none of St. Auguſtin's.

The Firſt is intituled, Of the Miracles of the Holy Scripture, contained in the Old and New Teſtament. One needs only read one or two Periods of this VVork, to be convinced that it is not St. Auguſtin's; ſo different is the Style thereof from that of this Father: The Author thereof ſeems to have been either an Engliſhman or an Iriſhman. He ſpeaks of the Flowing and Ebbing of the Sea upon the Coaſts of the Britiſh Iſlands; and to expreſs the ſame, he makes uſe of Terms that were uſual in Bede's time, he fixes the time where he lived in the 4th. Chapter of the 2d. Book; and ſpeaking of thoſe Iſlands, he ſhews, That he wrote after the Year 660. This VVork is divided into Three Books: The Firſt contains the Miracles related in the Hiſtorical Books of the Old Teſtament. The Second, Thoſe that are contained in the Books of the Prophets. And the Laſt, Thoſe that are mentioned in the New Teſtament. It is ill written, and of very little uſe.

The ſmall Diſcourſe of the Benedictions of the Patriarch Jacob, belongs not to St. Auguſtin but is a Fragment of Alcuinus's Queſtions upon Geneſis; who took part of it from the Queſtions upon Geneſis, and part from the Morals of St. Gregory. This very Book is found in the 3d. Book of the Commentary upon Geneſis, attributed to St. Eucherius, Biſhop of Lyons.

VVe have obſerved already, ſpeaking of the VVorks of Hilary the Deacon, in the Second Volume of this Bibliotheca, that the Queſtions upon the Old and the New Teſtament, are not St. Auguſtin's; and the Conjectures, for which they were aſcribed to Hilary the Deacon, were there ſet down: He that deſires more Arguments to prove, That they are not St. Auguſtin's, ſhould read the Firſt Part of the Benedictines Preface to this Treatiſe. It remains only, That we take notice with them, That in all probability theſe Queſtions are not at all written by the ſame Author. In ſome Manuſcripts there are only the 127 Queſtions, which were publiſhed at firſt; others have 151. but in theſe, there are not all thoſe that are in the firſt Manuſcript; and among the reſt the 44th. and the 115th. which afforded Conjectures concerning the Age and the Country of their Author. This makes it difficult to affirm any thing certainly concerning the Author of theſe Queſtions. St. Auguſtin. Tome III.

we

The Explication of the Apocalypſe, which is the laſt Book that is added to this Volume of St. Auguſtin, is a Collection of Notes upon the Revelations, taken out of the Commentaries of Victorinus, Primaſius, and Bede, and diſpoſed into the Form of Homilies. Thoſe that thought that this was the Commentary of Tychonius the Donatiſt, upon the Revelations, did not take notice that it was ſo far from containing things favourable to the Donatiſts Sect; That on the contrary, it refutes their Errors, and particularly that of Rebaptization, in the Sixth Homily upon the Revelations, Verſ. 11. Neither do we find here, thoſe Expoſitions which Bede mentions as written by Tychonius; nor the long Diſſertation, to prove, That the Angels ſpoken of in the Revelations, are thoſe Churches which Tychonius had inſerted into his Commentary; as St. Auguſtin obſerves in the Thirtieth Chapter of the Third Book of Chriſtian Doctrine.

The FOURTH TOME.

THE Fourth Tome of St. Auguſtin's Works contains This Father's Explications upon the Pſalms; which make too large a Book, to be compriſed in one Volume with his other Commentaries upon the Holy Scripture. He compoſed them not in that order wherein we find them, but ſome at one time, and others at another; and not all after the ſame manner. Some are Commentaries written in his Study, and the others, which make by far the greater number, are Diſcourſes made to his People. Caſſiodore obſerves, That in his time they were divided into Fifteen Decads; this diviſion is not obſerved at preſent, and it is not likely that St. Auguſtin made it. St. Auguſtin underſtanding no Hebrew, followed the Latin Tranſlations made from the Greek Verſion of the Septuagint, to the Text whereof he often referrs. In ſome of theſe Explications, and particularly, in thoſe that were not written to the People, as the Thirteen firſt, he only makes Allegorical Notes upon the Text of the Pſalms; but in the reſt, he is either very diffuſe, and enlargeth much upon Reflections that are not very ſolid, or elſe he goeth from his Subject by long Digreſſions. He profeſſes to explain the Letter, but his literal ſence is almoſt always Spiritual or Moral. If he clears any term, or inſiſts upon the Signification of any word, it is always to extract an Allegory, or ſomething Moral from it. He brings all to Jeſus Chriſt, to the Myſteries of our Religion, and to the Church. The Recompences and Bleſſings mentioned in the Pſalms, are always in his opinion, Spiritual Recompences and Eternal Bleſſings. He often gives ſeveral ſences of the ſame place, and very frequently makes a digreſſion againſt the Schiſm, or the Hereſies of his own time; He is full of uſeleſs Alluſions, ill-grounded Subtilties, and improbable Allegories. His very Moral Thoughts are ſeldom ſuch as might have been naturally inferred from the Scripture Text; but ordinarily ſuch far-fetch'd Notions as could never fall into the Mind of any Man that ſhould read the Text. Tome IV.

Yet here and there one may meet with lively and fervent Exhortations, which raiſed his People; and profitable Inſtructions upon the moſt important Truths of Religion. So that though this Work cannot paſs for a good Commentary upon the Pſalms, yet it may be looked upon as a wonderful Collection of Chriſtian and Moral Notions; and if it be of no great uſe for thoſe that enquire after the literal ſence of the Scripture; yet it will prove very Profitable to Preachers, who deſire to fit their Minds with neceſſary Thoughts and Rules to help them to diſcharge well that part of their Miniſtery.

The FIFTH TOME.

MOſt of St. Auguſtin's Sermons being Homilies upon the Scripture, they are with a great deal of Reaſon brought in to make up this Volume, which follows immediately after St. Auguſtin's Commentaries upon the Holy Scripture. They had hitherto been in great confuſion, becauſe new Collections of them were ſtill Printed, as new Sermons were diſcovered. There was a great number of Suppoſititious or Doubtful ones among the True; moſt Editions were full of Faults, ſo that it was neceſſary, that Perſons ſo exact, learned, and verſed in ſuch Matters as theſe Benedictines are, ſhould undertake to ſet them in order, to diſtinguiſh St. Auguſtin's from thoſe that are Suppoſititious, and to Correct the Text from the beſt and ancienteſt Manuſcripts. This they have performed moſt happily in the Fifth Tome, which containeth all St. Auguſtin's Sermons, placed in very good order, and divided into five Claſſes. Tome V.

The Firſt containeth 183 Sermons upon ſeveral Paſſages both of the Old and New Teſtament.

The Second is made up of 88 Sermons upon the great Feſtivals of the Year.

In the Third are 69 upon the Feſtivals of the Saints.

The

St. Auguſtin. Tome V.

The Fourth comprehendeth 23 upon various Subjects, as, The Love of God, Fear, Penance, Contempt of the World, Behaviour of the Clergy, Peace and Concord, Reſurrection from the Dead, &c.

The laſt Claſſis is compoſed of ſuch Sermons, as cannot be certainly affirm'd to be St. Auguſtin's, though there is no certainty that they are none of his; among theſe, there are ſome of which we have more reaſon to doubt, which are Printed in a ſmaller Character; there are not above 31 of them.

They have alſo added at the latter end, Fragments of ſome other Sermons of St. Auguſtin's, which are taken out of the Collections of Eugyppius, Bede, Florus, and John a Deacon of the Church of Rome: Another Fragment, of the Sermon upon the Aſcenſion, and a Sermon of Heraclius, a Diſciple of St. Auguſtin's.

The Addition contains 317 Spurious Sermons, divided into four Claſſes, according to the order obſerved in the true ones; At the Head of each, is a very exact Critick; Several of them are reſtored to Cæſarius their true Author; Some are found to belong to Rhabanus, and ſome others are taken out of Origen's Homilies, or out of the Works of St. Cyprian, St. Ambroſe, St. Maximus, St. Leo, Fauſtus, St. Gregory, Alcuinus, and Ivo Carnutenſis.

St. Auguſtin's Sermons are written neither Artificially nor Methodically, They are not regular Orations compoſed of all their Parts; They are familiar Diſcourſes, ſpoken without much Preparation; Moſt of them are very ſhort, and made up of conciſe Sentences and Phraſes; He doth not go to the depth of Points either of Doctrine or Morality, as the Greek Fathers do, but contents himſelf to ſpeak of them ſuccinctly, and in few words. Interrogations, Antitheſes, and Quibbles, are almoſt all the Figures that he beautifies his Diſcourſe withal; He doth not aſſert the Truth ſtrongly, nor inculcate it Pathetically; but barely propoſes it with agreeable Expreſſions, and impreſſes it with ſome pleaſant Thoughts. This kind of Eloquence is much inferior to that of the Greek Orators, but it may be that it reliſhed beſt with the Men of St. Auguſtin's Age, and agreed with the Genius of the Africans; who not only admired his Sermons, but were moved by them. It would not be ſo now, and I queſtion whether a Sermon of St. Auguſtin's preached in our Pulpits would draw many Auditors: Yet it muſt be confeſſed, That few Latin Preachers are to be compared with him, and that if he be much inferior to the St. Baſils, or the St. Chryſoſtomes, he is much above the St. Maximus's, the St. Chryſologus's, and ſeveral other Latins that came after him. I ſhall not enter into particulars upon his Sermons, which were both a tedious and an endleſs Work.

The SIXTH TOME.

ome VI.

THE Sixth Tome of St. Auguſtin's Works contains his Dogmatical Books, upon ſeveral Points both of Morality, and Diſcipline: He begins with ſome ſmall Treatiſes, containing Anſwers to ſeveral Queſtions upon various Subjects.

The Firſt, Is a Collection of Anſwers to 83 Queſtions, which he reſolved, after his return into Africa, about the Year 388. and which he Collected after he was a Biſhop. Theſe are the Reſolutions contained in thoſe 83 Queſtions, with moſt of the Principles from whence they are taken:

I. The Soul is not of its ſelf, nor by its ſelf; ſince it is not eſſentially the Truth.

II. God did not make Man like himſelf. He is not good by Nature, but by Will; therefore he muſt be free.

III. If a Wiſe Man's Advice never makes another man worſe than he was before, Is it credible, That God ſhould make Men more wicked?

IV. What then may be the Cauſe of Man's Wickedneſs? We muſt ſeek for it, either in himſelf, or in others, or in nothing: Conſider it well, and you will find, That the Will of Man is the Cauſe of his Depravation.

V. Animals have no Knowledge, and therefore cannot be Happy.

VI. All Corporeal and Spiritual Beings, have a Perfection which makes their Eſſence: Evil hath none; therefore it is no Being.

VII. Sometimes we confound the Soul with the Spirit, and ſometimes we diſtinguiſh them: when the Actions of Man that are common to him with Beaſts, are attributed to his Soul, the Spirit cannot be meant by that term; for Beaſts have no Reaſon: and Reaſon is a neceſſary Adjunct of a Spirit.

VIII. The Soul hath no other Motion beſides its Will and its Actions; It makes the Body change its place, but changes not her ſelf.

IX. Our Senſes only acquaint us with thoſe Things that are in a perpetual change; Therefore they cannot give us the Knowledge of Eternal and Immoveable Truth.

X. Whatſoever hath any Perfection cometh from God: Bodies have; Therefore God is the Author of them.

XI. Jeſus Chriſt was Man; but he is Born of a Virgin: Who can doubt then of his being come to ſave both Sexes?

XII. God

XII. God may be preſent, indeed; yet a defiled Soul cannot ſee him: This Notion is not St. Auguſtin's, but an Heathen's called Fonteius; who was afterwards Baptized, and died a Chriſtian; as St. Auguſtin aſſures us in his Retractations. St. Auguſtin. Tome VI.

XIII. Man can tame and dreſs a Beaſt; but do we find that Beaſts can do the ſame to Man?

XIV. If Chriſt's Body had been but a Phantome, Chriſt had deceived us; but he is not capable of ſo doing.

XV. The Spirit of Man comprehends it ſelf; and knows no infinite Perfection in it ſelf: wherefore it is finite.

XVI. The Time paſt, is no more; The Future is not yet: Every thing is preſent with God.

XVII. There ſhould be three Cauſes of a Creature; That which gives it a Being; That which gives it ſuch a ſort of Being; and that which gives it a Love to its Being: Therefore the Cauſe of it is a Trinity. This Argument is not the moſt convincing.

XVIII. In Eternity, there is neither time paſt nor to come, all is preſent.

XIX. God is no where, and comprehends all things, without being the place of any thing; for he could not be in a place, nor be a place, without being Corporeal.

XX. Since God is the Author of Being, he cannot be the Author of what tends to nothing. Evil tends to nothing; therefore God is not the Author of Evil.

XXI. The only reaſon why we need any thing, is a defect in our ſelves; God therefore needs nothing.

XXII. Man is wiſe, becauſe he partaketh of wiſdom; but God is wiſe through Wiſdom it ſelf. It is the ſame in all other Perfections.

XXIII. If any thing ſhould happen in the World by chance, then there would be no longer Prudence; but there is a neceſſity of Prudence: for all Beings are perfect, but can no further be ſo, than as they participate of the Goodneſs and Perfection of God. God and Man are the Authors of all that is done in the VVorld. Good and Evil depend upon our own VVills.

XXIV. It was the part of VViſdom to ſhow that the moſt ſhameful Death is not to be feared: And that's one of the Reaſons for which Chriſt endured ſuch a one.

XXV. There are Sins of Weakneſs, Ignorance and Malice; Weakneſs is contrary to the Strength of God, Ignorance to his VViſdom, and Malice to his Goodneſs: Thus whoſoever knows what God's Strength and VViſdom are, may know which are Venial Sins: And whoſoever knows God's Goodneſs, knoweth alſo what thoſe Sins are which deſerve to be puniſhed both in this VVorld and in the next. This well underſtood, ought to be a Rule whereby to judge what ſort of Sinners ſhould be obliged to do Publick Penance, though they confeſs their Sins. Yet this Rule is very general and very equivocal.

XXVI. God makes uſe of the VVicked both to puniſh and to help. Afflictions are an Exerciſe to the Righteous, and a Puniſhment to the VVicked. Reſt and Peace corrupt the VVicked, and ſanctifie the Righteous. God makes uſe of Men to accompliſh the deſigns of his Providence, though they know it not. VVe act our ſelves when we follow God's Commandments; but in all other things God guides us by the Springs of his Providence; and we have no ſhare in the Events.

XXVII. VVe ſhould not ask why God would create the VVorld, that were to ſeek after a Cauſe of that which is the Cauſe of all things.

XXVIII. VVhen it is ſaid, Seek thoſe things that are above; the meaning is, thoſe things that are great and ſublime by their excellency.

XXIX. Man may make uſe of all things, but he ought only to enjoy God; and the uſe which he makes of all things, ought to have a Relation to God. Whoſoever uſes the Creatures otherwiſe, abuſes them.

XXX. This Queſtion is not St. Auguſtin's; it is a definition of Vertue out of Tully.

XXXI. Whoſoever conceiveth a thing, conceives it as it is; and he who conceives it not as it is, doth not conceive it at all: There are no different degrees of Conception.

XXXII. We are afraid of loſing what we love: and we are afraid that we ſhall not obtain what we deſire: If we deſire to be without fear, How can we fear that we ſhall not be freed from fear?

XXXIII. Men ſhould not deſire preciſely to be free from fear, becauſe raſh and ſtupid Men are without fear: we ſhould have a reaſon why we are not afraid.

XXXIV. VVe ought to love what we poſſeſs, No man can know and love Happineſs, without being happy: Happineſs therefore is an eternal love and knowledge of a good thing which cannot be taken away from us.

XXXV. To preſerve and increaſe Charity, we muſt oppoſe and leſſen Luſt. This is to be begun by impreſſing a Dread of God's Judgments, to deſtroy the habit of Sin: After that, we ought to diſcover both the Beauty and Excellency of Vertue, to manifeſt the difference betwixt the Old and the New Man; to propoſe Chriſt's Life as an Example; to make uſe of his Exhortations, Inſtructions, and Promiſes; to conſider the vaſt number of thoſe that followed and imitated him; to ſet forth the Vertues both of Saints and of Martyrs, as Patterns; and at laſt, to oppoſe Pride and Ambition, and to inſpire the fear and the love of God.

I omit the following Queſtions, becauſe they are obſcure, and contain nothing remarkable.

The XLVth. Is againſt Judicial Aſtrology.

The XLVIth. Is concerning Plato's Idea's.

St. Auguſtin. Tome VI.

The XLVIIIth. Is expreſſed in theſe terms. We believe Three ſorts of Things. The Firſt, Are ſuch Things as are believed, and not conceived, as Hiſtory. The Second, Are both believed and conceived at the ſame time; as the reaſonings of Men. The Third, Are Things believed but not conceived at that time, though they are conceived afterwards; Such are Divine Inſtructions, which are conceived by none but thoſe that have Pure Hearts.

In the LI. Queſtion, He explains in what ſence it is ſaid, That Man was created after God's Image and Similitude: And in the LII. he proves, That what is ſaid in Geneſis, That it repented God to have made Man, is not to be underſtood literally.

In the LIII. He juſtifies the Command which God gave the Jews to borrow of the Egyptians rich Veſſels to carry them away; by ſaying, That God made uſe of them to Puniſh the Egyptians: But that from thence it cannot be inferred, That Men may deceive, becauſe the People of Iſrael was not capable of Evangelical Perfection.

The Reſolutions of the following Queſtions, are Myſtical and Moral Explications of ſeveral Paſſages both of the Old and of the New Teſtament.

The LXXX. Is againſt the Error of the Apollinariſts.

The two Books of Queſtions directed to Simplicianus Biſhop of Milan, who ſucceeded St. Ambroſe in the Year 397. are the firſt which St. Auguſtin writ, after he was made a Biſhop. In the firſt, he diſcourſeth upon two Paſſages of the Epiſtle to the Romans, upon what is ſaid, Ch. 7. of the man, who being under the Law, doth not what the Law requireth: And upon what is written in the 9th. Chapter, of Jacob's being call'd, and Eſau's being rejected. He proves in this Firſt Book with great ſtrength, the Neceſſity of Grace to every Good Work, even for the beginning of Faith, and a Free Call. He ſaith himſelf, both in his Book of Predeſtination, and in that of the Gift of Perſeverance, That he began then to ſee clearly into thoſe Matters which he had not taken right in his former Books. Yet he underſtands the firſt Paſſage in the Romans, of a man under the Law, who is yet without Grace; whereas he believed afterwards, that it was rather to be underſtood of that man, who being Spiritual in his Superior part, finds himſelf carnal, by the deſires and motions of the Inferior.

The Second Book contains the Reſolution of Five Queſtions, about particular Paſſages in the Old Teſtament. The Firſt is, of what Spirit that which is ſaid in the Firſt Book of Kings, That the Spirit of God entred into Saul, is to be underſtood. Whether it was the Holy Ghoſt, or the Evil Spirit, wherewith he was poſſeſſed afterwards? After ſeveral Reflections and Digreſſions, St. Auguſtin concludes, That it muſt be underſtood of the Spirit of God; and that Saul was filled at firſt with the Spirit of God for a time, and afterwards was poſſeſſed with an evil Spirit. Yea, he thinks, That Saul had a Spirit of Prophecy at the time when he perſecuted David, and he proves, That this Gift of the Holy Ghoſt may be found in Wicked Men.

The Second Queſtion is upon thoſe words attributed to God in the Firſt Book of Kings, Ch. 15. It repenteth me that I have ſet up Saul. How God's Repenting can agree with his Preſcience? St. Auguſtin anſwers, That the Repentance aſcribed to God, is not accompanied with regret, as that of Men is; it is only an Alteration of Will. This Queſtion puts him upon diſcourſing of God's Knowledge.

The Third Queſtion is about the Story of the Witch of Endor. St. Auguſtin does not decide whether it was the Soul of Samuel, or a Phantome that appeared to Saul; he thinks the latter to be more probable.

Both the other Queſtions are about two Paſſages in the Books of Kings, which have not much difficulty.

The laſt is concerning the Spirit of Error, whereby God permitted King Ahab to be deceived.

Dulcitius, a Tribune in Africa, having propoſed Eight Queſtions to St. Auguſtin, about ſome Matters which he had already treated of, he Collected in this Book, which he ſent in Anſwer to his Queſtions, what he had ſaid in his other Works.

The Firſt Queſtion was, Whether the Baptized that die in Sin, ſhall at any time be delivered from Damnation? St. Auguſtin anſwereth, No; and expounds a Paſſage of St. Paul, 1 Cor. Ch. 3. v. 11. where he ſpeaks of the Fire which is to Purifie the Faithful, by conſuming the Evil which they ſhall have built upon the ſound Foundation of Faith. He underſtandeth by Fire, that Affliction in this Life which Purifies the Faithful from light Sins. He adds, That we may believe, that ſome ſuch thing is done alſo in the other Life, towards thoſe who die before they are cleanſed from thoſe light Sins: But he affirms, That none can believe without Impiety, that this can be apply'd to ſuch as die with the guilt of thoſe Sins that exclude Men from the Kingdom of God. This Anſwer is taken out of his Book of Faith.

The Second Queſtion of Works, hath great relation to the former. It was demanded, Whether the Oblations and Prayers that are made for the Dead avail them any thing? St. Auguſtin Anſwers what he had ſaid already in his Book concerning the Care that ought to be taken of the Dead, That the Oblations and Prayers are profitable to thoſe who deſerved in their Life-time, that Prayers ſhould avail them. He addeth what he had ſaid in his Enchiridion to Laurentius, "That in all that time, between Death and the laſt Reſurrection, the Souls ſhall be detained "in ſecret and hidden places, where they ſhall either enjoy Reſt, or ſuffer Pain, according as "they have deſerved, when they were in the World: That Souls in that Condition, are refreſhed "by the Piety of the Living: when the Sacrifice of the Mediator is offered for them, or Alms

"are

" are given in the Church in their behalf. But, ſaith he, That availeth only them, who in their " Life-time deſerved by their Actions, that theſe things ſhould be available to them, when they " are out of the World..... Thus when the Sacrifices of the Altar are offered, or Alms given " for all the Dead that were baptized, they become Thankſgivings for them that were extremely " Good; They are Interceſſions for thoſe that were not great Sinners: And if theſe things do " not eaſe thoſe that were very wicked, yet they Adminiſter Comfort to the Living.

St. Auguſtin. Tome VI.

The Third Queſtion is, Whether all Men ſhall Die before the Day of Judgment? St. Auguſtin anſwereth, no; according to what he had ſaid before in the 193d. Letter to Mercator; He confeſſes, That this is a difficult Queſtion.

The other Five Queſtions are upon ſome hard Paſſages of Scripture; He repeats thoſe Explications which he had given in his other Books. This Book was Compoſed after the Enchiridion that was written in 421. and before the Book of Retractations written in 427. Which ſhews, That it muſt neceſſarily belong to the Years between; yet the Date of Eaſter of the Year wherein this Book was written, which is at the beginning, ſhould regularly fall in the Year 430, or 419. wherefore there muſt have been a Miſtake in the Cypher.

The ſmall Treatiſe concerning the belief of thoſe things which are not conceived, is placed again in this Volume, among the Treatiſes that are really St. Auguſtin's; though the Louvain Doctors after Eraſmus, had put it among the Spurious Books. St. Auguſtin does not mention it in his Retractations; but he doth in the 231ſt. Letter to Count Darius; and it is written in his Stile, and is very worthy of him. He ſhews there, That many things are believed, though they are not ſeen. He particularly urges the Example of Friendſhip, and good Wiſhes which are believed without being ſeen. Whence he concludes, That if that Faith is taken away, which makes us believe things that we ſee not, Society would be utterly overthrown. He confeſſeth, That to believe a thing, we ought to have ſome Marks that ſuch thing is: But he affirms, That we believe not in Jeſus Chriſt, without ſufficient Proofs of his Authority; That the Church alone is a conſtant and viſible Proof of the Truth of his Doctrine; ſince we ſee that accompliſhed which Chriſt and the Prophets foretold. That none can doubt of the Truth of the Prophetical Books, ſince the Jews, who were the Chriſtians great Enemies, preſerved them; who alſo are unqueſtionable Witneſſes of their Antiquity. He concludes this Diſcourſe with a ſhort Exhortation to the New Chriſtians, to keep the Faith of the Church inviolable. What is ſaid in the 10th. Chapter concerning the demoliſhing of the Temples, ſhews, That this Treatiſe was Written, and Compoſed after Honorius his Law, that was dated in 399.

It has been obſerved already, That St. Auguſtin being yet but a Prieſt, expounded the Creed in a Council of African Biſhops aſſembled at Hippo. This Diſcourſe which he afterwards put in Writing, as he declares in his Retractations, contains an exact Expoſition of the Articles of the Creed. We have it here entituled, Of Faith and the Creed.

In the Book of Faith and Good Works, St. Auguſtin refutes ſeveral Errors which he had read in ſome Books that had been ſent to him. There it was affirmed, 1. That all were to be admitted to Baptiſm who deſired to be baptized, without any Examination. 2. That it was ſufficient to inſtruct them in the Articles of Faith, though they were not taught the Rules of Manners till after they had received the Sacrament. 3. That what Crime ſoever a baptized Chriſtian might commit, and in what Condition ſoever he might die, yet he ſhould be infallibly ſaved, after he had paſſed through the Fire. St. Auguſtin declares againſt the firſt Propoſition, That though the Wicked are to be tolerated in the Church, yet Correction was not to be neglected, nor the Diſcipline of the Church ſuffered to relax. He confeſſes however, That Sinners ought to be reproved with Meekneſs and Charity. Againſt the Second Propoſition, he teacheth, That Sinners who perſevered in their Wickedneſs, were by no means to be admitted to Baptiſm: Showing, That the Holy Scripture requireth Repentance before Baptiſm; That St. John gave Precepts concerning Manners to thoſe which he baptized; and that this is the Temper of the Church, which appointed the Times and Ceremonies obſerved by the Catechumens, for no other end, but to be ſure, that they are well-diſpoſed to receive the Sacrament of Baptiſm. Laſtly of all, St. Auguſtin proves againſt the Third Error, That whoſoever dieth in the State of Mortal Sin, without Repentance, is eternally Damned: And he Anſwers the place of St. Paul, that was alledged to prove the contrary. This Treatiſe was Compoſed in 413. after the Book of the Spirit and the Letter. Garnerius ſuppoſeth, That St. Jerom is the Perſon whom St. Auguſtin diſputes with in this Book. But he cannot ſuſpect that Father as guilty of either the firſt or the ſecond Error: And it is altogether unlikely that it ſhould be St. Jerom whom St. Auguſtin refuteth concerning the third.

The Enchiridion, or Treatiſe of Faith, Hope, and Charity, was written at the Requeſt of Laurentius, a great Lord of Rome, and Brother to Dulcitius; who had deſired St. Auguſtin, to ſend him a ſmall Book, containing an Abridgment of the Chriſtian Religion. To ſatisfie him, St. Auguſtin dedicated to him this Book; wherein he reduceth all Religion to the Vertues of Faith, Hope, and Charity, becauſe a Man knoweth all that is compriſed in Religion, when he knows what is to be Believed, what is to be Hoped for, and what is to be Loved. He explains what is to be Believed, by keeping to the Method of the Creed, refuting the Errours, and Hereſies that are contrary to the Doctrine of the Church, without naming their Authors. He layeth down alſo moſt excellent Maxims, ſuch as theſe: That Faith does not ſtop at a curious Inquiry after Natural Things; That Errours of Right are more dangerous than Errours of Fact;

St. Auguſtin. Tome VI.

Fact; That all Errours are not Sins; and that there are ſome Things, which it ſignifies little whether they are known, or not. He enlargeth much upon Original Sin; upon the Fall of Man, and Angels; upon the Neceſſity of a Mediator; of Baptiſm, and Grace; upon the Diſtinction of Venial and Mortal Sins; upon the Eternity, and the Inequality of the Pains of the Damned, upon the Extent of the VVill of God to ſave Men; upon Free-Will; and upon the State of Souls till the Day of Judgment. Having thus explained what concerns Faith, he comes to Hope; and he ſaith, That Chriſtians ought to Hope in God alone; and that whatſoever we Hope for, is comprehended in the Lord's Prayer, upon which he makes ſome Reflections. Laſtly, he treateth of Charity; without which he pretends, That no Man can be Righteous. To which he referrs all the Commandments of God, and Advices of the Goſpel. This Book was written after St. Jerom's Death, who dyed in 420. as is plain by the 87th. Chapter, where St. Auguſtin ſpeaks of him as one dead.

The Book, intituled, The Combat of a Chriſtian, has much the ſame Deſign with the foregoing. St. Auguſtin compoſed it ſoon after he was a Biſhop, in a plain Stile, that it might be the more proper to inſtill the Doctrine, and Precepts of Chriſtian Religion into thoſe Chriſtians who were not Skilfull in the Latin Tongue. He exhorts them, at firſt, to fight againſt the Devil: Then he ſhews, That Men get the Victory over him, when they overcome their Paſſions, and bring their Bodies under Subjection; which is only done by ſubmitting to God, to whom every Creature ought to be ſubject, either Willingly, or out of Neceſſity. He adds, That in this Combat, Man is armed with Faith, and with the Aſſiſtances which Chriſt merited for us by his Death. At laſt, he runs through the Articles of the Creed, and refutes the contrary Hereſies.

The Book of Inſtruction for thoſe that have no Knowledge of our Religion, was written at the Requeſt of a Deacon of Carthage, who deſired of St. Auguſtin, Rules, and a Method to Catechize his People acceptably, and uſefully. The Father comforts him at the beginning, upon his being, very often, not pleaſed with his own Diſcourſes, ſince it ſometimes happens, that a Diſcourſe which diſpleaſes the Speaker, is very acceptable to the Hearers. He adviſeth him to teach them cheerfully, and not to be tired with it; and then furniſhes him with Rules how to inſtruct them right in their Religion. He ſaith, in the firſt place, That perfect Inſtruction ſhould begin at the Creation of the World, and end with the preſent Age of the Church: But for this, there is no need of learning by heart, or reciting all the Books of the Bible; one needs only chuſe the beſt, the moſt admirable, and moſt diverting Paſſages. He layeth down, in the ſecond place, his uſual Rule, That every thing ought to be referred to Charity: That Care muſt be taken, that the Auditor may believe what is ſpoken; Hope what he Believes, and Love what he Hopes for. And he would have him inſpired with a wholſome Fear of God's Judgments, and kept from all proſpects of temporal Intereſt, and Advantage that he might have by being a Chriſtian. He obſerves, That the ſame Method is not to be followed with the Learned, as with the Ignorant; and he lays down very prudent Rules how they are to be dealt withal. He ſhews what Things commonly tire the Hearers; and he gives excellent Remedies how they may be avoided; and at laſt, makes Two inſtructive Speeches, one pretty long, the other ſhorter, but compoſed with a great deal of Art, to ſerve for an Example, or Pattern of ſuch Inſtructions, as ought to be given. This Treatiſe ſhews, That to inſtruct Men well in Religion, is an harder Task than moſt Men imagine; and that the Method, formerly uſed, was nobler, and larger, than that which is now obſerved. This Book is of the Year 400, or thereabouts.

Though St. Auguſtin does not mention his Treatiſe of Continency in the Review of his Works, yet he owns it in the 262d. Epiſtle; and Poſſidius reckons it among his VVorks. This Book is a Diſcourſe upon theſe VVords of the 140th. Pſalm. Set a Watch, O Lord, before my Mouth, and keep the Doors of my Lips. O let not my Heart be enclined to any evil Thing; let me not be occupied in ungodly Works, with the Men that work Wickedneſs. He ſhews, That true Continency conſiſts in ſuppreſſing ones Paſſions; and he recommends the Neceſſity of Grace to overcome them. He ſpeaks againſt the Proud who excuſe their Sins, and particularly againſt the Manichees, who charged their Sins upon an evil Nature that was in them. This Sermon is thought to be of the Year 395. or thereabouts.

Both the following Treatiſes are written againſt the Errour of Jovinian. This Enemy of Virginity had drawn aſide ſeveral Roman Virgins from their Deſign of continuing ſo, and perſwaded them to marry; ſaying to them, Are you better than Suſanna, or Anna, or ſo many other Holy Women? Though Jovinian's Opinion was rejected at Rome, yet this Heretick's Diſciples gave out, That none could refute him without condemning Marriage. To undeceive thoſe that were of this Opinion, St. Auguſtin writ a Book, intituled, Of the Advantage of Matrimony, before he undertook to ſpeak of the Excellency of Virginity. Wherein he ſaith firſt, That the Union betwixt the Husband and the Wife, is the moſt Ancient, and the moſt Natural. After that, he examineth a Queſtion, rather Curious, than Uſeful, namely, How Men could have had Children, had they perſiſted in the State of Innocence. He obſerves a Four-fold Advantage in Marriage: The Society of both Sexes, the Procreation of Children, the good Uſe of Luſt, which is regulated by a Proſpect of having Children, and the Fidelity which Husband and Wife preſerve towards each other. He ſaith, That every Union between a Woman and a Man, is not Marriage. He doth not think, That this Name is to be given to that Union, whose aim was only to satisfie their brutish Passion, if they endeavoured to prevent their having Children. He declares, That Man guilty of Adultery, who should abuse a Virgin, when he has a Design of Marrying another: As for the Young Woman, he judgeth her guilty of Sin, but not of Adultery, if she is true to that Man, and Designs not to marry when he leaveth her: Nay, he preferrs her before several married Women, who abuse Matrimony by their Intemperance. He doth not excuse from venial Sin, either the Man, or the Woman, who have another Prospect in Marriage, than the begetting of Children. In a word, he distinguishes Three Things in Marriage: The Fidelity which married Persons owe one to the other, which is of natural Right; the Procreation of Children, which ought to be the end of Marriage; and the Sacrament, or mysterious Signification, which makes it indissoluble: For which Reason he determines, That though humane Laws permit a Man to marry again, when he is divorced from a former Wife, yet it is not Lawful for Christians, to whom St. Paul forbids it. He concludes, That Marriage is of it self a good Thing, but one of those good Things which we should not look after, but in order to a greater Good, or to avoid a great Evil. That before Christ, the most Continent might marry to multiply that People from whom the Messiah, was to be born; but now, as many as are able to contain, do well not to marry. That for this Reason, Men were permitted formerly to have several Wives, and never Women to have several Husbands, but now no Man is to have more than one Wife. That the Gospel-Purity is so great in this Point, That a Deacon was not to be ordained, who had ever had more than one Wife. He approves their Opinion, who understand this Maxim in its whole Extent, and without Restriction, as St. Jerom doth by excepting those who contracted a former Marriage before Baptism: For, saith he, Baptism doth indeed remit Sins; but here the Question is not concerning a Sin. And as a young Woman that hath been defiled when she was a Catechumen, cannot be consecrated as a Virgin after Baptism, even so it hath been thought reasonable, that the Man who hath had more than one Wife, whether before, or after Baptism, should be looked upon as wanting one necessary Qualification for Orders. St. Augustin. Tome VI.

whoſe

In answer to Jovinian's Objection, he distinguishes the Habit from the Action of Vertue: This being Premised, he saith, That the old Patriarchs had an Habit of Continency, but did not practise it, because it was not convenient to do it in their time; and so, when the Question is put to a Man that is not married, Are you more perfect than Abraham? he ought to answer, No; but Virginity is more perfect than conjugal Chastity: Now Abraham was endu'd with both these Vertues; for he had the Habit of Continency, and exercised conjugal Chastity. He adds, That Persons are to be distinguished from Vertues: One Person may have one Vertue in a higher Degree than another, and yet be less Holy, because he hath not other Vertues in the same Degree. Thus a disobedient Virgin is less to be esteemed than a married Woman, with the Vertue of Obedience. Last of all, he exhorts Virgins not to be lifted up, because of the Excellency of their Condition, but to be constant in Humility.

The Book Of Holy Virginity, came out presently after that Of the Advantage of Matrimony. St. Augustin shews there, That Virginity is one of the most excellent Gifts of God, and that Humility is necessary to preserve it. He exalteth the Excellency of Virgins consecrated to God, by the Example of the Virginity of the Mother of God, who, according to him, had made a Vow of Continency before the Angel appeared to her. He refutes those that condemn Matrimony, and those that compare it with Celibacy. He does not think that Virginity is of Command, but of Advice: It should not be chosen as a thing necessary to Salvation, but as a state of greater Perfection. And this he proves by several Passages of Scripture, and explains a Passage of St. Paul, from which some concluded, that he recommended Virginity merely upon account of the Advantage of this present Life. He asserts also, That Virgins shall have a particular Reward in Heaven. At last, he exhorts them to Humility; proposing several convincing Reasons, and powerful Motives, to inspire them with it. Then he recommends to them, above all things, the Love of their Divine Spouse, and speaks of him in a very moving manner: "Behold (saith he to them) the Beauty of your Spouse! Think that he is Equal with "his Father, and yet he was willing to submit himself to his Mother: He is a King in Heaven, "and a Slave upon Earth: He is the Creator of all things, and yet he ranked himself among "the Creatures. Consider both the Greatness and the Beauty of that which the Proud look "upon with Contempt: Behold with the Eyes of Faith the Wounds which he received upon "the Cross, the Blood of the dying God, who is the Price of our Redemption, and the Cause "of our Salvation... He seeketh only the inward Beauty of your Soul: He gave you the power "to become his Daughters: He desires not the Handsomness of the Body, but Purity of Man-"ners. None can deceive him, nor make him be jealous of you; and you may love him with-"out fear of ever displeasing him upon account of false Suspicions." Both this and the foregoing Books were written in the Year 401.

They did well to joyn unto this the Book that treats Of the Advantages of Widowhood, which Erasmus and others had inconsiderately rejected, as a Work that was none of St. Augustin's. St. Augustin, indeed, takes no notice of it in his Retractations; but that's not to be wonder'd at, because it is only a Letter to Juliana, which Possidius put into his Catalogue. * Philo and Bede quote it as St. Augustin's; and in the 15th Chapter some other Pieces of St. Augustin's

* [Who this Philo is, I don't know; it seems to be a Fault of the Press: Philo Carpathius, mention'd in the last Volume, dy'd several Years before St. Augustin wrote this Letter to Juliana.]

St. Auguſtin. Tome VI.

guſtin's are quoted. This Book is an Inſtruction for Widows. He aſſerts there, That Widowhood is to be preferr'd before Marriage: Yet he doth not condemn SecondMarriages, nor Third and Fourth; but only ſays, That it is a great Crime to Marry after the Vow of Virginity; though he judges thoſe Marriages to be good and valid, and blames thoſe who look upon them as adulterous. The Practice of the Church at that time was, To put them under Penance who Married after vowing Virginity; but their Marriages were not yet declared void, as is plain by the Sixteenth Canon of the Council of Chalcedon, and by ſeveral other Teſtimonies of the Ancients. The reſt of this Letter is full of Inſtructions to Juliana, and her Daughter Demetrias, who had already made Profeſſion of Virginity, as it is obſerved in the 19th. Chapter: And ſo this ſmall Treatiſe is of the Year 414. He bids them beware of the Pelagian Errors.

In both the Books Of Marriages which cannot be excuſed from Adultery, St. Auguſtin handleth this nice and Difficult Queſtion, Whether it be lawful either for the Man or the Woman to Marry after Divorce on the Account of Fornication? Pollentius, to whom theſe Books are directed, believed, That the Exception of the Caſe of Adultery, which we find in St. Matthew's Goſpel, was no leſs to be underſtood of a Permiſſion to Marry again, than of a Separation of Bodies: ſo that a Husband might not only leave his adulterous Wife, but alſo take another when he was divorced from the firſt. St. Auguſtin affirms on the contrary, That a Woman thus divorced, ought never to Marry again, no more than the Husband who cauſed her to be divorced. This whole Diſpute depends upon the Sence of that Paſſage in St. Matthew, which excepteth the cauſe of Fornication; and upon that of St. Paul, 1 Cor. 7. which ſaith, That the Bond of Matrimony is indiſſoluble but by the Husband's Death; and that if the Wife is married to another while he liveth, ſhe committeth Adultery. St. Auguſtin enlarges much upon the Sence of theſe two Paſſages. He endeavours to make the firſt to agree with his Opinion, which he groundeth eſpecially upon the ſecond. He anſwereth Pollentius's Arguments, and uſes ſeveral Reaſonings, upon the Matter. He confeſſes in his Retractations, That he had not yet cleared that Point, but that there are ſome conſiderable Difficulties beſides, though he had given Light enough to reſolve them.

He further explaineth in the 1ſt. Book, another Paſſage in the ſame Epiſtle of St. Paul, concerning the Diſſolution of Marriage between Infidels. Pollentius held, That St. Paul abſolutely forbids Believing Husbands to put away their Unbelieving Wives: Whereas St. Auguſtin affirms, That it is only an Advice that he gives them, Not to uſe the liberty they have to Separate. He concludes this Book with another Queſtion concerning the Catechumens, who fall into ſuch Diſeaſes as take away their Speech and Knowledge, VVhether they ſhould be Baptized or no? He ſaith, That they ought to be Baptized; though he doth not condemn thoſe that dare not hazard the Sacrament: And he goes ſo far, as to declare, That in ſuch Caſes thoſe very Catechumens may be Baptized, who are known to be in a habit of Sin, and who ought not to be admitted to Baptiſm at another time. He adds, That Penitents are to be dealt withal after the ſame manner, and they ſhould not be ſuffered to Die before they are Reconciled. In the 2d. Book, he treateth more at large than in the Firſt, Of the Indiſſolubility of Marriages, and examines ſeveral Queſtions upon that Subject. He concludes with an Exhortation to Husbands that have left their VVives, to live in Continency; alledging the Example of Church-men, who abſtain ſo religiouſly, though they often were forced to take that Profeſſion upon them againſt their VVills. The rank which St. Auguſtin ſets theſe two Books in, in his Retractations, ſhews that he compoſed them in the Year 419.

The two next Books are concerning Lying. There St. Auguſtin handleth this Queſtion, which was very famous in his time, Whether a Lye may be uſed upon ſome Occaſions? He confeſſeth in the 1ſt. Book, entituled, Of Lying, and written in 395. That this is a perplexing Queſtion, often diſturbing Conſciences; and that there ſeem to be ſome Occaſions, when in Civility; and ſometimes, out of Charity, officious Lyes may be lawful. He ſays that he will forthwith examine the Queſtion, that he may find out ſome Light in ſo obſcure a Matter; and that at laſt he will declare for the Truth; being perſuaded, That though he were miſtaken in ſo doing, yet his Miſtake would prove leſs dangerous; becauſe Error can never do leſs miſchief, than when Men are deceived by a great Love of the Truth, and by oppoſing Falſhood with too much Zeal.

After this Preface, he defines what Lying is. He confeſſes, That Ironies are not Lyes; That every Untruth which a Man may ſpeak, is not a Lye, if Men believe that what they ſay is True: and, That to Lye, is to ſpeak what we do not think, with a deſign to deceive. VVhereupon he examines this ſubtle Queſtion, VVhether a Man ſpeaking what he knoweth to be falſe, becauſe he is ſure that he to whom he ſpeaks will not believe it, tells a Lye? And on the other ſide, VVhether a Man that ſpeaketh a Truth, with a deſign to deceive him whom he ſpeaks to, becauſe he knows that he will not believe him, is free from Lying? St. Auguſtin ſaith, That neither of theſe can be taxed with Lying; becauſe the one deſign'd to perſuade the Truth, by telling an Untruth; and the other ſpake the Truth, to perſuade a Falſity: but neither can be excuſed from Imprudence and Raſhneſs. Then he comes to the Queſtion which he propoſed to himſelf, VVhether a Man might Lye upon ſome Occaſions? Thoſe that held the Affirmative, alledged ſeveral Examples of Lyes, which ſeem to be both approved and commended in the Old Teſtament, and added a Reaſon from Common Sence. Should any one (ſaid they) flee to your Houſe for ſhelter, and it is in your power to ſave him from Death, by telling a Lye, would would you ſee him unjuſtly murthered, rather than tell a Lye? If a ſick Man asketh you a Queſtion about ſomething that he muſt not know; yea, ſuppoſing that he will be the worſe if you give him no Anſwer; would you then utter a Truth that might occaſion Death? or will you keep ſilence, when you may eaſe him by telling a charitable Lye? St. Auguſtin oppoſes to theſe Reaſons thoſe Paſſages of Holy Scripture which forbid Lying without reſtriction, and then anſwereth the Examples out of the Old Teſtament; That the Righteous who ſeem to have Lyed, did not intend that what they ſaid ſhould be underſtood in the uſual ſence, but that by a Prophetical Spirit they meant to diſcover thoſe things that were ſignified by thoſe Figures; as for other Perſons which are not in the number of the Righteous, the Holy Scripture never approves their Actions, but by comparing it with a greater Evil. He affirms, That there is no Example of Lying in the New Teſtament, and endeavours to anſwer the Inferences which they pretend to draw from the Inſtances of the Diſpute betwixt St. Peter and St. Barnabas, and betwixt St. Peter and St. Paul, as well as from the Circumciſing of Timothy. Laſtly, That he might put an End to all the Reaſons alledged from Neceſſity or Advantage, he maintains, That we muſt never do Evil, what Advantage ſoever we may get by it: That ſo the whole Queſtion is, Whether Lying be Evil or no? And not, Whether it is ſometimes Profitable? VVhence he concludes, That no Lye is to be told, either to preſerve our Chaſtity or our Life, or for the Good of others, or for any other reaſon whatſoever; no, not for the Eternal Salvation of our Neighbour, becauſe that Sin cannot be imputed to a Man, which he cannot prevent but by committing himſelf another Sin. To explain what he had ſaid more at large, he reckons up Eight ſorts of Lyes; and having laid this down for a Rule, That we muſt depend altogether upon Goſpel-Precepts, he enlargeth upon thoſe that make againſt Lying.

St. Auguſtin Tome VI.

The Second Book againſt Lying, is written upon the ſame Principles, but long after the Firſt; for St. Auguſtin wrote it in 420, at the Requeſt of Conſentius, who asked him, Whether it was not lawful to make uſe of Lyes, to diſcover the Priſcillianiſts, who concealed their Error by Lying, and horrid Execrations? St. Auguſtin condemns not only the Practice of the Priſcillianiſts, but alſo the Zeal of the Catholicks, who made uſe of Lyes to diſcover the Men of that Sect. He poſitively condemns the Catholicks Action, who feigned themſelves Priſcillianiſts, more than that of the Priſcillianiſts, who feigned themſelves Catholicks. From hence he takes an opportunity to enter upon the general Queſtion concerning Lying; and he affirms, That it is never allow'd upon any Pretence whatſoever; becauſe whatſoever is Sin in its own Nature, can never be rectified by any good Intention. He ſhews, by the Examples of David, and Lot, that we are not always to imitate the Actions of Righteous Men. He excuſeth Abraham, and Iſaac from Lying. As for Jacob's Action, he ſaith, it was no Lye, but a Myſtery: That there is no Example of any Lye in the New Teſtament, becauſe Tropes, Parables, and Figures, cannot be called Lyes, no more than what is ſaid of Jeſus Chriſt; that in his Diſcourſe with the Pilgrims, who went to Emmaus, he made as though he would have gone further; that we are no more to imitate Thamar's Lye, than Juda's Fornication; that God rewarded not the Lye of the Egyptian Midwives, but their Compaſſion towards the Iſraelites Children. The ſame muſt be ſaid of Rahab's Action. In one word; Theſe Examples of Lyes taken out of the Old Teſtament, are no Lyes, or if they be, they cannot be excuſed. Laſtly, Whatſoever Pretence they may have, Men are never permitted to betray the Truth for any Advantage, how great ſoever it may be, becauſe they are never allowed to ſin. And indeed, as St. Auguſtin obſerves once again, It is a very dangerous thing to allow Lying upon ſome occaſions, becauſe this Maxim may be ſtretched too far, and upon the ſame Principles, Perjury, and Blaſphemy may in time be allowed.

St. Auguſtin confeſſes, in his Retractations, that both theſe Treatiſes are very intricate; and that he had a Deſign himſelf to ſuppreſs them.

The Book Of the Buſineſs of Monks, is an excellent Satyr againſt ſome Monks, who thought themſelves exempted from working with their Hands, becauſe Chriſt hath ſaid, That we ſhould take no care for the Morrow, and ſo contented themſelves with Praying, Reading, and Singing. St. Auguſtin oppoſes to them both the Example, and the Authority of St. Paul, who plainly ſays, That whoſoever will not Work, ought not to Eat. He refutes the falſe Diſtinctions which they made to ſhift it of. He proves, That the true Sence of that Paſſage of the Goſpel which they quoted, did not exempt Men from Working, but only baniſhed the Ingratitude of worldly Men; that to labour with ones Hands is not inconſiſtent with Prayer; that it is ſo far from being unworthy of the Monaſtical State, that it is part of it: For, ſaith he, if a Rich Man makes himſelf a Monk, what can there be more perfect, than having quitted great Eſtates, to be obliged to Labour to get Neceſſaries. And if this new Convert be Poor, and of mean Condition, would not that be a criminal Nicety, to deſire to live more at Eaſe in a Monaſtery, than he did before in the World? Afterwards he draws the Picture of thoſe idle Monks, whom he calls Hypocrites in Monaſtical Habits, with whom the Devil hath overſpread the World. They travel (ſaith he) from Province to Province, without any Miſſion; they have no fix'd Habitation, and abide in no place; they continually alter their Station: Some carry Relicks about, (if they be Relicks,) and make an Advantage of them: Others take much upon them, by reaſon of their Habit and Profeſſion: Some ſay they are going to ſee their Kindred, who, as they have heard, dwell in ſuch a Countrey: But they all beg, and take it ill if you give them not, either

to

St. Auguſtin. Tome VI.

to ſupply the Wants of ſuch a Poverty as enricheth them, or to Recompence a ſeeming and counterfeit Honeſty. EXIGUNT AUT SUMPTUS LUCROSÆ EGESTATIS AUT SIMULATÆ PRETIUM SANCTITATIS. Laſtly, St. Auguſtin compares his own Condition with that of the Monks; affirming, That he would chuſe the Life of a Regular Monaſtery, to work at certain hours with his Hands, and to have others for Prayer and pious Reading, rather than to be ſubject to the Fatigues of Office, and to be continually entangled with the ſecular Buſineſſes of other Men. Towards the latter end, he laughs at the fancy of thoſe Monks who would never cut their Hair. Nothing is more pleaſant than the Anſwer which they made to that Paſſage of the Apoſtle, where he forbids Men to let their Hair grow. This (ſaid they) is ſpoken for Ordinary Men, but not for thoſe that have made themſelves Eunuchs for the Kingdom of Heaven. St. Auguſtin makes Sport with that ridiculous Notion of the Monks; ſhewing them, That they are Men as well as others. This Book is in the Retractations, among thoſe that were written about the Year 400.

The next Book is concerning the Predictions of Dæmons; wherein St. Auguſtin explains how they may Imagine and Foretell things, and how they often Miſtake: ſhewing at the ſame time, That Religion permits us not to Conſult with them. He ſuppoſes that Dæmons have very ſubtile Bodies. This ſmall Treatiſe was compoſed in an Eaſter-Week, of ſome of the Years betwixt 406, and 411.

The Book of the Care which they ought to have of the Dead, was written to anſwer that Queſtion which St. Paulinus, Biſhop of Nola, had propoſed to St. Auguſtin in the Year 421. namely, Whether a dead Man was any thing the better for being buried in the Church of ſome holy Martyr. To this Queſtion is added another, To what purpoſe are the Church's Prayers for the Dead, ſeeing that according to the Apoſtle's Maxim, All Men ſhall be judged according to what they have done in this Life? St. Auguſtin anſwereth, That the Book of Maccabees eſtabliſhes the Cuſtom of Praying for the Dead; and, That though nothing of it were found in the Old Teſtament, yet the Cuſtom of the Church is ſufficient to authorize that Practice, which is done in the Adminiſtration of the Euchariſt. He is perſuaded, That the Honour of Burial doth neither Good nor Hurt to the Soul of the dead Perſon; but yet that this Duty is to be pay'd to the Dead, as a Teſtimony of the Reſpect which is due to the Memory of pious Perſons: That to be buried in a Martyrs Church, doth nothing of it ſelf; but it ſerves to put the Faithful in mind of Praying for the Dead, becauſe the Devotion for the Martyr encreaſeth the Fervency of Prayer. But that commonly the Care of decent Burial proceeds from the Reſpect which Men have for the Body: That Martyrs had Reaſon to lay aſide that Care: That the Scripture commends thoſe that are careful to bury the Dead, becauſe it is a Token o their Tenderneſs and Affection towards their Brethren. St. Auguſtin ſpea s afterwards concerning Apparitions of the Dead, by Dreams or otherwiſe; and having mention'd ſeveral Examples, he examineth how they come to paſs. He thinks it more rational, to attribute them to the working of Angels, who form thoſe Idea's in the Imagination, than to the Souls of the Dead. He does not believe that they are preſent, or that they take any notice at that time of the things that are done, but that they are acquainted with them afterwards, either by Angels, or by the Souls of thoſe that are dead; or laſt of all, by the Inſpiration of God. And by this laſt means, he believes that the Martyrs come to know the Neceſſities of the Faithful, and to hear their Prayers. He does not queſtion but Martyrs help the Living; but he knows not whether they do it by themſelves, or whether God doth it by Angels, at their Requeſt. He confeſſeth, That we cannot know by which of theſe means, or whether by both, the Martyrs work Miracles.

He concludes, That of all that is done for the Dead, nothing availeth them where they are but the Offering of the Euchariſt, Prayers and Almſdeeds: That theſe things are not uſeful to all, but only to ſuch as deſerved in their life-time, to reap Benefit by them after their death: That however, theſe things are performed for all Chriſtians that were Baptized, becauſe we cannot diſtinguiſh who ſhall be the better for it or not: That it is better that they ſhould be ſuperfluous to ſome, than that they ſhould be wanting to others: That theſe Duties are with Reaſon more exactly performed for our Friends and Kindred, that we may receive the ſame Aſſiſtance from our other Relations: That the Decency of Burial availeth nothing to the Salvation of the Dead, but it is a Duty of Humanity which is not to be neglected.

The Diſcourſe of Patience, is one of thoſe that St. Auguſtin mentions in the 231ſt. Letter. He treateth there of that Vertue rather Dogmatically than Pathetically. He takes notice at firſt, That God's Patience is of another nature from that of Men, becauſe he cannot ſuffer. Then he diſtinguiſhes True Patience, which is a Vertue, from the Counterfeit, which is a Vice. Ambitious Men, Covetous, Luxurious Men, and Robbers, endure patiently extremity of Pain and Miſery; yet want the Vertue of Patience, becauſe they ſuffer upon an ill account. None but ſuch as Suffer for a good Cauſe, can be ſaid to be truly Patient. But if wicked Men endure all things for the Goods of this World, What ought not the Righteous to ſuffer for Eternal Life? Then he propoſes the Examples both of Job and of the Martyrs; to the which he oppoſes the Impatience of the Donatiſts, who killed themſelves, that they might be accounted Martyrs; ſhewing, That Self-Murther is a greater Sin than Murthering of another; "For (ſaith he) a Parricide "is more guilty than a Man-ſlayer, becauſe he kills a Perſon that is nearer to him than other "Men: By the ſame reaſon, he muſt be thought the greater Sinner who kills himſelf, be-"cauſe none are ſo near to us as our ſelves." Laſtly, He maintains, That True Patience is not from

from our own ſtrength, but from God's help; becauſe true Patience is grounded upon Charity, which is the Gift of God. This puts St. Auguſtin upon diſcourſing of Grace, and proving that it is not given to our Merits; but that it prevents them, and goeth before Faith it ſelf, which is the beginning of all good Works. This ſhort Diſcourſe was written about the Year 418. St. Auguſtin. Tome VI.

Of the Four following Sermons upon the Creed, there is none but the firſt which comes near St. Auguſtin's Stile, as it is obſerved in the Preface. It contains a clear and ſuccinct Explication of the Articles of the Creed. He ſaith, upon the Article of the Church, That there is but one only true Catholick Church, which oppoſes all Hereſies, and can never be overcome. Upon the Article of the Forgiveneſs of Sins, he diſtinguiſheth two ſorts of Sins, Light and Great Sins; Baptiſm remitteth both. After Baptiſm, Light Sins, from which no man can be abſolutely free, are remitted by the Lord's Prayer: But great Sins, as Adultery, and other Enormous Crimes, cannot be remitted but by an humbling Penance. In this Creed we find the Article of Everlaſting Life, which gives Grounds of Suſpicion, that this Diſcourſe is none of St. Auguſtin's; becauſe this Article is not in the Book of Faith, and the Creed, which is certainly his.

The Benedictines have Reaſon to Print the Three other Sermons upon the ſame Subject, in a ſmall Character, and to obſerve as they do, that they are written in a very different Stile from St. Auguſtin's; yet they believe them to be ancient, and written by ſome Diſciple of St. Auguſtin, during the Vandals Perſecution againſt the Catholicks, which is mentioned in the Second Sermon.

They likewiſe put into the ſame rank Three other Sermons, which they believe to belong to the ſame Author; The Sermon of the Fourth Day of the Week, Or, Of the Dreſſing of the Lord's Vineyard; A Diſcourſe concerning the Flood, and the Sermon of the Time of the Barbarian's Perſecution; which they have alſo Printed in a ſmall Character.

They have left the Sermon of the New Song under St. Auguſtin's Name; but they ſay in the Preface, That they doubted whether it was his. They might have paſſed the ſame Cenſure of the Sermon of Diſcipline, and that of the Uſefulneſs of Faſting; which I cannot find to be any more than the others of S. Auguſtin's Stile: Nay, I ſcarce believe, That the Sermon of the taking of the City of Rome, which is the laſt in this Volume, is truly St. Auguſtin's; yet every man is left to judge as he pleaſes, that ſhall read it.

The Treatiſes which you find in the Supplement, are certainly none of St. Auguſtin's: The Benedictines have made an exact Critick of them in their Prefaces, and have Collected all that could be ſaid or gueſs'd at concerning their Authors.

The firſt is a Collection of One and twenty Queſtions, gather'd without any Order by a very Ignorant Author. Moſt of them are about Philoſophical Matters, and compoſed of Extracts out of ſeveral of St. Auguſtin's Books.

The Sixty five following Queſtions and Anſwers, which are found in ſome Manuſcripts under Oroſius's and St. Auguſtin's Names, are in a better order than the former, and concerning more Theological Matters; but they are Extracts out of ſeveral Paſſages: The firſt Twelve are taken out of a Treatiſe falſly attributed to St. Auguſtin, Concerning the Trinity and Unity of God. Moſt of them that follow, are Extracts out of St. Eucherius. Some are out of St. Auguſtin's Treatiſe upon Geneſis. They end with a Citation of a Paſſage of St. Auguſtin againſt thoſe who deſire to be Biſhops, that they might Command, taken out of the 19th Chapter of the 19th. Book of the City of God; which is quoted as of a Father ancienter than himſelf: One of the Fathers, ſaith he, hath ſaid very elegantly, againſt thoſe that deſire to Command: Let thoſe, ſaith he, who would Command rather than Serve others, know, that they are not Biſhops.

The Book of Faith to Peter, belongs to St. Fulgentius, to whom it is aſcribed in a Manuſcript of Corby, above One thouſand Years old, as well as in another later. It is cited under his Name by Ratramnus, in his Treatiſe of the Body and Blood of Chriſt. Both Iſidore, and Honorius of Autun, do likewiſe mention a Treatiſe of St. Fulgentius, containing the Rule of Faith; which is not different from this.

The Book of the Spirit and Soul, which is a Collection of Paſſages from ſeveral Authors, is attributed to Hugo de S. Victore by Trithemius, and by Vincentius Bellovacenſis, and Printed among this Author's Works. Yet the great number of Extracts taken out of the very Works of Hugo de S. Victore makes it queſtionable, whether it be his. St. Thomas aſcribes it to a Ciſtercian Monk. The Benedictines believe that it was written by Alcherus, a Friend of Iſaac's, Abbot of Stella, to whom this Man directed a Letter of the Soul. In the Bibliotheca Ciſterciana, it is attributed to Iſaac, and it is obſerved that he publiſh'd it under Alcherus's Name; but it is not likely that Abbot Iſaac would inſert a part of his own Letter into this Treatiſe.

The Treatiſe of Friendſhip is an Epitome, or rather an Extract out of the Treatiſe of Aelredus Rievallenſis, which is found among that Author's Works.

The Book of the Subſtance of Love, is made up of two ſmall Treatiſes among the Works of Hugo de S. Victore. That of the Love of God, is a Collection of Paſſages of this ſame Author's, out of St. Bernard, and St. Anſelm. Vincentius Bellovacenſis cites it under Peter Comeſtor's Name.

The Soliloquies that are here, are not thoſe of St. Auguſtin, which are in the firſt Volume of his Works: Theſe are made up out of Paſſages of the Soliloquies and Confeſſions of St. Auguſtin, and the Books of Hugo de S. Victore. There is the firſt Chapter of the Fourth Lateran Council held in the Year 1198.

St. Auguſtin. Tome VI.

It is proved in the Preface to the Book of Meditations, that they cannot be St. Auguſtin's. Many of them are attributed to St. Anſelm; but the Benedictines have prov'd, That they are rather written by John Abbot of Feſcamp, who lived in the time of the Emperor Henry III. to whoſe Widow he directs a Letter, publiſhed by Father Mabillon in the firſt Volume of his Analecta, from another Manuſcript of the Abby of St. Arnoul of Metz, where this Treatiſe of Meditations is mentioned, part whereof is found in the ſame Manuſcript.

The following Treatiſe of the Contrition of the Heart, is taken out of the Meditations attributed to St. Anſelm.

The Manual is Compoſed likewiſe of Extracts out of St. Anſelm's Works, and St. Bernard's, Hugo's de S. Victore, and Alcuinus; there are alſo ſome Paſſages of St. Auguſtin, St. Cyprian, St. Gregory, and of Iſidore of Seville. Part of this Book is in the next Book, entituled the Looking-Glaſs: Another part of it is the Extract of a Prayer which is in the Manuſcript of Corby, which containeth the Works of Abbot John.

The Looking-Glaſs makes a part of the Confeſſion of Faith, which Chiffletius publiſhed under Alcuinus's Name; yet it is Compoſed of Paſſages out of Alcuinus's own Works.

The next Book is entituled, The Looking-Glaſs of a Sinner. The Author citeth a Sentence of Odo Cluniacenſis, in Commendation of St. Martin. He uſeth the term of Prebend, and he hath taken ſome places out of the Prayer of Hugo de S. Victore, out of the Book of the Spirit and Soul already mentioned, and out of the Book of Conſcience, aſcribed to St. Bernard. The Book of the threefold Habitation is of the ſame nature; and there are the ſame Notions. It is very likely that all theſe Treatiſes of Piety belong to the ſame Author.

The Book intituled, The Ladder of Paradiſe, attributed to St. Bernard, and intituled in his VVorks, the Ladder of the Cloiſter; or, a Treatiſe how to Pray; is written by Guigo [or Guido] Carthuſianus, as appears by the Letter that ſerves for a Preface, taken out of the Manuſcript of the Carthuſian Houſe in Colen.

Honorius of Autun, in his Book of Luminaries, mentions a Book which he had written, intituled, Of the Knowledge of Life; or, Of the true Life. This here bears the ſame Title, and has the Stile and Genius of this Author; as is proved in the Preface.

The Book of a Chriſtian Life, was formerly reſtored by Holſtenius, to one Faſtidius, a Britain, who is the true Author of it; as we learn not only by the ancient Manuſcript belonging to the Monaſtery of Mount-Caſſin, by which Holſtenius Printed it at Rome, in 1633. but alſo by the Authority of Gennadius, who aſcribes it to him, and who obſerves that this Author was a Britain.

In this Book there are ſeveral Footſteps of Pelagius's Errors; he lived much about the ſame time.

The Book of Wholſome Inſtructions, is here reſtored upon the Credit of an ancient Manuſcript, in the Library of M. Colbert, to Paulinus Patriarch of Aquileia; who lived about the latter end of the * Ninth Century.

The Author of the Book, Of the Twelve Abuſes of the Age, is not known; it is as wrongfully attributed to St. Auguſtin as to St. Cyprian: only it is obſerved in the Preface, That this Book is quoted by Jonas Biſhop of Orleans, who was ancienter than Hincmar, who writ a Book bearing the ſame Title, different from that mentioned by Flodoardus: Pamelius found a Manuſcript, having in the Margin the Name of Evrard, inſtead of St. Auguſtin; but this Evrard is not known.

They did not Print the two Treatiſes of the Seven deadly Sins, and of the Seven Gifts of the Holy Spirit, which F. Vignier publiſhed under St. Auguſtin's Name, in the Firſt Part of his Supplement, becauſe they are amongſt the VVorks of Hugo de S. Victore.

The Treatiſe of the Conflict betwixt Vertues and Vices was firſt aſcribed to St. Auguſtin, then to St. Leo, then to St. Ambroſe, and at laſt to Iſidore of Seville: but here it is reſtored to its true Author Ambroſius Autpertus, a Benedictine Monk [of the Monaſtery of St. Vincent] upon the Vulturnus near Benevento. This Treatiſe is mentioned in his Life, which is in the Acts of the Benedictines, Age III. at the Year 778. The Stile of this Treatiſe is very like that of this Author's Commentary upon the Revelations.

Of the ſame Nature is the Book of Sobriety and Charity, and the Author of it is unknown. There Drunkenneſs is particularly reproved. This Book is well enough written, and ſeemeth to me to be ancient.

The Benedictines prove in their Preface to the Book of true and falſe Repentance, That this Book has not St. Auguſtin's Stile, though it hath been cited under his Name by Gratian, by the Maſter of the Sentences, Petrus Bleſenſis, and ſeveral others.

The Treatiſe of Antichriſt, is likewiſe among the VVorks of Alcuinus and Rabanus. Rupertus cites it without naming the Author. The Manuſcripts attribute it to Alcuinus, and it agrees well enough with his other Writings. It contains ſeveral Circumſtances relating to Anti-Chriſt, and the End of the World, which he deſcribeth with as much Confidence as if he had learned it by Revelation.

After this Treatiſe comes a Prayer, or rather an Imprecation out of ſeveral Verſes of the Pſalms. It is intituled in a Manuſcript of the King's Library, The Pſalter of Pope John, made at Vienna. John the XXIId. is thought to be the Man meant by that Title.

* [This ſeems to be a miſtake of the Preſs: this Paulinus, or as it is in the French Paulus, was Contemporary with Charles the Great, aſſiſted at the Council of Franefort, and dy'd, according to Dr. Cave, in the Year 804.]

The

The following Treatiſe upon the Magnificat, is a Fragment of the Treatiſe of Hugo de S. Victore, upon this Hymn.

That of the Virgin's Aſſumption, is a Sermon of ſome Author of the Twelfth Century, or thereabouts; which teacheth that the Bleſſed Virgin is in Heaven, both Soul and Body.

Both the Diſcourſes concerning Viſiting the Sick, contain uſeful Rules to teach Prieſts how they ſhould behave themſelves towards Sick Perſons; but they are very late. Both the Diſcourſes of the Comfort for the Dead, are of the ſame Nature, and it may be of the ſame Author.

The Treatiſe of Chriſtian Behaviour is a Collection of Notions taken out of St. Eloi or Eligius Biſhop of Noyon, and Cæſarius. The Diſcourſe upon the Creed, is likewiſe a Collection of Remarks drawn out of Rufinus, Cæſarius, St. Gregory, Ivo Carnutenſis, and others. The Sermon upon Eaſter-Eve, about the Paſchal-Lamb, and that upon the * 41ſt. Sermon, are among the Books falſly attributed to St. Jerom.

The three Sermons to the Novices, concerning Unction, Baptiſm, and waſhing of the Feet, are not like St. Auguſtin's Writings, though they are attributed to him in very ancient Manuſcripts.

The Treatiſe of the Creation of the firſt Man, is inſerted entire into the Book of the Spirit and the Soul. It is among St. Ambroſe's VVorks, entituled a Treatiſe of the Dignity of the firſt Man; and among Alcuinus's it is intituled, Thoughts of the Bleſſed Albinus a Levite, upon theſe words of Geneſis, Let us make Man after our own Image.

The Sermon of the Vanity of this preſent Age, is inſerted into the Treatiſe of Chriſtian Behaviour. The Author of the Sermon upon the contempt of the World is not known. That about the Advantage of Diſcipline belongs to Valerianus Cemelienſis: It is not known who was the Author of the Sermons of Obedience, Humility, Prayer, Alms, and that of the Generality of Alms-deeds. The ſmall Diſcourſe of the Twelve Prayers ſpoken of in the 21ſt. Chapter of the Revelations, belongs perhaps to Amatus a Monk, of Mount-Caſſin, or rather an Extract of Bede's Commentary upon that Paſſage in the Revelations.

Finally, The Sermons to the Brethren that live in the Wilderneſs, are the Work of ſome Modern Monk, who was ſo imprudent as to publiſh them under St. Auguſtin's Name, though it be as clear as the day, that they are not of this Father. Baronius obſerves, That they were Compos'd by an Impoſtor, and that they are full of Fables, Falſities, and Lyes. Bellarmin ſaith, That the Stile of them is Childiſh, Courſe, and Barbarous. There are ſeveral Paſſages out of St. Auguſtin, Cæſarius and St. Gregory. It is probable, that the Author was a Flemming.

St. Auguſtin. Tome VI.

* [What this Book upon the 41ſt. Sermon ſhou'd be, I cannot tell; it is falſe Printed in all probability, but not having this Benedictine Edition of St. Auguſtin by me, I could not alter it.]

The SEVENTH TOME.

Tom. VII.

THE Seventh Volume contains St. Auguſtin's great Work of the City of God. He undertook it about the Year 413. after the taking of Rome by Alaric King of the Goths, to refute the Heathens who attributed that Misfortune to the Chriſtian Religion. This VVork held him ſeveral Years, by reaſon of many intervening Buſineſſes which he could not put off; ſo that he did not finiſh it before the Year 426. It is divided into Two and twenty Books, whereof the firſt Five refute thoſe who believe that the worſhip of the Gods is neceſſary for the good of the VVorld; and affirmed, That all the Miſchiefs lately happened, proceeded from no other cauſe, but the aboliſhing of that Religion. The next Five are againſt thoſe who confeſſing that the ſame Calamities have been in all Ages; yet pretend that the worſhip of the Heathen Divinities was profitable to a future Life. Thus the Ten firſt Books are to Anſwer both thoſe Chimerical Opinions, which are contrary to the Chriſtian Religion. But leſt they ſhould reproach him with having refuted the Opinions of others, without eſtabliſhing the Chriſtian Religion, the other part of this VVork is allotted to that purpoſe, and it conſiſts of Twelve Books, though he ſometimes eſtabliſheth our belief in the former Ten, and ſo in the Twelve others he ſometimes correcteth the Errors of our Adverſaries. In the Four firſt of theſe Twelve, he deſcribes, The Original of the two Cities; the one of God, and the other of the VVorld. In the Four next, their Progreſs; And in the Four laſt, their Ends: And ſo, though all the 22. Books do equally treat of both Cities, yet this VVork has its Name from the better, and they are commonly called, The Books of the City of God. This is the Account which St. Auguſtin gives, both of the Subject and of the Occaſion of theſe Books in his Retractations. Let us now examine more particularly what is moſt remarkable in each Book; for it is a VVork made up of a great variety of very learned and very curious things.

In the Firſt Book, he ſhews, That inſtead of imputing to the Chriſtians, the Deſolation and the taking of Rome, the Heathen ought rather to aſcribe to the ſpecial favour of Jeſus Chriſt, That the Barbarians, only out of reverence to his Name, ſpared all thoſe that had retired into the Churches. He pretends, That there are no Examples in the VVars of the Heathen, to ſhew That the Enemies who ſpoiled a Town taken by Storm, ſpared thoſe who took Sanctuary in the Temples of their Gods. This puts St. Auguſtin upon asking, why this Favour of God was extended to thoſe Ungodly Men that fled into the Churches, who feigned themſelves to be Chriſtians; and why the good were involved in the ſame Miſchief with the wicked. He confeſſes, That both the Good and the Evil Things of this VVorld are common both to Good and Evil Men;

St. Auguſtin. Tome VII.

Men; but the difference conſiſts in the Uſe which they make of them. He obſerves, That perhaps good Men probably are puniſhed with the wicked, becauſe they took no care to reprove and to correct them; and that however, good Men loſe nothing by loſing the good things of this World; That a Chriſtian ought to be eaſily conforted for want of Burial, ſeeing that this doth him neither good nor hurt: And he comforteth the Virgins that had been raviſhed in that diſorder; ſhewing, That they loſt neither the Chaſtity of the Soul, nor the Purity of the Body: He excuſeth thoſe that killed themſelves, rather than endure that diſhonour. But he ſhews at the ſame time, That this Action ſo much admired by the Heathen, is contrary both to Reaſon, and to the Laws of Nature; and that it is never lawful to kill our ſelves upon any account whatſoever. He anſwers the Examples of ſome holy Women who threw themſelves into the River, to eſcape the Violence of thoſe that would have raviſh'd them. He ſaith, That they might have been induced to that, by the Spirit of God, as Sampſon was. He concludes with a Deſcription of the Depravation of the Romans, and the Diſorders of their Manners, at that time.

In the Second Book he affirms, That the corruption of Manners, which is the greateſt of Miſchiefs, was always reigning in Rome; and that the Gods they Worſhipped, were ſo far from preſcribing them Laws, for the Reformation of their Manners, that on the contrary, they encouraged them to Vice, by their Examples, and by the Ceremonies that were uſed in their Worſhip.

In the Third Book he goes back as far as the Siege of Troy, and then takes a view of the principal Events which happened to the People of Rome, to convince the moſt Stubborn, That their Gods preſerved them not from the ſame Diſaſters and Calamities, which the Heathen now imputed to the Chriſtian Religion.

In the Fourth Book he ſhews, That the encreaſe of the Roman Empire can be attributed neither to all the Divinities which they adored, nor to any one in particular: That however, no Empire is to be called Happy, which is encreaſed only by War, as the Roman Empire was: That great Empires, without Juſtice, were but great Robberies; and that the true God alone, is the ſole Diſpenſer of the Kingdoms of the Earth.

He proſecuteth the ſame Subject in the Fifth Book; and proves, in the beginning, That the greatneſs of Empires depends not upon Chance, nor upon a particular Conjunction of the Stars: Which gives him occaſion to ſpeak of Deſtiny, and to refute judicial Aſtrology at large. He acknowledges a Deſtiny, if by this Term is meant a ſeries, and concatenation of all Cauſes, which God foreſaw from all Eternity; but he adviſes Men rather not to uſe that word which may have an ill Sence. He endeavours to make God's Fore-knowledge, and the infallibility of thoſe Events, which he foreſees, to agree with Man's Free-Will. Then from this Diſpoſition of Things, he comes to enquire into the Cauſes of the Roman Victories, and he meets with none more probable than their Honeſty. He confeſſes, That God rewarded their moral Vertues with thoſe ſorts of Recompences; adding, That thereby God made the Inhabitants of the eternal City, to know what Recompence they were to expect for their Chriſtian Vertues. Since the counterfeit Vertues of the Heathen were ſo well rewarded, that he ſet this Example before their Eyes, to teach them how much they ought to be in love with their Heavenly Country for an immortal Life, ſince the Inhabitants of an Earthly Country were ſo much in love with it, for an humane, and a mortal Glory; and how hard they were to Labour for that Heavenly Country, ſince the Romans had taken ſuch great Pains for their Earthly One. " He examineth afterwards, wherein conſiſts the true Happineſs of Chriſtian Kings, " and Princes: And he ſhews, That they are not Happy for having reigned long, for dying " in Peace, and leaving their Children ſucceſſors of their Crowns, nor for the Victories which " they obtained, becauſe ſuch Advantages are common to them with ungodly Kings: But " that Chriſtian Princes are ſaid to be Happy, when they ſet up Juſtice, when in the midſt " of the Praiſes that are given them, and the Honours that are pay'd unto them, they are not " ſwell'd with Pride, when they ſubmit their Power to the Sovereign Power of God, and uſe " it to make his Worſhip to flouriſh. When they fear, love, and worſhip God; when they " preferr, before this which they now enjoy, that wherein they are not afraid to meet with " any Competitours; when they are ſlow to Puniſh, and ready to Forgive; when they puniſh " only for the good of the Publick, and not to ſatisfie their Revenge; and when they forgive " purely that Men may be Corrected, and not that Crimes may be Countenanced; when being " obliged to uſe Severity, they temper it with ſome Actions of Meekneſs, or Clemency; when " they are ſo much the more temperate in their Pleaſures, by how much they have a greater " Liberty to exceed; when they affect to Command their Paſſions, rather than all the Nati- " ons of the World, and they do all theſe Things, not out of Vain-Glory, but to obtain eter- " nal Happineſs; and, in ſhort, when they are careful to offer unto God, for their Sins, the " Sacrifice of Humility, Mercy, and Prayer. Theſe, ſaith St. Auguſtin, are the Chriſtian Princes whom we call Happy: Happy even in this World by Experience, and really Happy, when what we look for, ſhall come. Finally, he propoſes the Examples of ſome Chriſtian Emperours, and particularly of Conſtantine, and Theodoſius, whoſe Greatneſs, and Proſperities, he extols and ſets forth.

In

In the Sixth Book, St. Auguſtin proves by the Authority of Varro, that the fabulous Divinity of the Heathen is ridiculous; he makes the ſame Concluſion concerning their civil Theology, and grounds what he ſaith of it upon Seneca's Authority. St. Auguſtin. Tom. VII.

He goes on in the Seventh, to diſcover the Falſhood of the Heathen civil Theology; ſhewing, That their chiefeſt Divinities, or ſelect Gods, do not deſerve to be called Gods; and that the Chriſtian's God alone governs the World.

The Eighth Book refutes the natural Theology of their Philoſophers: He preferrs the Platoniſts before all other Philoſophers, and owns that they knew the True God; ſhewing withall, that they were deceiv'd by honouring Dæmons, as ſubaltern Deities, and Mediators betwixt God, and Men: He ſhews, "That the Chriſtians never committed this Miſtake; and that "they are ſo far from adoring the Dæmons, which are evil Spirits, that they do not worſhip the "Angels, nor the Holy Martyrs; that they do indeed Honour, and Reverence them as the "Servants of God, but that they did not build Temples for them, nor conſecrate Prieſts, nor "offer Sacrifices unto them. For, ſaith he, who among Chriſtians ever ſaw a Prieſt before an "Altar, conſecrated to God, upon the Body of a Martyr, ſay in his Prayer, Peter, Paul, or "Cyprian, I offer you this Sacrifice? It is offered to God, though it be upon the Monuments of Martyrs; and theſe Ceremonies were appointed to be performed upon their Monuments, for no other end, but to give the True God Thanks for the Victories which they had obtained, and at the ſame time, to ſtir up Chriſtians to imitate their Courage, and to make themſelves worthy to have a ſhare in their Crowns, and Rewards: So that all the Acts of Piety, and Religion, which are done at the Tombs of the Holy Martyrs, are Honours pay'd to their Memory, and not Sacrifices offered to them as Divinities.

But foraſmuch as they owned Two ſorts of Dæmons, ſome good, and ſome bad, St. Auguſtin examines that Diſtinction in the next Book, where he ſhews by the Principles both of Apuleius, and of the Chief of Heatheniſh Authors, that all Dæmons are Evil. Whence he concludes, That they cannot be Mediatours between God, and Men. He doth not believe, That Angels deſerve that Title, affirming, That it belongeth to none but Jeſus Chriſt alone.

In the Tenth Book he treateth at large of Angel Worſhip: He ſaith, That they are Creatures, whoſe Felicity is all in God; that they worſhip God, and their Deſire is, that all Men would worſhip him; that they require of us, neither Adoration, nor Sacrifices; and that God doth not expect from us Sacrifices, like thoſe of the Heathen, but a Sarcifice of Union, ſuch as the Church celebrates in the Euchariſt, and which the Faithful know: That the Miracles which were wrought by the interpoſition of Angels, (not of Dæmons, whoſe Prodigies are nothing but illuſions:) Theſe Miracles, I ſay, were wrought by God's Power, to make himſelf known unto Men: That the inviſible God becomes viſible by the miniſtry of his Angels, whom he made uſe of to deliver his Law to the World: That it is ſo true, that no Sacrifice is to be offered to any but God; that Jeſus Chriſt, as Man, would be made a Sacrifice himſelf, and not receive one from any Body elſe: That God alone can purifie Men of their Sins, as the Platoniſts themſelves acknowledge, that ſo it was neceſſary that God ſhould be made Man to be a true Mediator: That the juſt Men, under the old Law, were not Saved, but by Faith in this Mediator: That Pride alone keeps the Platoniſts from owning the Incarnation: That the Soul is not Co-eternal with God, as they imagine: And Laſtly, That the Means of delivering, the Soul which they fought after to ſo little purpoſe, is nothing but the Chriſtian Religion.

In the 11th. Book, St. Auguſtin finds the Original of both Cities, in the diverſity of Angels; which gives him occaſion to treat of the Creation of the viſible World, which was immediately preceded by that of the inviſible, that is of the Angels whom he created all in a State of Righteouſneſs, from which ſome are fallen through their own fault. He makes ſome digreſſions to ſpeak of the Trinity, and of ſeveral Circumſtances of the Creation of the VVorld.

Having proved in the 12th. That the difference of good, and evil Angels doth not proceed from their Nature, but from their VVill, becauſe God created nothing but what was both Good, and Perfect. He comes to diſcourſe of Mankind; and proves, That Men are not from Eternity, but that God created Man in time: And he mentions ſomething, concerning the Fall of the Firſt Man, whereof he ſpeaks more at large in the 13th. Book, where he ſhews, That the death, both of Body and Soul, was the Conſequence, and the Puniſhment of Adam's Fall. There one may meet with ſeveral curious Notions concerning Death; and ſeveral Reflections upon the Reſurrection, and the Quality of glorified Bodies. He goes on in the 14th. Book, to ſpeak of the Fall of the Firſt Man, and of the lamentable Conſequences that attended it, and particularly of irregular Deſires, and ſhameful Paſſions. He enquires, VVhether the Firſt Man was ſubject to Paſſions, and how he could Sin, being free from them. Laſtly, He asketh ſeveral Queſtions, rather nice, than neceſſary, how Men ſhould have had Children in the Earthly Paradiſe, had they continued in the State of Innocence.

The Fifteenth Book is the firſt of thoſe wherein he examineth the Progreſs of both the Cities: He finds the Hiſtory of it in the Old Teſtament, where he ſhews who were the Citizens of both thoſe Cities. This Book proſecutes this Hiſtory from the Creation, to the Flood. On the one ſide, we ſee Abel, and Iſaac, and on the other Cain, and Eſau: And both theſe Cities may be taken notice of in the Marriages of the Sons of God, with the Daughters of St. Auguſtin. Tom. VII.

Men. The Church is repreſented by Noah's Ark. There are in this Book curious Allegories, and ſeveral Reflections upon the Hiſtory of Geneſis. Amongſt other Things, he examines the length of the Lives of the Firſt Patriarchs; and the Difference betwixt the Tranſlation of the Septuagint, and the Hebrew Text, about the Number of the Generations.

In the 16th. Book he carries on the Hiſtory of both Cities, from Noah to Abraham, and from Abraham to the Kings of Iſrael. He doth not find that the Scripture takes notice of any that ſerved God from Noah to Abraham. He ſpeaks of the Poſterity of the Children of Noah, of the Confounding of Languages, of the Antiquity of the Hebrew Tongue, and of the Multiplication of Mankind. He queſtions whether there be Antipodes. In the reſt of the Book he clears the Hiſtory of Abraham, and of his Poſterity, which is explained with relation to the City of God.

In the 17th. taking a View of the Hiſtory both of the Kings and of the Prophets, he relates and expounds the Prophecies which are in the Books of Kings, in the Pſalms, and in the Books of Solomon, which relate to Chriſt or his Church.

Now as he had quitted the Hiſtory of the City of the World, when he was come to Abraham, ſo he reſumeth it in the beginning of the 18th. Book; which contains an Abridgment of the Hiſtory of the Principal Monarchies in the VVorld, the times whereof he makes to agree with the Hiſtory of the Bible; and he omits not to ſpeak of the Fabulous Hiſtories, and of the Metamorphoſes. Afterwards, he quotes the Sibylline Oracles; but he inſiſts moſt upon the Predictions of the Prophets, which he produces in all their Particulars. He ſpeaks alſo of the Books of the Maccabees: and having made ſome Reflections upon the Authority of the Hiſtory of the Canonical Books, and of the Tranſlation of the LXX. he deſcribeth in few words the Fall of the Jewiſh Empire; and ſo he comes to the Nativity of Jeſus Chriſt, the Diſperſion of the Jews, the Settlement of the Church, the Perſecutions and Hereſies which immediately followed. St. Auguſtin makes very ingenious Reflections upon all theſe Articles; and concludes this Book, by ſhowing, That the End of the VVorld is Unknown; and he refutes a falſe Prediction which the Heathens publiſhed, That the Chriſtian Religion ſhould laſt but Three hundred ſixty five Years.

The 19th. Book treateth of the End of both Cities: Each one aims at the chiefeſt Good; but the Inhabitants of the Terreſtrial know ſo little of it, that their Philoſophers, the Wiſeſt among them, could never agree wherein it conſiſted. Varro reckoneth Two hundred eighty eight different Opinions of Philoſophers about it. The Chriſtian Religion diſcovers the Falſity of all thoſe Opinions, by letting Man know, That he cannot be Happy in this Life, but only in Hope; becauſe he cannot enjoy here Peace and perfect Tranquility.

The 20th. Book contains a Deſcription of the Laſt Judgment, of the Renewing of the World, of the Reſurrection, and of the Heavenly Jeruſalem.

The 21ſt. treateth of the End of the Earthly City, and repreſents the Horror of the Torments of Dæmons and Damned Men, and of the Eternal Fire of Hell. St. Auguſtin refutes the vain Reaſons of thoſe that doubt of it; and the Fancy of ſome, who affirmed, That thoſe Torments ſhould have an End, and that Men ſhould be kept from them by the Interceſſion of the Saints, by the Uſe of Sacraments, and by Almſdeeds.

The Laſt Book is, concerning the Happineſs which the Saints ſhall enjoy to Eternity. The main End which St. Auguſtin aims at there, is, To prove the Probability of Man's Reſurrection. His chief Reaſon is grounded upon Chriſt's Reſurrection; atteſted by ſuch credible Witneſſes, that none can rationally doubt of it, the truth thereof having been confirmed by ſo many Miracles. But becauſe Unbelievers demanded why Miracles were not ſtill wrought, St. Auguſtin mentions ſeveral that were done in his time, which he pretends to be very certain, and very well atteſted. He ſpeaks again of the Condition of Glorified Bodies, and Crowns his Work with an excellent Pourtraicture of the Happineſs of the Saints. " How great (ſaith he) will " be that Felicity that ſhall be diſturbed with no Evil, and where no other Buſineſs ſhall be " followed but ſinging the Praiſes of God, who ſhall be all in all? ... There will be found " True Glory, where there is neither Error nor Flattery. There is True Honour; ſince it " it is refuſed to none that deſerve it, and it is not given to any that deſerve it not; yea, where " no Unworthy Perſon ſhall pretend to it, becauſe there ſhall be none there but ſuch as are " Worthy. There will be True Peace, where a Man ſhall ſuffer nothing either from himſelf, " or from other Men. He that is the Author of Vertue, ſhall himſelf be the Reward of it; " becauſe there is nothing better than He. He ſhall be the End of our Deſires, whom we ſhall " See to be without End, whom we ſhall Love without Diſguſt, and Praiſe without Weari- " neſs. This Employment will be common to all Men, as well as Eternal Life; but it is im- " poſſible to know what degree of Glory ſhall be proportionable to each Man's Merit; and " yet it is certain, that there is a great difference betwixt the Happineſs of the one and of the " other. But one of the great Advantages of that City, will be, That none ſhall envy thoſe " whom he ſhall ſee to be Above him .... Every one ſhall enjoy a Happineſs, ſome greater, " and others leſs; but every one ſhall have this Gift, Not to deſire a greater than what he " has. And we are not to imagine that Men ſhall be there without Free-Will, becauſe " they cannot take pleaſure in Sin. For he will be ſo much the more Free, who ſhall be " delivered from the Pleaſure of Sinning, ſo as to take an unalterable Pleaſure in not Sinning " any more. ... Wherefore, all the Inhabitants of this divine City ſhall have a Will perfectly

" Free

" Free, exempt from all Evil, fill'd with all manner of Good, enjoying without intermiſſion " the Delights of an Immortal Joy, without remembrance either of his Faults or of his Miſeries, " otherwiſe than to bleſs their Deliverer for the ſame. St. Auguſtin. Tom. VII.

They have left out in this Edition the Commentaries both of Ludovicus Vives, and of Leonardus Coquæus; which exceeded the Text of St. Auguſtin by much, and which ſerved but little to underſtand it, though otherwiſe full of Learning and Erudition.

Theſe Books of St. Auguſtin are very pleaſant, for the ſurpriſing variety of the things which he hath brought in to ſerve his purpoſe, ſo as all to tend to the ſame end. Their Learning is generally admired; yet they contain nothing but what is taken out of Cicero, Varro, Seneca, and other profane Authors, whoſe Works were common enough in thoſe days; and one may ſay, that there is nothing very curious or elaborate; and in ſome places he is not exact, and he does not directly reſolve moſt of the Difficulties which he propoſes both upon the Text, and upon the Hiſtory of the Books of the Bible. He diſcuſſes very uſeleſs Queſtions, and ſometimes makes uſe of Reaſons too weak to perſuade thoſe that would doubt of what he intends to prove: yet for all that, this is a moſt excellent Book: What I moſt admire in it, is, the Management of the whole Work, the judicious Reflections which he makes upon the Opinions therein related, and the great Principles of Morality which he layeth down upon Occaſion.

At the latter end of this Volume there are ſome Letters which have ſome relation to what St. Auguſtin ſaith in the 8th. Chapter of the laſt Book of the Miracles that were done in his time. The Firſt is one of Avitus, upon the Tranſlation of a Letter written by Lucianus, concerning the Diſcovering of St. Stephen's Body. With this Tranſlation, they have added another Tract, tranſlated out of Greek by Anaſtaſius the Library-Keeper, about another Diſcovery of St. Stephen's Relicks at Conſtantinople. They have likewiſe placed their Biſhop Severus's Letter, touching the Miracles happened in the Iſland Minorca, at the appearing of St. Stephen's Relicks for the Converſion of the Jews: And two Books aſcribed to Evodius, Biſhop of Uzala, concerning St. Stephen's Miracles; which have been mentioned already.

The EIGHTH TOME.

THE Eighth Volume of St. Auguſtin's Works, contains his Writings againſt Hereticks, excepting thoſe that are againſt both the Donatiſts and the Pelagians, which make up two diſtinct Volumes. It begins with the ſmall Treatiſe of Hereſies, compoſed in the Year 428. at the Requeſt of Quodvultdeus, a Deacon, to whom it is directed. Tom. VIII

This Writing was to have had Two Parts: The Firſt, concerning the Hereſies raiſed from Jeſus Chriſt's to St. Auguſtin's time. He promiſed to examine, in the Second, what it is that makes a Man an Heretick. This Second ſhould naturally have been the Firſt; becauſe that to know the Hereſies that have broken out ſince Jeſus Chriſt's time, it is neceſſary to know what is Hereſie. But St. Auguſtin finding this Queſtion hard to be reſolved, began with the other that was more eaſie, and never undertook the Second. Therefore this Treatiſe is only a very ſuccinct Catalogue of the Names of Heretical Sects, and of their principal Errors. It beginneth with the Symonians, and endeth with the Pelagians, and containeth Eighty eight Hereſies: it is by nó means exact, and one ſhall hardly find any thing there which is not taken out of St. Epiphanius and Philaſtrius.

The Treatiſe againſt the Jews, is a Sermon in which St. Auguſtin proves by the Prophecies, That the Jewiſh Law was to have an End; That it was to be changed into a New Law; and, That God would reject the Jews, to call the Gentiles.

Theſe Two ſhort Treatiſes are follow'd by St. Auguſtin's Writings againſt the Manichees; which are ſet down in the firſt place, becauſe thoſe Hereticks oppoſed the firſt Principles of the Chriſtian Religion. The Firſt of all, is that of the Uſefulneſs of Faith, which St. Auguſtin compoſed ſometime after he was Ordained Prieſt, in the Year 391. to reclaim his Friend Honoratus from the Errors of the Manichees, wherein he had been engaged as well as St. Auguſtin; becauſe thoſe Hereticks had put him in hope, That without making uſe of Authority, they ſhould diſcover the Truth to him by the Light of Reaſon, and by this one only mean bring him to the Knowledge of God, and deliver him from all ſorts of Errors. St. Auguſtin having ſhewed the difference betwixt the Author of a Hereſie, and a Perſon ſurprized with it afterwards, doth at firſt juſtifie the Old Teſtament; ſhewing, That it agreeth exactly with the New, in the Hiſtory, Morals and Allegories; and that the Church puts ſuch a ſenſe upon it, which the Manichees themſelves cannot condemn. He overthroweth the Manichees Principle; proving, That we muſt Believe before we Know. To this end, he ſuppoſes certain Perſons having no Religion, and ſeeking to be inſtructed in the True, to be like thoſe who ſhould enquire after a Maſter to teach them Rhetorick or Philoſphy. Afterwards he obſerves, That the only Party which theſe Perſons are to embrace at firſt, is to ſide with thoſe who are commonly and generally approved: That it is great Raſhneſs in thoſe who are incapable of themſelves to judge of things, to depart from the Common Voice; to preferr the Judgment of ſome particular Men, before that of the Multitude. So that it is moſt rational, ſince one Party or other is to be embraced, to ſide with with the Catholick Church, eſpecially becauſe it forbids not thoſe that come into her to enquire after the Truth. It ſaith indeed, That we ought to Believe: But it hath an Authority ſo to do; for no Man can Believe, but he muſt be perſuaded, That He in whom he believeth, is worthy of Credit; and this makes the difference betwixt a VViſe and a Credulous Man. But had it not been better to give convincing Reaſons of Things? No; for all Men are not capable of Reaſon, and ſome things cannot be underſtood without the help of a Divine Light. It is very dangerous to follow thoſe who promiſe to make us comprehend all things; becauſe they often boaſt of knowing what they are ignorant of, and often make us believe ſo too. And very ſhameful is that Condition, for Two Reaſons: Firſt, Becauſe ſuch a Perſon takes no more Pains to learn, being falſely perſuaded of his Knowledge: And, Secondly, Becauſe that an inconſiderate readineſs to judge of a thing, is a Mark of a weak Underſtanding. Reaſon makes us apprehend things, Authority makes us believe, but Error perſuades us to affirm raſhly that which is falſe. Upon theſe Principles St. Auguſtin proves the Neceſſity of Faith, in Matters of Civil Life, as much as in Matters of VViſdom: For in the firſt place, the VVhole of Humane Society is grounded upon the Belief of ſome certain Things. As for Example: The Honour we render to our Parents, is grounded merely upon our Belief, That they are the Perſons from whom we received Life. Secondly, There is no getting of VViſdom, without conſulting with VViſe Men. But how ſhall we know theſe VViſe Men, except we truſt Others? For unleſs we are VViſe our ſelves, we can never know True VViſdom. VVherefore, we muſt Believe, to ſeek after Religion: For did we not believe that there is ſuch a thing, why ſhould we ſeek for it? All Hereticks own that we muſt believe in Jeſus Chriſt: But what Motives have we to believe Jeſus Chriſt's Authority? Are they not the ſame with thoſe that make us believe the Church? Are they not the Miracles, the Sanctity both of the Doctrine and of the Morals, the Publiſhing of the Goſpel, the Blood of Martyrs, and ſome other Proofs of this nature, which eſtabliſh the Authority of the Church no leſs than that of Jeſus Chriſt? Therefore St. Auguſtin concludes thus, "Why ſhould we make any difficulty to throw our "ſelves into the Arms of that Church which hath always maintain'd her ſelf by the Succeſſion "of Biſhops in Apoſtolick Sees, in ſpite of all the Endeavours of Hereticks condemned by her, "or by Peoples Faith, or by the Deciſions of Councils, or by the Authority of Miracles? It "is either a matchleſs Impiety, or a very indiſcreet Arrogancy, not to acknowledge her "Doctrine for a Rule of our Faith. For if the Spirit of Man cannot attain unto Wiſdom, and "ſo to Salvation, but by Faith directing our Reaſon; is it not to be Ungrateful, and neglect the "Succour proffered by God, to reſiſt ſo weighty an Authority? And truly, if any Science, "though common and eaſie, cannot be learned without a Teacher; it is Preſumption, in the "higheſt degree, to refuſe to learn the Sence of the Sacred Books from thoſe that underſtand "them; and to condemn them, without hearing what they ſay.

St. Auguſtin. Tom. VIII

After this Firſt Book againſt the Foundation of the Manichæan Hereſie, St. Auguſtin compoſed the Book Of the Two Souls, againſt one principal Error of thoſe Hereticks; aſſerting, That there were Two Souls in each Man; a Good one, of a Divine Subſtance, the cauſe of all that is Good in us; and an Evil one, of the nature of Darkneſs, proper to the Fleſh, which is the Principle of all diſorderly Motions, and of all the Evil that we doe. St. Auguſtin proves in this Book, Firſt, That the Soul being a Spirit and Life, is more perfect than Corporeal Light, which the Manichees believe to come from God. Secondly, That there is no Nature or Subſtance naturally Evil; and that Evil conſiſts only in the Abuſe of our Liberty. Some Paſſages in this Book attribute much to Free-Will; nay, there are ſome which may not agree well with the Doctrine of Grace, and of Original Sin, which St. Auguſtin correcteth in his Retractations.

There was at that time in Hippo a Prieſt, one Fortunatus, a Famous Manichee, who had ſeduc'd many Inhabitants of that City. The Catholicks engaged St. Auguſtin, in a Conference with him. What was ſaid on both Sides, was ſet down in Writing by Notaries, and that Act preſerved among St. Auguſtin's Writings. The Diſpute laſted but two Days; and the Queſtions that were diſputed about, were of Nature, and the Original of Evil. St. Auguſtin affirms, That Evil proceeds from the Abuſe of Free-Will. The Manichee pretends, That there is an Evil Nature Co-eternal with God. In the firſt day's Conference the Manichee defended himſelf well enough; but he could not Anſwer St. Auguſtin's Objections next day, and was obliged to ſay, That he would conferr about them with the Heads of his Sect. The Shame of being Confuted in that Conference, obliged him to leave Hippo. This Conference is dated the 26th. of Auguſt, under the Second Conſulſhip of Arcadius and Ruſinus, in the Year 392.

About that time, St. Auguſtin met with ſome Works of one Adimantus, who had been a Diſciple of Manichæus, written againſt the Law and the Prophets; which he affirmed to contain things contrary to the Precepts of the Goſpel and of the Apoſtles. He undertook to Anſwer the Objections of that Heretick, and to Juſtifie the Agreement betwixt thoſe Paſſages of the Old and New Teſtament which he had produced, as being contrary. This Book is of the Year 394.

St. Auguſtin having refuted the Diſciple, undertakes the Maſter, and Anſwereth the Letter which he called, The Epiſtle of Foundation: ſhewing, That Manichæus ſet forth in it nothing but Falſhods and Abſurdities. He lays down, at firſt, the Reaſons for his adhering to the Church, in theſe Terms: "Not to ſpeak (ſaith he) of that Wiſdom and Underſtanding which "few

" few Men apprehend in this Life, ſeveral Motives keep me in the Boſom of the Catholick " Church; The general Conſent of Nations and People, an Authority grounded upon Miracles, " upheld by Hope, perfected with Charity, and confirmed by Antiquity; the Succeſſion of " Biſhops from St. Peter to our time; and the Name of the Catholick Church, which is ſo " peculiar to the True Church, that though all Hereticks call themſelves Catholicks, yet when " you ask, in any Country whatſoever, where Catholicks meet, they dare not ſhew the Place " of their Aſſemblies. Theſe are powerful Motives which keep a faithful Man within the Pale " of the Church, though he be not yet arrived to a perfect underſtanding of the Truth. But " among you Manichees, that have none of theſe Reaſons either to invite or to keep me, I hear " none but vain Promiſes, to make me underſtand the Truth clearly. I confeſs, That did you " perform it, I ought to preferr an evident Truth, which none can doubt of, before all the " Motives that make me keep to the Catholick Church. But ſo long as you do only promiſe, " and not give this Knowledge, you ſhall not ſhake that Truſt which I have in the Catholick " Church, which is grounded upon ſuch powerful Reaſons and Motives." He examines afterwards the Principles contained in Manichæus's Letter; and proves, That he not only fails in the Demonſtration of what he affirmeth, but that he is contrary even to Reaſon and Common Sence. This Book is placed in the Retractations, among the Books compoſed bout the Year 397. St. Auguſtin. Tom. VIII

The moſt conſiderable of all St. Auguſtin's Works againſt the Manichees, is, his Treatiſe againſt Fauſtus, divided into Three and thirty Diſputes or Arguments; wherein he writes down the Text of this Manichee's Books, which contained moſt part of the Blaſphemies and Impieties of thoſe Hereticks, againſt both the Old and the New Teſtament: which St. Auguſtin ſtrongly and ſolidly refutes. This Work was compleated about the Year 400. and ſent to St. Jerom in 404.

The next Book contains the Acts of a Conference which St. Auguſtin had at Hippo, in December, 404. with a Manichee, one Felix. The Diſpute laſted three Days, but we have a Relation but of what happened in the two laſt Conferences. In the Concluſion of the latter, the Manichee was Converted, and Anathematized Manichæus.

In the ſame Year, St. Auguſtin compoſed a Treatiſe Of the Nature of Good, againſt the Manichees: wherein he ſhews, That God is of an Immutable Nature: That he hath created all other Beings, whether Spiritual or Corporeal, which are all good in their Nature: That Evil proceedeth only from the Abuſe of Free-Will: That the Manichees call Evil Good, and Good Evil.

The Book againſt Secundinus, is properly an Anſwer of St. Auguſtin's to that Manichee, who had exhorted him by a Letter, never to encounter with the Manichees, of whoſe Opinion himſelf had been formerly; and he had alſo urged him to return to their Sect. St. Auguſtin gives him the Reaſons of his Converſion, and diſcovers ſome of Manichæus's Errors.

The following Treatiſe is againſt a Heretick who was worſe than the Manichees, who in a diſtinct Treatiſe aſſerted, That God did not make the World, nor give the Law. St. Auguſtin refuteth him, under the Name of The Adverſary of the Law and the Prophets, in two Books bearing that Title, compoſed about the Year 420.

Oroſius having conſulted St. Auguſtin, in 415. about the Impieties of the Priſcillianiſts, and ſome Errors of Origen's Diſciples, St. Auguſtin anſwered him in a Book directed to him, entituled, Againſt the Priſcillianiſts and Origeniſts. In this ſmall Treatiſe he rejects theſe Errors: 1. That the Soul is of a Divine Nature. 2. That the Torments both of the Dæmons and of Damned Men ſhall have an end. 3. That the Reign of Jeſus Chriſt will not be Eternal. 4. That both Angels and Souls are Purified in this World. 5. That the Stars are Animated. 6. That Angels commit Sins.

The reſt of St. Auguſtin's Treatiſes contained in this Volume are againſt the Arians.

The Firſt is an Anſwer to a Diſcourſe of an Arian, containing a great many Objections againſt the Divinity of the Son of God, and of the Holy Ghoſt. This Diſcourſe was made the next Year after the Conference with Emeritus, held in 417.

Next to this Treatiſe, are, The Conference with Maximinus, and Two Books againſt that Arian Biſhop. The Conference was held at Hippo, in the Year 428. whither Maximinus was ſent by Count Sigiſvultdeus. In the Conference were ſeveral Diſcourſes on both Sides; but Maximinus having ſaid many more things than St. Auguſtin, and ſpoken laſt, he bragg'd that he had got the Victory: which obliged this Saint to recollect all that had been ſaid in the Conference, and to refute Maximinus's laſt Arguments, which he had not had time to anſwer.

St. Auſtin's Books of the Trinity, are rather a Dogmatical Treatiſe, concerning that Myſtery, than Polemical Writings againſt Hereticks; for he inſiſteth not ſo much upon refuting their Reaſons, or eſtabliſhing the Doctrines of the Church, as upon ſubtile Reaſonings, to expound and clear this Myſtery. He began them in the Year 400. and finiſhed them in 416. The Firſt Book begins with a Preface containing very important Reflections. He obſerves, at firſt, That Men have Three falſe Notions of the Divinity; that ſome conceive of God as a Corporeal Subſtance, attributing to him Corporeal Properties; that others have ſuch an Idea of him, as they have of their Souls, and of other Spirits; and ſo they aſcribe to him the like Imperfections, as Repenting, Forgetting, and Remembring,; and that others entertain ſuch a Notion of God, as may have nothing Common with a Creature; and ſo they conceive none but Chimerical Idea's of him. The Holy Scripture condeſcends to Men's Weakneſs, aſcribing often ſuch Things to God, as belong properly to Bodies, or imperfect Spirits; and ſeldom makes uſe of Terms peculiar to God, becauſe it is very difficult to know, in this Life, the Subſtance, or Eſſence of the divine Nature perfectly. But becauſe ſome Perſons deſire to be informed about this Matter, and ask how Three divine Perſons make one and the ſame Eſſence, he undertakes two things in this Work: Firſt, To ſhew, That the Scripture teaches us ſuch Doctrine; and then to raiſe the Mind, as far as it is capable in this Life, to the knowledge of this Myſtery.

St. Auguſtin. Tom. VIII

He proves the Firſt Point in the firſt Seven Books.

In the Firſt, he eſtabliſhes, by Paſſages of Scripture, the Unity, and the Equality of the Three Divine Perſons; and explains the principal Places that were urged by the Arians, againſt the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt. The main Rule which he makes uſe of, is That Jeſus Chriſt being one only Perſon, made up of Two Natures, what is ſaid of the humane Nature ſhould be diſtinguiſhed from that which is ſpoken of the Divine.

In the Second, he confirmeth the former Rule, and layeth down another. That the Scripture ſpeaks things of the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, which are not ſpoken of the Father, to ſhew, That they receive their Eſſence from the Father: As when tis ſaid, That the Son doth nothing of himſelf; that he receiveth Life from the Father. This, ſaith St. Auguſtin, doth not ſhew, That the Son is of a different Nature from the Father, but only, that the Son receiveth his Subſtance from the Father. And by this Rule, he explains the miſſion of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. He ſpeaks alſo of Apparitions; wherein he pretends, That not one ſingle Perſon, but the whole Trinity, hath either ſpoken, or operated.

This laſt Queſtion is the Subject of his Third Book; wherein he examines, Whether God, in his Apparitions, formed Creatures to make himſelf known unto Men by them; or, Whether theſe Apparitions were by the Miniſtry of Angels, who made uſe of Bodies to accompliſh them. He concludes, in favour of the latter Opinion, rejecting the former, which had been held by all the Fathers before him.

The Fourth is about Chriſt's Incarnation, whereby God hath manifeſted how much he loved us. The Word was made Fleſh, to deliver us from the Darkneſs wherein we lay, to purifie our Hearts, and Minds. His Death delivered us from Two kinds of Death; from that of the Body, by reſtoring Immortality to us; and from that of the Soul, by waſhing us from our Sins. Here he makes a Digreſſion, concerning the perfection of the Number Six, which is neither very ſolid, nor much to the Purpoſe. He diſcourſes afterwards of the wonderful Effects of Chriſt's Mediation; and ſhews, at laſt, That the Humiliation of the Son of God, by his Incarnation, hinders him not from being equal with his Father, according to the Divine Nature.

In the Fifth Book, He refutes the Sophiſms of Hereticks againſt the Myſtery of the Trinity.

In the Sixth, He conſiders in what ſence the Son is called the Wiſdom and Power of the Father: Whether the Father be Wiſe of himſelf; or, Whether he is only the Father of Wiſdom. He puts off the Deciſion of that Queſtion, and treats again of the Unity and Equality of the Father, of the Son, and of the H. Ghoſt.

In the Seventh Book he reſolves the Queſtion propoſed in the Sixth, ſhewing that the Father is not only the Father of Power and of Wiſdom, but that he hath in himſelf both Power and Wiſdom; and that all the Three Perſons of the Trinity are Wiſe and Powerful by the ſame Power and Wiſdom, becauſe they have but one Godhead. Afterwards he explains in what ſence God is ſaid to have but one Eſſence and Three Perſons; or, according to the Greeks, three Hypoſtaſes.

Having proved in the Eighth Book that the Three Perſons together are not greater than any one alone, he enters upon the Second Part of his Work by exhorting Men to raiſe up themſelves to the Knowledge of God, thro' Charity, wherein he finds a kind of Trinity.

In the Ninth, He endeavoureth to find a Trinity in Man, who was created after the Image of God; he findeth there a Spirit, a Knowledge of himſelf, and a Love wherewith he loves himſelf: theſe three Things are equal among themſelves, and make but one Eſſence. This is according to S. Auguſtin, an Image of the Trinity. Memory, Underſtanding, and Will, furniſh him with another, which he believes is clearer and more like. He explains it in the Tenth Book. He finds ſome reſemblances even in the outward Man, in the inward Senſes, in Knowledge and Wiſdom: and theſe are the Subjects of the following Books.

He concludeth at laſt, in the Fifteenth Book, That though we have here below ſeveral Repreſentations of the Trinity, yet we ſhould not ſeek for it, but in immutable and eternal Things, and that we cannot ſee it in this Life, but by a Figure, and Enigmatically: And thus he pretends, That we have an Idea of the Generation of the Word, by the production of the Word of our Underſtanding, and an Idea of the proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt, by the Love that proceeds from the Will. But he confeſſeth, That theſe Notions are very imperfect; and that there is an infinite Difference betwixt theſe Compariſons, and the Myſtery of the Trinity.

The Treatiſe of the Five Hereſies, or rather the Sermon preached againſt Five ſorts of Enemies to the Chriſtians, Heathens, Jews, Manichees, Sabellians, and Arians, which the Louvain Doctors had aſcribed to St. Auguſtin, though Eraſmus doubted of it, is thrown in this Edition, amongſt the ſuppoſititious Treatiſes. And this was done with a great deal of Reaſon; for for the Stile thereof is very different from St. Auguſtin's: And the Author of that Sermon preached it, when Arianiſm was the predominant Religion in Africa, as appears by the 6th. and 7th. Chapters; which ſhews, That St. Auguſtin is not the Author of it, but ſome other African who lived at the time of the Vandal's Perſecution. The Sermon of the Creed againſt the Heathens, Jews, and Arians, is alſo of the ſame time, and probably of the ſame Author. St. Auguſtin. Tom. VIII.

The Suit betwixt the Church, and the Synagogue, is the Work of ſome Lawyer, who try'd to Exerciſe himſelf, in making the Church to condemn the Synagogue, after the ſame manner that a Judge condemns a Malefactor.

The Book of Faith, againſt the Manichees, is reſtor'd to Evodius of Uzalá, upon the Authority of ancient Manuſcripts, and the different Stile.

The following Memorial, of the manner of admitting the Manichees, that were converted into the Church, is very Ancient; and, in all probability, it is an Order of ſome Council of Africa.

The Book of the Unity of the Trinity, is here reſtored to Vigilius Tapſenſis, the true Author, who citeth it himſelf in the Preface to his Books, againſt Varimadus, to whom it is attributed in an ancient Copy.

Both the Books of the Incarnation of the Word, are taken, as it is obſerved, out of the Tranſlation of Origen's Principles by Ruſinus.

The Treatiſe of the Unity, and Trinity of God, is made up of Extracts out of ſeveral Paſſages of St. Auguſtin's Works, both Genuine, and Spurious.

The Book of the Eſſence of the Divinity, which is likewiſe attributed to St. Ambroſe, St. Jerom, St. Anſelm, and Bonaventure, is partly taken out of a Book, written by St. Eucherius.

The Dialogue of the Unity of the Holy Trinity, was found in Two Manuſcripts, Eight Hundred Years old; in one of them it is aſcribed to St. Auguſtin, yet it is clearly written in a different Stile from his.

The Book of Eccleſiaſtical Maxims, ought to be quite expunged out of St. Auguſtin's Works, to which it hath no relation; yet it is quoted under that Holy Father's Name, by the Maſter of the Sentences; and it beareth his Name in ſeveral Manuſcripts. Trithemius aſcribes it to Alcuinus; and Gratian citeth it under the Name of Paterus: But the vulgar Opinion is, That Gennadius writ it, to whom it is attributed by Algerus, Walafridus Strabo, the Maſter of the Sentences, and Thomas Aquinas in ſeveral Places. It is likewiſe cited, under his Name, in ſeveral MSS. This Book contains an Abridgment of the principal Articles of Religion. It is evident, That the Author thereof was not of St. Auguſtin's Opinion, concerning Grace, and Free-Will. They have left out ſome Articles which had been inſerted after the 21ſt. and taken out of St. Cœleſtine's Epiſtles to the Biſhops of Gaul, of the Council of Carthage, and that of Orange.

The NINTH TOME.

THE Ninth Volume of St. Auguſtin's Works, containeth his Treatiſes againſt the Donatiſts. Tom. IX.

The Firſt is a Hymn which St. Auguſtin compoſed in vulgar, and popular Terms, to teach the moſt unlearned the State of the Queſtion betwixt the Catholicks, and the Donatiſts, and to exhort theſe to a Re-union with the Catholicks. This Writing, which conſiſts but of Two Leaves, is proper, as St. Auguſtin himſelf obſerves, for none but very ordinary People.

In 393. he wrote a Book againſt Donatus his Epiſtle; and in 398. Two Books againſt the Donatiſts: But both theſe Treatiſes are loſt.

We are therefore to begin St. Auguſtin's VVorks againſt the Donatiſts, from the Three Books againſt the Epiſtle of Parmenianus, who ſucceeded Donatus in the See of Carthage. There he refutes the Letter which that Schiſmatick wrote to Tychonius, wherein he accuſed the whole Church of being defiled, for communicating with Perſons that were guilty of ſeveral Crimes. St. Auguſtin having proved, That Cæcilian, and the greateſt part of the others, who were accuſed by the Donatiſts, had been declared Innocent; addeth, That though the Crimes, whereof they accuſed particular Men, were proved, yet the Church would ſtill be the true Church, tho' ſhe had not cut them off from her Communion becauſe ſhe is made up of good and bad Men, and that even theſe may be tolerated for Peace ſake. Theſe Books were compos'd about the Year 400. We muſt not forget to obſerve, That there is in this Edition, chap. 3d. of the Firſt Book, a very important Correction of a Paſſage which had much perplexed Hiſtorians. S. Auguſtin ſpeaks there of the Roman Council which condemned the Donatiſts: and they made him ſay in the common Editions, and in moſt Manuſcripts, that this Council conſiſted of Two Hundred Biſhops. Uſque adeo dementes ſunt homines, ut ducentos judices, apud quos victi ſunt, victis litigatoribus credat: and becauſe this was not ſence, they added againſt the Authority of the MSS. eſſe poſtponendos. It being certain that S. Auguſtin ſpeaketh in this Place of the Council of Rome, and that there met but 19 Biſhops; they thought that 19 were to be put inſtead of 200. But the reſtoration made here upon the Credit of the Vatican Manuſcript, reſolves all the Difficulty, and clears the Sence, without adding any thing. Neither 19 nor 200, are mentioned

St. Auguſtin. Tome IX.

tioned in the Text. Thus it runs, Uſque adeo dementes ſunt homines, ut CONTRA judices vitiis litigatoribus credat. It appears at the firſt ſight, that this is the true Sence, which all the Conjectures of the Learned could not find out. They took the Contra, made ſhort with Two C.C. for the Cypher of 200, and they had writ ducentos inſtead of this Cypher at all Adventures; and becauſe the Text was then not Sence, the Louvain Doctors added Eſſe Poſtponendos after Credat. One ſingle Manuſcript diſcovers preſently thoſe Miſtakes, and gives the true Sence. And now let Men ſay, That there is no need of comparing the Authors to be publiſhed with ancient Manuſcripts. But to return to our Subject.

The Seven Books Of Baptiſm were compoſed by St. Auguſtin at the ſame time. He undertakes there to refute the Donatiſts, who uſed St. Cyprian's Authority, to defend their Opinion concerning the Nullity of Baptiſm adminiſtred by Hereticks. He ſhews, That if that Saint ſeems to favour them in that Point, yet his Practice and Doctrine condemn'd their Separation. He refutes alſo the Reaſons which that Saint and his Collegues urged to prove, That thoſe were to be re-baptized, who had been baptized by Hereticks. There he handleth ſeveral Queſtions touching the Neceſſity, Validity, Effect, and other Circumſtances of Baptiſm.

After the Books Of Baptiſm, St. Auguſtin placeth a Treatiſe which he compoſed againſt a certain Book brought by Centurius from the Donatiſts. But that Diſcourſe is loſt: And ſo immediately after the Books of Baptiſm, follow Three Books againſt a Letter of Petilianus Biſhop of the Donatiſts at Cirta. The Firſt of theſe Books is written in the form of a Letter to the Church: Therein he refutes the Firſt Part of Petilianus's Letter. But having received afterwards the whole Letter, he thought himſelf obliged to anſwer every Propoſition by it ſelf. Whil'ſt this was doing, Petilianus having ſeen the Letter that St. Auguſtin writ at firſt, returned an Anſwer; to which, St. Auguſtin oppoſed a Third Book, wherein without inſiſting upon Petilianus's reproachful Language, he diſcovers the weakneſs of the Anſwers that he brought in defence of his Party. The Firſt of theſe Books, which is rather a Letter than a Book, was compoſed about the Year 400. both the others are of 402.

The next Book is likewiſe written againſt Petilianus, and is intituled in the Manuſcripts, A Letter from St. Auguſtin to the Catholicks concerning the Sect of the Donatiſts: And Poſſidius ſeems to have mention'd it under this Title, in the Third Article of his Index. It is likewiſe cited under this Title, and aſcribed to St. Auguſtin in the Fifth Council, Collat. 5. Yet St. Auguſtin does not mention it in his Retractations. It may be anſwered, That this Book being written in the form of a Letter, he reſerved to ſpeak of it in the other part of his Retractations, which was to contain his Sermons and Letters. And yet we ſee that St. Auguſtin ſpeaks of Dogmatical Treatiſes that were long, though compoſed in the form of Letters, in this Part; ſo that it is unlikely that he ſhould have forgot to mention this, when he ſpoke of his other Letters againſt Petilianus. The Benedictines have made ſome other Obſervations upon this Treatiſe, which may make us doubt whether it is St. Auguſtin's, or no. They obſerve, That the Salutation in the beginning, Salus quæ in Chriſto eſt, is extraordinary, and that St. Auguſtin never uſed it. They find improper forms of Speech, Tranſitions, Figures and Expreſſions, not very elegant, which do not agree to St. Auguſtin's Stile. Nay, beſides they take notice of a Point of Doctrine different from St. Auguſtin's. For the Author of this Book teaches in the 13th. Chapter, That the Separation of the Ten Tribes from Judah, was no Hereſie; but St. Auguſtin affirms in the 23d. Epiſtle, and in his Firſt Book againſt Creſconius, Chapter 31ſt. That the Samaritans made a Schiſm, a Sect, and an Hereſie. And laſtly, They have Collected ſome Paſſages of Scripture which are not of that Tranſlation, which St. Auguſtin uſes in other places. They add, That the Author of this Book, Chapter 24th. doubts whether the Water that iſſued out of our Saviour's Side, was a figure of Baptiſm; which St. Auguſtin ſets down for a certain Truth in ſeveral places of his Writings.

Theſe Objections are not unanſwerable: St. Auguſtin hath not mention'd all his Works in his Retractations, and particularly, thoſe that are in the form of Letters. We have already taken notice of ſome that he has omitted. This is found in Poſſidius's Catalogue, and the Author declares in the beginning, That he had written already againſt Petilianus's Letter; The Stile, indeed, is not ſo Elegant as of ſome other of St. Auguſtin's Works; but it is no wonder, becauſe it is a Letter that was to be ſeen and underſtood by all Mankind. For the ſame reaſon, the Hymn againſt the Donatiſts might be rejected, which is much flatter, and containing more barbarous Expreſſions. The Salutation agrees very well to the Subject, and is not unworthy of St. Auguſtin: And if he never uſed it in other places, it doth not follow that he ſhould forbear it in this. When St. Auguſtin reckoned the Samaritans among the Heretical Jews, he did not ſpeak of the ancient Inhabitants of Samaria, immediately after the diviſion of the Tribes, but of the later Samaritans, who were real Hereticks among the Jews. Laſtly, It is no extraordinary thing for St. Auguſtin to cite ſome places of Scripture in other terms than he had uſed in other places; or that he ſhould doubt here of ſome things, whereof he ſpeaks more affirmatively at other times.

Though theſe Anſwers ſhould not be ſufficient to remove all ſuſpicion, yet it is certain, That this Book was written in St. Auguſtin's time; and all that can be ſaid is, That it might have been drawn up by ſome of his Friends, and directed in his Name to the Donatiſts. It was written in 402. after the Second Book againſt Petilianus, and before the Third; It is a new Challenge which he ſendeth to this Biſhop to defend his own Party, and to ſhew that the true

Church

Church is on his side. He describes the Marks of the true Church, and proves, That they do not agree with the Donatists Party, but with that of the Catholicks; and then answereth those Passages which the Donatists urged for themselves, and the Accusations which they formed against the Church. St. Augustin. Tom. IX.

One Cresconius, a Grammarian, of the Donatists Party, undertook to defend Petilianus against St. Augustin's first Writing. As soon as he saw his Letter, he refuted it in three Books, and retorted upon him all his Arguments, by retorting in a Fourth Book the business of the Maximianists. These Books were written about the Year 406.

Here should have been placed Three other Treatises against the Donatists, which he mentions in his Retractations, but they are lost. These were, A Book of Proofs and Testimonies against the Donatists; A Treatise against a Donatist; And an Advice to the Donatists about the Business of the Maximianists.

The Book of one Baptism, against Petilianus, was written after the Conference at Carthage. The Principal Question treated of by St. Augustin, is concerning the Validity of Baptism administred by Hereticks.

St. Augustin being willing to Publish an Account of the Conference of Carthage, wrote a Breviary of what was said in the three Days Conference, in 412.

He wrote a Book likewise directed to the Donatists, with the same Design; wherein he makes several Reflections upon the Conference of Carthage, that he might perfectly undeceive that Party, and shew that they were seduc'd and deceived by their Bishops. He likewise answereth their Cavils against the Judgment of Marcellinus. This Book is of the Year 413.

The Treatise to Emeritus a Donatist Bishop, who was one of the principal Defenders of that Party in the Conference at Carthage, is lost. St. Augustin had collected there the main Points, wherein they had been baffled, as he says, in the 49th. Chapter of the Second Book of his Retractations. After this he went to Cæsarea, a City of Mauritania, where he met with Emeritus, before whom he Preached a Sermon to perswade him to reconcile himself to the Church; but not prevailing by this means, he held a Conference with him, about those things which had been done in the Conference at Carthage; and then pressed him so hard upon the Quarrel of the Maximianists, that Emeritus had nothing to say: This Conference was held in the presence of the Bishops, Clergy, and People, the 20th. of September 413. or 418. for the Manuscripts do not well agree about the Consul's Names.

At last, Gaudentius one of the Seven Donatist Bishops who defended their Party in the Conference at Carthage, being pressed by the Threatnings of Dulcitius, writ two Letters, which St. Augustin answers in his First Book against this Donatist Bishop; which is particularly to justifie the severity exercised towards them. Gaudentius willing to answer something, wrote a Discourse; wherein, without meddling with the Contest betwixt them, he justified his Party, and calumniated the Church. St. Augustin answereth this Treatise in the Second Book. Both these Books of St. Augustin are of the Year 420.

There is a Sermon attributed to St. Augustin, concerning one Rusticianus, a Sub-deacon, who was Re-baptized by the Donatists, and then Ordained Deacon; but this Discourse does not agree to St. Augustin, as it is proved in the Preface. This Volume ends with a Catalogue of St. Augustin's Works against the Donatists, which are in the other Volumes of St. Augustin's Works. We have not spoken particularly of the Matters handled by St. Augustin, in every Book against the Donatists; because he commonly repeateth the same Arguments, and so we should have been obliged to say often the same things, and for which Reason it was put off to this place; that so I might give an Abridgment of his Doctrine, and a Breviary of his chief Reasons all at once.

It has been observ'd already, That the Donatists began their Schism by a Separation of some African Bishops, who accused Cecilian of several Crimes, whereof they had been convicted themselves. Though they had been condemned in the Council of Rome, in that of Arles, and at last by Constantine's Judgment, yet they remained firm to their own Opinions, and would by no means be reconciled to the Church. Their Party also was much strengthned by the great number of Bishops whom they ordained, almost in every Church of Africa, and by the Multitudes of People whom they drew after them: So that in St. Augustin's time, their Party was very near as strong in Africa, as that of the Catholicks. But they held no Communion with all the other Churches in the World, which acknowledged Cecilian, his Successors, and those of that Party, for the true Church.

The Donatists in their own defence affirm'd, That Cecilian, Felix of Aptungis, who ordained him, Miltiades that absolved him, and several others of his Brethren, having been convicted of certain Crimes, ought to be deposed and expelled out of the Church; That their Crime made them cease to be Members of the Church, which ought to be pure and without blemish; That as many as defended them and had Communicated with them, were become Accessaries to their Crime by approving it; and that so, not only the Churches of Africa, but even all the other Churches in the World, which held Communion with the Churches of Cecilian's Party, having been defiled, ceased to be Parts of the true Church of Jesus Christ, that was then reduced to the small number of those who would not partake with Prevaricators; but kept themselves in the Primitive Purity. Besides this, They charged the Church with another great Crime, as they esteemed it; which was, That they made Application to the Emperor's Authority to Persecute their Party; and that they cauſed ſeveral Violences to be exerciſed againſt them. Now, they perſiſting in the Opinion of St. Cyprian, and of the ancient Biſhops of Africa; who held, That Baptiſm by Hereticks and Schiſmaticks was invalid, and ought to be renew'd; a neceſſary Conſequence of their Principles, was the Rebaptizing of the Catholicks that came over to their Party.

St. Auguſtin. Tom. IX.

Theſe are the Grounds on which the Schiſm of the Donatiſts ſtood.

There were two ways to deal with them; either by denying the Matter of Fact, or by oppoſing the Matter of Right: Thoſe who firſt writ againſt the Donatiſts, inſiſted moſt upon the Matter of Fact; that is, The Juſtification of Cæcilian, Felix of Aptungis, and the reſt. Neither doth St. Auguſtin omit this; for he often proves Cæcilian's Innocency, by the Judgments given in his behalf; Firſt, At Rome, by Pope Miltiades, and other Biſhops; Secondly, In the Council of Arles; and at laſt, By the Judgment of Conſtantine. He adds, as an abſolute Juſtification, the conſent of all the Churches in the World, which had approved and followed the Judgment of thoſe Councils. He likewiſe produces the Acts that were made to juſtifie Felix of Aptungis: He defends Miltiades and Hoſius, againſt the Calumnies laid upon them. And ſhews at laſt, That the Donatiſts had no Proofs of what they alledged againſt the Catholick Biſhops. But he doth not think this to be the main Point, and therefore he paſſes to the Matter of Right, and maintains, That though Cæcilian, and the reſt of his Brethren, had been guilty of the Crimes laid to their Charge; yet that was not a ſufficient Ground for a Separation from the Church; and that the Church did not ceaſe to be the Church, becauſe it Communicated with wicked Men, ſince either ſhe did not know them; or elſe, ſhe bore with them to preſerve Peace: which brings him to that great Queſtion, Whether the Church here below is made up only of Saints and Righteous Men, or compoſed of Good and Bad. St. Auguſtin affirms, That there was always in the Church Chaff and Corn; that is, both good and wicked Men; and that ſuch will be to the Day of Judgment, which ſhall divide the good from the bad; That ſometimes the number of the latter exceeds that of the former; That many cannot be driven out of the Church, becauſe they are not known, and becauſe it is convenient to tolerate ſome for quietneſs ſake, to prevent a Schiſm which might be occaſioned by cutting off from the Communion thoſe Perſons who might draw along with them ſeveral of the Faithful; That it is great raſhneſs to condemn all the Churches in the World, for the Crime of one or two; That the Catholick Church ought to be diffuſed over the whole Earth, and not confined to a ſmall part of the World, as in a Corner of Africa. Here St. Auguſtin triumphs over his Adverſaries, proving by Prophecies, and other Paſſages both of the Old and New Teſtament, That the Catholick Church was to have a conſiderable Extent.

Theſe are properly the main Points in Controverſie betwixt the Church and the Donatiſts; but there are other Secundary Queſtions.

The Firſt, is concerning the Perſecutions, which the Donatiſts imputed to the Church as a Crime. St. Auguſtin defends the Church very Modeſtly, either by diſapproving ſuch Violences, or by ſhewing that it was lawful to make uſe of the Imperial Laws, and of ſome ſort of Severity to bring the Donatiſts back to the boſom of the Church. He chargeth them likewiſe with the ſame things; objecting the Cruelties, Violencies, Sacrileges and Murders committed by thoſe of their Party called Circumcellians, and authorized thereunto by Optatus Gildonianus.

The other acceſſary Queſtion, which St. Auguſtin looks upon as a principal one, is about the Validity of the Baptiſm of Hereticks. St. Auguſtin needed only to prove that his Party was the true Church, and ſo Condemn by a neceſſary Conſequence the Donatiſts, for Rebaptizing thoſe that had been baptized before by Catholicks, ſince it was agreed on both ſides, that the Baptiſm of the true Church was valid. But St. Auguſtin undertook beſides, to prove the validity of the Baptiſm of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks; And that though his Party were not the Church, yet the Donatiſts were not to baptize them a ſecond time. He confeſſes, That St. Cyprian, and moſt of the African Biſhops in his time were of a contrary opinion; That Agrippinus his Predeceſſor, had appointed Hereticks to be Rebaptized; That St. Cyprian and the Councils held in Africa at that time, confirmed Agrippinus's Decree; That this Queſtion remained long undecided, or rather variouſly decided in divers places. But that at laſt the thing was decided in a Plenary Council of the whole Church, (in all likelihood he means that of Arles) and that after ſuch Determination, it was not permitted to doubt, becauſe the Provincial or National Councils muſt give place to the Authority of Plenary Councils. That St. Cyprian was to be excuſed for not taking the right ſide of ſo hard a Queſtion, which was not yet cleared or decided, and ſo much the rather, becauſe he defended his own Opinion without making a Schiſm, and with the Spirit of Peace and Unity: However, That the Letters and Writings of the Saints were not to be rely'd upon, as the Apoſtles Epiſtles, and the other Books of the Holy Scripture.

Now to explain St. Auguſtin's Opinion touching Baptiſm more particularly, we are to obſerve as he doth, That Baptiſm may be ſaid to be of two ſorts; The one adminiſtred in the Name of the Trinity, that is, by invoking of the Trinity; and the other performed without naming the Three Divine Perſons. The latter, St. Auguſtin confeſſes to be null; but affirms the other to be valid, whoſoever he be that adminiſters it. So that it matters not who baptizeth, provided that Baptiſm be in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. Two things are likewiſe to be diſtinguiſhed in Baptiſm, the Sacrament, and the Effect of the Sacrament: The Sacrament is found in thoſe that are baptized by Hereticks; but becauſe they have not Faith, they are deprived of the Effect: For, that Baptiſm may be complete, both as a Sacrament,

Sacrament, and as to its Effect, the Sacrament muſt be intire; that is, the Perſon muſt be baptized outwardly in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, and he that receives muſt believe and be converted. The Sacrament is often found without Faith, and Faith without the Sacrament. Children have the Sacrament without Faith. The good Thief had Faith without the Sacrament. God ſupplies in Children the Faith they want, and he ſupplied in the good Thief the Sacrament which he could not receive. But when either of theſe is wanting, by the Man's own Fault, he cannot be excuſed; and he receiveth not the Effect of Baptiſm. When the Sacrament is found without Faith, and without Converſion, it is not neceſſary to be reiterated: It is ſufficient only to ſupply what is wanting; as when one is already converted, it is enough to receive the Sacrament. The difference lieth in this, That the Adult cannot be ſaved without Faith and Converſion, though they may be ſaved without the Sacrament, if ſo be that they do not want it through Contempt or Neglect, but becauſe they lay under an impoſſibility of receiving it. St. Auguſtin. Tom IX.

From theſe Principles, St. Auguſtin draws the following Concluſions: 1. That Baptiſm conferred by Hereticks in the Name of the Trinity, is good and valid as it is a Sacrament, and ought not to be repeated. 2. That neither the Miniſter's Faith, as to Religion, nor his Sanctity avail any thing to the Validity of Baptiſm. 3. That it is God, and not the Miniſter who gives the Holy Spirit, and worketh the Remiſſion of Sins. 4. That Baptiſm produces this Effect, but in them alone that are well-diſpoſed by Faith and Converſion of the Heart. 5. That the Prayers of the Church, which conſiſts of Saints and Righteous Men; ſupplies the Actual Faith, which Children cannot have. 6. That the Adult who have Faith and are Converted, may be ſaved without actual receiving of the Sacrament, but not without the Sacramental Vow.

As for ſome other Queſtions which might be made about Baptiſm adminiſtred by Infidels, or ſome impious Perſons that are Excommunicated or in jeſt. St. Auguſtin ſaith, in the Seventh Book of Baptiſm, Chap. 53d. thus, "It is asked, ſaith he, whether that Baptiſm is to be approved, which is adminiſtred by an unbaptized Perſon, who out of Curioſity hath learned the way of baptizing among Chriſtians? It is asked further, Whether it be neceſſary for the Validity of Baptiſm that he, who either adminiſters or receives it, be ſincere? And if they ſhould be only in jeſt, Whether Baptiſm ought to be adminiſtred again in the Church? Whether Baptiſm conferred in Deriſion, as that would be, which ſhould be adminiſtred by a Comedian, might be accounted Valid? Whether it is more Criminal to receive Baptiſm in jeſt in the Church, or to receive it with the ſame Spirit, in Hereſie or Schiſm? Whether Baptiſm adminiſtred by an Actor, may become Valid, when he that receives it is well-diſpoſed.

"St. Auguſtin anſwers to theſe and ſuch-like Queſtions, That the ſecureſt way is to return no Anſwer to Queſtions that never were decided in any Council, General, or National. But he adds, Should any man, meeting with me at ſuch Council, ask my Advice about theſe Queſtions, and that it were my turn to declare my Opinion, having not heard other Mens Opinions, which I might preferr before mine own, and if I perceiv'd in my ſelf the ſame Diſpoſitions that I am now in, I ſhould without difficulty acknowledge, That they all receive Baptiſm truly in any place whatſoever, and by whomſoever adminiſtred, if on their part they receive it with Faith, and with Sincerity. I am apt alſo to believe, That ſuch as receive Baptiſm in the Church, or in what is ſuppoſed to be the Church, are truly baptized as to the Sacramental part of the Action whatſoever be their intention. But as for Baptiſm adminiſtred and received out of the Church, in Raillery, Contempt, and to make Sport; I could not approve the ſame without a Revelation.

Theſe are St. Auguſtin's Opinions concerning the Validity or Invalidity of Baptiſm. As to the Anſwers which he makes to the Arguments of St. Cyprian, and the other Biſhops of his Opinion, they are grounded for the moſt part upon the Compariſon between concealed Hereticks and Evil Miniſters, with known Hereticks and Schiſmaticks. For ſince the Baptiſm of the former is Valid and not to be renewed; why ſhould not the ſame thing be ſaid of the latter, ſince all the Reaſons that are alledged for the nullity of the Baptiſm of Hereticks may alſo belong to Evil Miniſters? It is ſaid, for example, That to give the Holy Ghoſt one muſt have it; That Hereticks have it not; and conſequently that they cannot give it. Why may we not reaſon after the ſame manner concerning Baptiſm conferred by concealed Hereticks, or by wicked Prieſts? Have they the Holy Ghoſt to give? Thus St. Auguſtin overthrows the Reaſons and Teſtimonies brought in by St. Cyprian and his Collegues againſt the Validity of the Baptiſm of Hereticks, by ſhewing, That whilſt they prove too much, they prove nothing.

But his great Argument to deſtroy the Donatiſts, which he particularly inſiſteth upon in his laſt Book againſt Creſconius, is an Argument taken from their Conduct in a Schiſm that was riſen up amongſt themſelves, betwixt Maximianus, upheld by ſome other Biſhops of their Sect, and Primianus another Biſhop of their Party at Carthage; They accuſed one another of ſeveral Crimes, and condemned one another; but Primianus's Party being the ſtronger, prevailed and held a Plenary Council at Bagais, wherein they condemned Maximianus, and his Adherents, in very reproachful terms, and got this Judgment to be confirmed by the Emperor's Letters. Now, according to the Donatiſts Principles, Perſons thus Condemned were out of the Church; all that Communicated with them were out of the Church; all whom they baptized, were to be baptized again. And yet the Primianiſts behaved themſelves quite otherwiſe; for they kept

Communion

St. Auguſtin. Tom. IX. Communion with ſome of the condemned Biſhops, and owned them for lawful Biſhops; they acknowledged thoſe that were Baptized by the Maximianiſts, to be truly Baptized; and they admitted into their Communion thoſe that were of the Maximianiſts Party. St. Auguſtin compares this their Conduct, with their Behaviour towards the Scripture and the Univerſal Church; and by that Argument convinceth them, That it was only Prejudice and Obſtinacy which kept them in their Separation from the Chruch.

The Supplement that is added to this Ninth Volume, contains not only the Book againſt Fulgentius the Donatiſt, falſely attributed to St. Auguſtin, concerning which the Cenſure of the Louvain Doctors, and of Vindingus, ſet before it, may be conſulted; but alſo Extracts from ancient Pieces concerning the Hiſtory of the Donatiſts, taken out of Optatus, Euſebius, St. Auguſtin, the Conference at Carthage, the Councils of Carthage, and the Imperial Laws againſt the Donatiſts. And that all that St. Auguſtin writ againſt the Donatiſts might be publiſhed together, they copied out what he ſaid in the Conference of Carthage. This Collection is the more uſeful, becauſe there are conſiderable Reſtitutions of ſeveral Paſſages of Optatus, from a Manuſcript in the Library at St. Germains des Prez. Here is one of the principal. There is a Paſſage in the Firſt Book of Optatus, where it is ſaid, That Eunomius and Olympius were ſent into Africk to Ordain a Biſhop, and to Degrade Cæcilian and Optatus: Ut remotis duobus unum ordinarent! This Paſſage obliged Albaſpinæus to affirm, That Donatus of Caſæ Nigræ had been Biſhop of Carthage. He likewiſe draws from it great Advantages in favour of the Church of Rome: yet this Period is not in the St. Germains Copy, and it ſignifies nothing either for that which goes before, or for that which comes after. If we read the Paſſage, we may judge: Tunc duo Epiſcopi ad Africam miſſi ſunt, Eunomius, & Olympius. Venerunt, & apud Carthaginem fuerunt per dies quadraginta, vel quinquaginta, ut pronunciarent ubi eſſet Catholica. Hoc ſeditioſa pars Donati fieri paſſa non eſt. This Place is clear and plain: whereas, if this Period be inſerted, Ut remotis duobus unum ordinarent, the ſence is alter'd, and it will be contradictory. There is likewiſe, ſome Lines before, another Reſtitution, which is confirmed by St. Auguſtin's Teſtimony, in the Conference at Carthage. Donatus petiit, ut ei reverti licuiſſet, & nec ad Carthaginem accederet. Whereas they read before, Ut ei reverti Carthaginem contingeret. In the Extract out of the Third Book of Optatus, they diſtinguiſh Three Perſecutions againſt the Donatiſts; and the Governors are named by whoſe Orders they were raiſed. This is not to be found in the ordinary Editions of Optatus. I ſhall not mention ſeveral other Corrections, which may make us wiſh that a new entire Edition of this Author were undertaken.

The TENTH TOME.

Tom. X. THE Tenth Volume, not yet Printed, is intended for the Books which St. Auguſtin compoſed againſt the Pelagians.

The Three Books Of Merits and Remiſſion of Sins, wherein he treats of Infant-Baptiſm, directed to Marcellinus, ought to be ſet in the firſt place; for till then he had not undertaken the Pelagians, except in his Sermons, or in Converſation, (as he takes notice in his Retractations.) He writ theſe in the Year 412. in Anſwer to the Pelagians Queſtions which Count Marcellinus had ſent to him at Carthage. He ſpeaks there particularly of Infant-Baptiſm, as neceſſary to remit Original Sin; and of the neceſſity of the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, which juſtifies us, or maketh us righteous; though whil'ſt we are in this Life, we cannot ſo perfectly accompliſh God's Law, but that we are obliged to ſay in our daily Prayers, Forgive us our Sins. Theſe are the principal Truths oppoſed by the Pelagians. St. Auguſtin refutes them without naming the Authors, and ſpeaks of Pelagius in good Terms; becauſe ſeveral Perſons had a great Eſteem for his Vertue: And he had not yet ſet forth his Doctrine in his own Name, being contented to propoſe it in other Mens Names, in his Commentaries upon St. Paul. St. Auguſtin, in the laſt Book, refutes the Explications which he had given of thoſe Paſſages of the Apoſtle that ſpeak of Original Sin.

Count Marcellinus having received theſe Three Books from St. Auguſtin, ſent him word back again, That he had found a Paſſage which puzzl'd him; St. Auguſtin had ſaid, That with the help of Grace, Man might live without Sin; though none was yet arrived to that Perfection in this Life, and that none would ever arrive to it. Marcellinus asked St. Auguſtin how he could affirm this to be poſſible, if there were no Examples of it. To ſatisfie him about that Queſtion, St. Auguſtin wrote the Book Of the Spirit and of the Letter: Yet he doth not examine this Queſtion to the bottom; but having anſwered in very few words, That God can do many things which he doth not, he boldly attacks thoſe who durſt affirm, That a Man may fulfil the Commandments, be Juſt and Vertuous, without the ſuccour of Chriſt's Grace. He grounds theſe Reaſonings upon that place of St. Paul, The letter killeth, but the ſpirit giveth life. By the Letter, he underſtandeth the Law and the Commandments, which are unprofitable without the help of Grace, which is the Spring of Faith, of Righteouſneſs, Holineſs, and all Chriſtian Vertues. This Book is of the Year 413.

In the Year 414. two young Monks, Timaſius and James, having been undeceived by St. Auguſtin, as to the Pelagian Errors, ſent to him one of Pelagius's Books; wherein he pleaded for for the Strength of Nature, to the Prejudice of Chriſt's Grace. St. Auguſtin immediately engaged to write againſt it, and compoſed upon that Subject the Book Of Nature and of Grace: wherein he defends the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, without Prejudice to Nature, which is delivered and regulated by Grace. He explains in this Treatiſe his Principles concerning the Fall of Humane Nature, and the Neceſſity of Grace to be Juſtified; yet he ſpares Pelagius's Name. St. Auguſtin Tome X.

But this Monk having afterwards diſcovered his Opinions, was cited by Heros, Biſhop of Arles, and by Lazarus, Biſhop of Aix, to a Council of Fourteen Biſhops, held at Dioſpolis, in Paleſtine, in the Year 415. wherein he was declared Catholick in the abſence of his Accuſers, having made a ſhew of condemning the Errors whereof he was accuſed. St. Auguſtin fearing leſt Men ſhould believe that the Council had approved his Doctrine, wrote a Book, entituled, Of the Acts of Pelagius: wherein he declares how Things were carried; and diſcovers at the ſame time, that Pelagius had impoſed upon the Fathers of the Council, by profeſſing a Doctrine which he had oppoſed in his Writings. This Book is of the Year 416, or 417. Pelagius made uſe of the ſame Artifice to perſuade Albinus, Pinianus and Melania, that he did not maintain the Errors he was accuſed of, by Anathematizing them in appearance. Cæleſtius alſo deceived Pope Zoſimus by the ſame Fraud, by preſenting unto him a Counterfeit Catholick Confeſſion. Theſe Cheats St. Auguſtin diſcovers and refutes in the Treatiſe Of Chriſt's Grace, and in that Of Original Sin; wherein he ſhews that theſe Confeſſions of Faith are captious and deceitful. Theſe Treatiſes are of the Beginning of the Year 418. It is probable alſo that it was at that ſame time that St. Auguſtin writ the ſmall Treatiſe Of the Perfection of Righteouſneſs, againſt Cæleſtius: where he Anſwers the Objections and Difficulties propoſed by this Man, under the Name of, Definitions againſt the Opinion of the Catholicks, who affirmed, That there never was, nor ever ſhould be a Man that could attain to that Perfection, of paſſing his whole Life without Offending God. St. Auguſtin maintains, That God does not grant this Grace even to the greateſt Saints; and ſo that it is ridiculous to believe that Man can compaſs this by the ſole ſtrength of his Free-Will, as Pelagius and Cæleſtius imagined. He does not mention this Book in his Retractations, but St. Proſper quotes it ſeveral times.

The Firſt Book Of Marriage and Concupiſcence, was compoſed about the latter end of the Year 418. There St. Auguſtin Anſwereth one of the moſt malicious of the Pelagian Objections againſt Original Sin. If Concupiſcence (ſaid they) is Evil, and an Effect of Sin; if all Children are Born in Sin, how comes Matrimony to be approved, which is the Effect and Spring of this Sin? St. Auguſtin handleth this nice Queſtion very cunningly, by ſhewing, That though Luſt be a Defect, and a Conſequence of the Firſt Man's Sin, which remaineth even in the Baptized; yet Conjugal Chaſtity is to be approved, which makes a good uſe of an evil thing. He occaſionally diſcourſeth of ſeveral Queſtions about Marriage, which he had treated of in other Books. This Book is dedicated to Count Valerius, into whoſe hands the Letter that contained this Objection fell.

Julianus, an Italian Biſhop, a Man of VVit, having read this Book, he was reſolved to ſignalize himſelf, by writing Four Books againſt this Treatiſe of St. Auguſtin. This Father having ſeen ſome Extracts of them, that were directed to Valerius, Anſwered them in the Second Book Of Marriages and Concupiſcence, written in 419.

Some time after, he received the Four whole Books of Julianus. In reading of them, he perceived that the Extracts ſent to him were not very faithfully drawn; which determined him to undertake another VVork to Anſwer them fully. It is divided into Six Books. In the two firſt he oppoſes the Teſtimonies of the Holy Fathers who dy'd in the Communion of the Church, to Julianus's Calumnies, who had accuſed St. Auguſtin of Approving the Manichean Doctrine; becauſe he had taught, That all Men inherited Original Sin from Adam; which is remitted not only in thoſe of riper Years, but even in Children, by the Grace of Baptiſm. And for this he alledgeth ſome Paſſages out of St. Irenæus, St. Cyprian, Rheticius Biſhop of Autun, Olympius a Biſhop in Spain, St. Hilary of Poictiers, and St. Ambroſe, which prove, That Man is Born in Sin, and is Cleanſed by Baptiſm. But becauſe Julianus appealed to the Greek Fathers. St. Auguſtin produceth likewiſe the Teſtimonies of St. Gregory Nazianzen, St. Baſil, together with the Judgment of the Biſhops of Paleſtine, who condemned Pelagius. He Anſwereth a Paſſage of St. Chryſoſtom which Julianus had cited, and quotes ſeveral other Paſſages out of this Father, which ſuppoſe Original Sin. Having thus ſtrengthned his Opinion with theſe Great Mens Authority, he likewiſe recriminates upon Julianus for publiſhing ſuch Principles as ſavoured of the Hereſie of the Manichees; and with this he concludes the Firſt Book.

In the Second Book, he refuteth the chief Arguments of the Pelagians, againſt Original Sin, by the Authorities of the Fathers; ſhowing, That in their Writings they prevented and reſolved thoſe very Objections, which the Pelagians did ſo much depend upon. Having collected a great Number of Paſſages upon that ſubject, he ſaith, That their Authority is ſo much the more conſiderable, becauſe they had ſaid theſe Things without prejudice, before the Pelagian Hereſie broke out, following therein the Sence of the Church. " We have ſhewed, ſaith " he, directing his Speech to the Pelagians, by invincible Authorities, That the Holy Biſhops, " who lived before us, taught the ſame Faith which we maintain, and overthrew the Argu- " ments which you make uſe of, not only in their Diſcourſes, but in their Writings alſo. " We have ſhewed you their Opinions, which are very particular, and clear: It is not their " Power, but God's who made them his Holy Temples, which you ought to Fear. They

St. Auguſtin. Tome X.

" judged our Cauſe, at a time, when they could not be ſuſpected either of favouring, or hating " either Party; they had neither relation to, nor affection for the one, or the other; they were " angry neither with you, nor us; neither you, nor we, could move them to Pity. They pre- " ſerved the Doctrine which they found in the Church, and they taught what they had Lear- " ned: They delivered to their Children what they received of their Fathers. We had not yet " referred our Cauſe to them, and yet they gave judgment on our ſide; neither of us were " known to them, and yet they pronounced in our behalf; we had not had any Diſpute with " you, and they declared the Right to be on our ſide.∴∴- Thoſe Biſhops were Learned, Juſt, " and Wiſe; they ſtrongly defended the Truth againſt Innovations; and none can ſay, that " they wanted Wit, Knowledge, or Freedom. Should a Council be aſſembled from all Parts " of the World, it were hard to find ſuch a Number of Biſhops of that importance; nei- " ther did they all live at the ſame time. They are the choice of the greateſt Men whom God " gave to his Church in ſeveral Ages. Their Teſtimonies are collected in a Book, which may " come to your Hands. The more you ſhould wiſh to have them for your Judges, if you de- " fended the Faith of the Church, the more ought you to fear them when you oppoſe it. I " hope that their Teſtimonies will cure your Blindneſs, as I wiſh it; but if you continue obſti- " nate in your Error, which God forbid, you are no more to look for a tribunal to juſtifie you, " but thoſe wonderful Defenders of the Truth to accuſe you, St. Irenæus, St. Cyprian, Rheti- " cius, Olympius, St. Hilary, St. Gregory, St. Ambroſe, St. Baſil, St. John Chryſoſtom, St. Innocent, " and St. Jerom, with all thoſe that communicated with them, that is to ſay the whole Church. " If you run to that exceſs of Folly, you muſt be anſwered by defending the Faith of theſe " great Men, as the Goſpel it ſelf is defended againſt ungodly Men, and the Enemies of Reli- " gion. This he doth in the Four next Books, which contain the Anſwer to Julianus his Four Books. There he treateth particularly of original Sin, of Concupiſcence, of the falſhood of the Vertues of the Heathens, of the neceſſity of Baptiſm, and of Grace; and anſwereth all that Julianus had ſaid againſt what he had ſet down in his Book of Matrimony, and Concupiſcence. I do not believe that theſe Books were finiſhed before the Year 424.

Before he had written them, Pope Boniface ſent him two Letters of the Pelagians: the one of Julianus written to Boniface himſelf; and the other, in the Name of Eighteen Biſhops of the ſame Opinion which had been ſent to Theſſalonica. St. Auguſtin having received them, immediately wrote four Books to refute them, which he directed to Pope Boniface. In the beginning of the Firſt, to get that Pope's good Will, he thanks him for the Love which he ſhewed towards him, and for the courteous manner wherewith he received his Brother Alypius of Tagaſta; he complements him upon the Dignity of his See, and tells him, That tho' all Biſhops are obliged to watch for the Defence of Chriſt's Flock, he was yet more particularly engaged to do it, becauſe he was in a more Eminent Place. Afterwards he anſwers Julianus's Calumnies, and proves, that the Catholicks did not deny Free-Will; that they do not condemn Marriage, nor the lawful Procreation of Children; that they do not condemn the Saints of the old Teſtament, neither do they ſay, That the Apoſtles were defiled through diſorderly Deſires, and explains in what Sence St. Paul ſaid he was carnal. But they maintain, That Man cannot be Righteous without Grace; that Children are born in Sin; that the involuntary Motions of Concupiſcence, are an Effect of Sin; that the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt doth not only help Man to do Good when he is willing, but makes him willing to do it; that the Saints of the Old Teſtament, were only juſtified by Faith in Jeſus Chriſt; that Baptiſm is not only neceſſary to Children, to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, but alſo to obtain a ſhare in Life eternal, out of which they are excluded by original Sin alone.

In the Two next Books, he refutes almoſt the ſame Calumnies contained in the other Letter of the Pelagians: The Two Firſt are about Free-Will, and Marriage. St. Auguſtin adds nothing to what he had ſaid in the fore-going Book. In the Third, they taxed the Catholicks with introducing Fatality. St. Auguſtin ſhews the difference betwixt Grace and Fate. In the Fourth, they accuſed them of maintaining, That the Law was not given to Juſtifie Man, but to render him more Sinful. St. Auguſtin tells them, That they did not underſtand the Opinion of the Church, in that Point; that the Law was given to teach what ought to be done, but that it is Grace which makes us obey the Law; and ſo the Law doth indeed ſhew what Righteouſneſs is, but doth not make us practiſe it. Fifthly, They upbraided the Catholicks with believing, That Baptiſm did not remit all Sins; ſo that Men continued partly God's Children, and partly the Children of the Devil. St. Auguſtin replies, That Baptiſm doth indeed remit all Sins, but it doth not cure Nature of its Weakneſſes, and Imperfections.∴∴- That the Righteous may, and do Sin often, without becoming therefore the Children of the Devil, becauſe there is no Man ſo Righteous as that he ſinneth not. The Sixth Calumny is concerning the Old Teſtament. St. Auguſtin anſwereth, That the Righteous who lived under the Old Teſtament, were juſtified through the Grace of the New; whereof the Old was only the Figure. The Seventh is, that the Apoſtles, and Prophets were not perfectly Holy, but only leſs criminal than others. St. Auguſtin anſwers, That they were truly Righteous through Faith, and Charity, but they had not all the perfection of Vertue, which now they have in the other Life. He utterly rejects the Ninth Calumny, whereby they accuſed the Catholicks of ſaying, That Jeſus Chriſt had been ſubject to Sin. The Tenth Calumny was expreſſed in theſe Terms: They affirm, That Men ſhall begin in the next Life, to practiſe the Commandments, which they did not practiſe in this. St. Auguſtin oppoſes it; ſhewing, That they put an ill Conſtruction upon a Catholick Truth; which is, That the Vertue, and the Righteouſneſs of Men, ſhall only be perfect in the next Life. St. Auguſtin. Tome X.

they

In the laſt Book, St. Auguſtin refutes the Pelagian Doctrines; and ſhews, That under pretence of commending Nature, Marriage, Free-VVill, the Law, and the Saints of the Old Teſtament, they advanced very dangerous Errors, to which he oppoſes ſeveral Teſtimonies of St. Cyprian, and of St. Ambroſe.

The Book of Grace, and Free-Will, was written by St. Auguſtin in the Year 427. upon a Diſpute which happened in the Monaſtery of Adrumetum, againſt thoſe who fearing, leaſt by the Doctrine of Grace, Free-VVill ſhould be denied, do indeed deny Grace by defending Free-VVill, becauſe they ſuppoſe that Grace is given according to Merit. This laſt Error St. Auguſtin chiefly oppoſes in this Book; ſhewing, That the beginning both of Faith, and good Reſolutions, is an effect of Grace.

The reading of this Book did not ſettle Peace among thoſe Monks: For there was an Objection propoſed, which was obvious enough to every Man's underſtanding. If no Man can do Good, without the Grace of God, and this Grace cannot be merited, no Man is to be reproved, or corrected for not doing his Duty, ſince it is not in his Power to do it, becauſe he wants Grace, and cannot deſerve it. St. Auguſtin perceiving the Difficulty of this Objection, for the Solution thereof, compoſed the Book of Correction, and Grace, wherein, without retracting any thing of what he had formerly ſaid, he affirms, That Admonition is to be uſed: 1. Becauſe it may happen, that God will touch the Heart of him that is reproved. 2. Becauſe Sinners ſin voluntarily, and without Compulſion; and that they cannot complain that God hath denied them his Grace, or the Gift of Perſeverance, ſince he owes his Grace to no body. He does not content himſelf with Anſwering the Objection; but further explains and confirms his Principles, by ſhewing the difference betwixt the Grace of Adam in the State of Innocence, and that which is neceſſary to Man in the ſtate of fallen Nature. He ſpeaks alſo of the Gift of Perſeverance, which is not granted unto all; and of the Power of Grace, and the free Predeſtination of the Elect.

He again inſiſteth upon the ſame Matter, and upon the ſame Principles, in both the Books which he writ in anſwer to Hilary's, and Proſper's Letters. The Firſt is of the Predeſtination of the Saints, and the Second of the Gift of Perſeverance: Wherein he demonſtrates, That the beginning of Faith, and good Purpoſes, is the Gift of God; and that ſo, our Predeſtination, or Vocation, does not depend upon our Merits. The Second Book concerns the Gift of Perſeverance, which he ſhews to depend equally upon God, as the beginning of our Converſion. St. Auguſtin compoſed theſe Treatiſes in the Year 429.

St. Auguſtin's laſt Effort againſt the Pelagians, fell upon Julianus his old Adverſary; who, to maintain the Quarrel he had begun, compoſed Eight Books againſt St. Auguſtin's Second Book Of Matrimony, and Concupiſcence. St. Auguſtin having received Five of them from Alypius, undertook to write againſt them, and was engaged about the Fourth, when he writ the 224th. Letter to Quodvultdeus, in the Year 428. It is probable, that Alypius ſent him the other Three, but St. Auguſtin anſwered but Six; and this Work remains imperfect, as Poſſidius affirms. The Six Books of St. Auguſtin were publiſhed by F. Vignier, from a Manuſcript of the Abby of Clervaux, which, in all probability, will be reviſed and corrected in a new Edition from ſome other Manuſcripts. Theſe Books are written by way of Dialogue: There St. Auguſtin produces Julianus's own Terms, and Anſwers them plainly, and in few Words.

We referr'd to ſpeak of St. Auguſtin's Four Treatiſes Of the original of the Soul, to this place, becauſe they were not written properly againſt the Pelagians, though St. Auguſtin handleth there ſome Queſtions that have ſome relation to the Diſpute betwixt them: Therefore I think that it had been more proper to have ſet them at the end of the Sixth Volume, than in this place. The occaſion and ſubject of theſe Four Books is this.

A Prieſt of the Province of Mauritania Cæſarienſis, one Victor, who was Surnamed Vincentius, from a Donatiſt Biſhop, Succeſſor to Victor of that Name, whoſe Memory that Prieſt who had been a Donatiſt, did reverence very much: This Prieſt, I ſay, having met in the Houſe of one Peter, a Spaniſh Prieſt, with a Writing of St. Auguſtin's, wherein this Saint had ſet down his uſual Doubts about the Soul's Original, wrote two Books againſt him, which he directed to Peter himſelf. He affirmed in that Book, That nothing was eaſier than the deciſion of that Queſtion, and that he was ſure that God did every moment create new Souls; but added to this Principle ſeveral erroneous Conſequences: He confeſſed, indeed, That the Soul was no part of God's Subſtance; but he would not ſay that he created it of nothing; He aſſerted, That it had a Body, and ſo that Man was made up of a groſs Body, of a Soul that was a more ſubtil Body, and of a Spirit. He ſaid, That the Soul deſerved to be placed in the Body, to contract ſome Pollution by converſing with Fleſh; but that it was alſo Purified by the Fleſh. That thoſe Children whom God predeſtinated to Baptiſm, were ſaved though they were not baptized; That their Souls went into Paradiſe until the Day of Judgment, and that after the Reſurrection they ſhould enter into the Kingdom of Heaven: That Sacrifices were to be offered for them: And laſt of all, That the reaſon why ſome were Saved and others Damned, was the knowledge which God had of the Good or Evil which they ſhould have done, if they had lived. Theſe

Notions

St. Auguſtin. Tome X.

Notions being very dangerous, and Vincentius having maintained them with a great deal of Wit and Eloquence; when St. Auguſtin had received theſe Books from Renatus, a Monk of Cæſarea, he thought himſelf obliged to Anſwer them.

He wrote therefore a Treatiſe to this Renatus, who had ſent them; wherein he refuteth the particular Opinions before-named: and among the reſt, That of Childrens Salvation who die without Baptiſm; He ſhoweth, That they cannot be ſaved but by that Sacrament; and that the Euchariſt is not to be offered for thoſe that died before the Uſe of Reaſon, and unbaptized: For, ſaith he, The Body of Jeſus Chriſt is not to be offered but for ſuch as are Members of Jeſus Chriſt; But none can be a Member of Jeſus Chriſt, but by Baptiſm in Jeſus Chriſt; or by dying for Jeſus Chriſt; "Niſi Baptiſmate in Chriſto, aut morte pro Chriſto." He anſwereth the Example of the good Thief, in whom Faith ſupply'd Baptiſm; and that of Dinocrates Brother to St. Perpetua, a Child of Seven Years of Age, to whom God granted Salvation, through the Prayers of that Saint, as it is related in the Acts of her Martyrdom. As to this latter Example, St. Auguſtin ſaith at firſt, That being not taken out of a Canonical Book, he can ground no Doctrine upon it, and that it is uncertain whether that Child was baptized or no.

After this, he anſwers Vincentius's Notion, That Children were either Saved or Damned, for the Good or Evil which they would have done, if they had lived; This, he ſays, is a fooliſh Opinion: For, how can a Perſon be puniſhed or recompenſed, for Evil or Good Actions which are not, and which ſhall never be? were this true, no Man that is baptized can be ſecure; for who knows whether he ſhould not have Apoſtatiz'd, had he lived? And how can this be made to agree with what the Scripture ſaith of a Man that is taken away, leſt the Wickedneſs of his Sin ſhould corrupt him. Having refuted Vincentius's falſe Conſequences, he ſhews, That thoſe Paſſages of Scripture which he alledgeth to prove the daily Creation of Souls, do indeed prove nothing, and that he takes almoſt all of them in a wrong ſence; yet he condemns not this Opinion, provided that Teſtimonies of Scripture be not abuſed to prove it, and that nothing be alledged contrary to the Doctrine of the Church to uphold it: provided likewiſe that it be not ſaid, 1. That God created ſinful Souls. 2. That Children dying before Baptiſm, are ſaved. 3. That Souls ſinned before their entrance into Bodies. 4. That they are puniſhed for future Sins that ſhall never be.

St. Auguſtin was not contented to write this Book to Renatus; but he writ beſides, a ſecond Treatiſe upon the ſame Subject, to Peter the Spaniſh Prieſt, who had given the occaſion of this Controverſie, to diſabuſe him concerning Vincentius's Opinions.

And laſt of all, he dedicates two Books to Vincentius himſelf. In the firſt, he refuteth theſe Errors, which he reduces to theſe Eleven Propoſitions: 1. That the Soul is not created of Nothing. 2. That God creates Souls in infinitum. 3. That the Soul loſes its Merit by being united with the Body. 4. That it is renewed by the ſame Fleſh, which cauſed it to loſe its Merit. 5. That it deſerved to be ſinful, before it entred into the Body. 6. That original Sin is remitted in Children that die without Baptiſm. 7. That ſome Children whom God hath predeſtinated to be baptized, do not receive that Sacrament. 8. That one may ſay of them, He was taken away, leſt Wickedneſs ſhould corrupt him. 9. That there are Habitations for them in the Kingdom of Heaven. 10. That the Euchariſt ought to be offered for them. 11. That their Souls go into Paradiſe after Death; and that after the Reſurrection they ſhall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven.

In the Second, St. Auguſtin defends thoſe things which Vincentius found fault with in his Book: They are Three. 1. His Doubts of the Original of the Soul. 2. His denying it to be a Body. 3. That he diſtinguiſhed not the Soul from the Spirit. He ſaid, touching the firſt Point, Is it credible that a Man does not know himſelf? if that be, Wherein doth he differ from Beaſts? St. Auguſtin anſwers, That Man ought to confeſs his Ignorance, not only as to what relates to the Divinity, but alſo as to many things that concern his Body and Soul: And he produces ſeveral Examples of them. Upon the Second, his Queſtion was, What the Soul is, if it be not a Body? but as he confeſſed at the ſame time that God is not a Body; St. Auguſtin asketh him the ſame Queſtions concerning the Nature of God, which he had ſtarted about the Nature of the Soul. He refuteth their Opinion who believed the Soul to be Corporeal, and particularly Vincentius's fancy, That the Soul being entred into the Body, was diffuſed into all the Parts, and by a kind of Congelation, had received the figure thereof. He anſwers the Argument which Vincentius had raiſed out of the Parable of Dives and Lazarus, and from Apparitions; obſerving, That the Soul feels and repreſents Bodies, though it be not a Body, and though there be no Body preſent. As for what is ſaid of Lazarus's Finger, and of the parts of a Soul; he retorts the Argument upon Vincentius, becauſe he ſpake likewiſe of the Finger of God, and Scripture aſcribes Members to him, though he be a meer Spirit.

At laſt, St. Auguſtin ſaith to the laſt Point, That when the Spirit is diſtinguiſh'd from the Soul, the word Spirit is taken in a ſpecial manner for Intelligence or Underſtanding; but not for Spirit, as it is a Nature oppoſed to Body. Laſtly, He exhorteth Victor to lay aſide the Surname of Vincentius; becauſe, being entred into the Church, he could no longer, without condemning himſelf, look upon Vincentius as a Saint, who died a Donatiſt. Theſe Treatiſes were compoſed in 419.

Though the main Points treated of in St. Auguſtin's Works againſt the Pelagians have been mentioned already: yea, it will not be amiſs, to give here a general view of his Doctrine. God created created the First Man in a state of Innocence, Holiness, and Grace. He was subject neither to the Necessity of Dying, nor to Sickness, nor Pain, nor the Motions of Lust, nor Ignorance, nor any of the Inconveniencies of Life, or the Imperfections of Nature, which are the Consequences and Effect of his Sin. His Free-Will was entire, and weakened with nothing. It was perfectly indifferent to do either Good or Evil, though it could not do good without the help of Grace; but this Grace which God afforded him, was entirely subjected to his Free-Will: It was a help without which he could not do good; but it did not make him do good. Such was the Condition of the First Man, like that of the Angels before their Sin. Such would have been the Condition of his Posterity, had he continued in that Happy state; but having offended God by his Disobedience, he, and all his Posterity are become subject unto Death, Pain, Sicknesses, Punishments; and what is worse, to Ignorance and Lust, that is to say, to Extravagant Motions which are within us, whether we will, or no. But what is yet more incomprehensible, all his Descendents begotten in the ordinary way, are born in Sin; They all contract the Sin which we call Original, which makes Children the Objects of God's Wrath, and infallibly Damns them, except they are regenerated by Baptism. Baptism doth indeed take away the stain of Sin, but it doth not remove the Punishment, and the Consequences of Sin. Concupiscence, Ignorance, Inclination to Sin, Weaknesses, and other Punishments for Sin, abide still during the whole course of this Mortal Life. Free-Will is not extinguish'd, but it hath not so much strength, and stands in need of powerful assistance to do good. The Grace which it needs to act, is not only that help without which it could neither will nor do that which is good; but also such an assistance as makes it both will and do it infallibly: This Grace is necessary not barely to accomplish entirely what is good, and to continue therein; but it is even necessary to begin Faith, for Prayer, and for the first Motions of Conversion. Yet it bereaves us not of our liberty, because we do not keep the Commandments, but as far as we are willing. It worketh this Will in us, without Violence or Compulsion: for God constraineth no Man to do either good or evil; but to do good the Will must be succoured by Grace, which doth not deprive it of its Liberty: and this Grace is not granted to Merit, but is absolutely free. Since the First Man's Sin, the whole mass of Mankind was corrupt, condemned, and subject to Death. God by free Grace and Mercy takes out of this mass of Corruption whom he pleases, leaving the rest in that condition, out of that Justice which none can find fault with; for what is Man that he should dispute it with God? Doth the Earthen Vessel say to the Potter that framed it, Why hast thou made me thus? However, it may be truly said, That all Men may be saved if they will; if they be not, they can only accuse their own perverse Will, whereby they resist the Call of God. There are some Graces which he refuseth not to Reprobates, wherewith they might do good if they would. To some, he gives the Knowledge of his Law, and they despise it; He inspires into others a desire of being Converted, and they reject it; Some he excites to Prayer, but they neglect to do it; He speaks to the Hearts of several, who harden themselves, that they may not hearken unto his Voice; He overcomes the hardness of some for a time, converting them by an Effectual Grace, who plunge themselves again in Vice. In a word, how strong and powerful soever the Grace is which he gives, yet it may be said in some sence, that Man may always resist it, though he doth not actually do it. God does not grant this Grace to all Men, not only because he oweth it to none; but also because some make themselves unworthy of it: for to say nothing of Children who die before the use of Reason, who are either damned because of Original Sin, or saved by the Grace of Baptism, the Adult who have not the gift of Perseverance, have made themselves unworthy of it, either through their own Sins, or by the Contempt which they have cast upon God's Vocation; or by the Opposition they have made to inward Grace; or lastly, by falling again into the state of Sin, from which God delivered them in his Mercy. And so no Man can either excuse himself or accuse the Justice of God, because every one receiveth what he deserved; every one is rewarded or punished, according to the good or the evil which he hath done, by his Will which co-operates with the most effectual Grace.

St. Augustin. Tom. X.

The Effect of this Grace, according to St. Augustin, is to make us in love with that which is good; it is a pleasure which draws our heart towards good things, and enables us to keep the Commandments; without this Grace, there is no Action meritorious. The fear of Punishment, though merely servile, is good and profitable, because it regulates the inward Man, but it does not render us Righteous before God. We shall never perfectly accomplish the Precept of loving God in this Life, because we shall never love him so perfectly as in the next: And though through God's Grace, a Man may absolutely avoid all Sin in this Life; yet it never did, nor shall ever happen that a mere Man (excepting the Blessed Virgin, of whom St. Augustin would not have us to speak, when Sin is mentioned) passed through this Life without Sin: For this reason, the most righteous say daily, Lord remit us our Debts; that is, our Sins; But these are not mortal Sins, which bereave the Soul of Righteousness and Holiness; they are venial and daily Sins, which are indeed against God's Law, but do not utterly destroy Charity.

St. Augustin's Principles concerning Predestination and Reprobation, do exactly agree with his Opinion touching Grace. Both those Decrees, according to him, suppose the fore-knowledge of Original Sin, and of the Corruption of the whole mass of Mankind. If God would suffer all Men to remain there, none could complain of that severity, seeing they are all guilty and doom'd to Damnation, because of the Sin of the First Man. But God resolved from all Eternity, to deliver ſome whom he had choſen out of pure Mercy, without any regard to their future Merits; and from all Eternity he prepared for them that were thus choſen, thoſe Gifts and Graces which are neceſſary, to ſave them infallibly; and theſe he beſtows upon them in time. All thoſe therefore, that are of the number of the Elect, hear the Goſpel and believe, and perſevere in the Faith working out by Love, to the end of their lives. If they chance to wander from the right way, they return, and repent of their Sins: and it is certain that they ſhall all die in the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt.

St. Auguſtin. Tom X.

Reprobation is not like Predeſtination; God doth not poſitively caſt away any Man; he predeſtinateth none to Damnation; he only knows thoſe that are left in that maſs of Perdition, and are not of the happy number of thoſe whom he will deliver through Mercy. Theſe Wretches are at laſt Condemned, either becauſe of Original Sin which is not remitted to them, and ſuch are the Children that die without receiving Baptiſm, or for the Sins which by their Free-Will they have added to the firſt Sin; or, becauſe they wanted Faith and Righteouſneſs; or laſtly, becauſe they did not perſevere unto the end.

This is an Abridgment of St. Auguſtin's Doctrine, which is ſet down in his Books againſt the Pelagians, and in ſeveral other places of his Works.

The Supplement to this Volume, containeth for the moſt part Writings that ſerve to juſtifie St. Auguſtin's Doctrine of Predeſtination and of Grace, and ſome other Treatiſes upon the ſame Subject, attributed to St. Auguſtin; the Authors whereof are not well known. St. Proſper's Four Books, in Defence of St. Auguſtin, are of the firſt ſort; to which they have added his Epigram, in Commendation of the ſame Father.

Cœleſtine's Letter, the Capitulars that follow it, and the Canons of the Council of Orange, are likewiſe Illuſtrious Approbations of St. Auguſtin's Doctrine. Here one might add ſeveral other Treatiſes about Grace, written upon occaſion of thoſe Conteſts raiſed concerning St. Auguſtin's Opinion; ſuch as the Letter of the African Biſhops that were baniſhed into Sardinia; The Canons of the Council of Valentia; with the Treatiſes of Florus, Lupus, Remigius of Auxerre, Ratramnus, and ſeveral other Authors who writ of theſe Matters in the Ninth Century.

The other VVorks contained in this Addition do not bear the Names of any Authors. The Firſt is a conſiderable Treatiſe, divided into Six Books, and entituled, Hypognoſticon; Or, Reflections and Notes againſt the Pelagians and Cœleſtians. The Author ſets down the main Doctrines of the Pelagians in their own words, and then confutes them Although this Book is conformable to St. Auguſtin's Doctrine, yet it hath not his Style. That Father among the Benedictines, who chiefly looks after the New Edition of St. Auguſtin, having given me notice, That he thought it might be Marius Mercator's; I have examined it, and found that his Conjecture is not ill grounded. For, in the Firſt place, That VVork is of an ancient Author, who both liv'd and writ at the ſame time with Pelagius and Cœleſtius, and he was of St. Auguſtin's Opinion; this agrees with Marius Mercator. 2. Marius Mercator uſually gives his Treatiſes the ſame Title with this; for ſo he entituled his Writing againſt Julianus. 3. The Form of this Treatiſe is perfectly like that of his other Treatiſes: he lays down there the very Terms of his Adverſaries, and then refutes them with Notes and Reflections. 4. Having compared this Treatiſe with others of Marius Mercator, and particularly with his Book againſt Julianus, I found the Style to be the ſame: One may meet with the ſame Terms repeated again, the ſame Figures, the ſame Livelineſs, the ſame Turn, and the ſame Expreſſions. Laſtly, St. Auguſtin, in the 193d. Letter, to Marius Mercator, in 418. affirms, That this Man had written a Book full of Scripture-Teſtimonies againſt the new Hereticks: and this can belong to no other of Mercator's Treatiſes, but agrees perfectly with this. Theſe are the Conjectures which I thought of, and I doubt not but the Benedictines will bring ſeveral others much ſtronger; in the mean time, theſe may be ſufficient to make their Conjecture very probable.

The Book Of Predeſtination and Grace, which is among St. Auguſtin's Works, under the Name of an incertain and ſuſpicious Author, is attributed by Sirmondus to St. Fulgentius, and Printed under his Name among this Father's Works. We ſhall examine whether it be his, when we come to St. Fulgentius. However, this ſmall Diſcourſe of Predeſtination agrees neither with the Style nor with the Doctrine of St. Auguſtin.

Theſe are all this Father's Works. His Life will be added in another Volume, with the Teſtimonies of the Ancients concerning him, the Commendations that have been given him, and very large and uſeful Tables.

Though we have given a ſufficient Account both of St. Auguſtin's Character and Genius, in ſpeaking of his Works; yet it is convenient to ſay ſomething of them here in general. He was a Man of great Extent, great Exactneſs, and great force of Mind. His Reaſonings were very ſtrong. His ordinary Method is, to lay down extenſive Principles, from which he draws an infinite number of Conſequences: ſo that all the Points of his Doctrine have a great Connexion one with another. He argued more upon moſt of the Myſteries of our Religion, than any Author before him. He ſtarts ſeveral Queſtions never thought of before, and reſolves many of them by the mere Strength of his VVit. He often left the Notions of his Predeceſſors, to follow a Path wholly new, whether in Expounding the Scriptures, or in Opinions of Divinity. That may be ſaid of him, as to Divinity, what Cicero ſaid of himſelf, as to Philoſophy, That he was Magnus Opiniator; that is, that he advanced ſeveral Opinions that were only probable.

bable. But St. Auguſtin doth it modeſtly, and with much Prudence, without pretending to oblige others to embrace his Opinions without Examination: whereas, when the Queſtion is about the Doctrine of the Church, he propoſes and maintains it ſtoutly, and as ſtrongly oppoſes its Oppoſers. He had much leſs Learning than VVit; for he underſtood not the Languages, neither had he read the Ancients much. He wrote with greater Facility and Clearneſs, than Politeneſs and Elegancy. Though he had taught Rhetorick, yet either he was not Maſter of the Eloquence of the Orators, or he neglected it: nay, his Expreſſions are not always pure; for he often uſes unproper and barbarous Words. He often uſes little ſtrokes of VVit, and plays with VVords. He repeats the ſame things, and inſiſts upon the ſame Arguments in hundreds of places. He dwells long upon the ſame Thought; to which he gives ſeveral turns, and enlarges frequently upon common places. He treated of infinite numbers of Things, by laying down Principles; and framed (if we may ſo ſay) the Body of Divinity for all the Latin Fathers that came after him. They have not only taken out of his Books the Principles they make uſe of, but often they have only copied them. The Councils have borrowed his VVords to expreſs their Deciſions. In ſhort, Peter Lombard, in the Twelfth Century, going about to compoſe an Epitome of the whole Body of Divinity, did little elſe but Collect Paſſages out of St. Auguſtin. And though Thomas Aquinas, and other Schoolmen, followed another Method; yet, for the moſt part, they have ſtuck to S. Auguſtin's Principles, whereupon they erected their Theological Opinions. St. Auguſtin. Tom. X.

After this, no Man needs wonder that his VVorks were ſo much looked after formerly, and ſo many times publiſhed ſince Printing was invented. The Edition of St. Auguſtin's VVorks was one of the firſt conſiderable Things that Printers committed to the Preſs. Amerbachius undertook it in 1495. This Gothick Edition was followed by that of Baſil, in Nine Volumes, in the Year 1506. and by that of Paris, in 1515. with long Lines, publiſhed in 1528. and in 1526. which is the faireſt for its Character. The Editions of Guillard and Chevallon, which came out not long after, are likewiſe pretty fair ones.

In 1571. Two came out; the one in Paris, by Morellus; and the other at Lions. The Doctors of Louvain having carefully Reviſed St. Auguſtin's VVorks, cauſed them to be Printed at Antwerp, in 1577. The following Editions are only new Impreſſions of this. The firſt and the faireſt was done at Paris, 1586. and was followed by thoſe of the Years 1609, 1614, 1626, 1635, 1652. not to mention that at Venice in 1584. that at Colen, in 1616. and the laſt Edition at Lions. Now they having Printed, from time to time, ſeveral Treatiſes of St. Auguſtin that were not in the former Editions, Father Vignier thought fit to collect them into a Body, that might ſerve for a Supplement to all the Editions of St. Auguſtin. He joyned to it the imperfect Treatiſe againſt Julianus, and ſome Sermons which had not been Printed before, and publiſhed them all in Two Volumes, in Folio, at Paris, in 1655. This Labour becomes uſeleſs by the laſt Edition of St. Auguſtin, which excelleth and effaces all the fore-going Editions.

ZOSIMUS.

POpe Innocent I. dying the 12th. of March, 417. Zoſimus was promoted into his Place upon the 18th. of the ſame Month. Though he ſat but One Year, Nine Months, and ſome Days in the Roman See, yet he very much exerted his Authority in the Diſputes which he had with the Biſhops both of Africa and Gaul. This appears by his Letters, which we are now to diſcourſe of according to the Order wherein they ought to be placed. To underſtand thoſe which concern Africa, we are to know, That Cœleſtius, Pelagius's Diſciple, having been condemned in the Council of Carthage, aſſembled in 412. thought it convenient to appeal to the Pope, contrary to the Order and Cuſtom of that Time. The Africans did not much trouble themſelves about that Appeal; neither did he much value it himſelf; for without taking it out, he went to Epheſus, where he found means to be Ordained Prieſt. Some Years after he came to Conſtantinople; from whence he was Expelled by Atticus, who diſcovered his Error, and writ againſt him to Theſſalonica, to Carthage, and into Aſia. That happened at the ſame time that Zoſimus was raiſe to the Popedom. Cœleſtius being informed of it, came immediately to Rome, to prepoſſeſs this new Pope, and to ingratiate himſelf with him, by making him a Judge in his Cauſe. And indeed, Zoſimus finding this a fit Opportunity to promote his Deſign of Encreaſing his Authority, and drawing to himſelf the Appeals of Cauſes judged in other places, he failed not to hearken to Cœleſtius, and to admit him to juſtifie himſelf. He left all other Buſineſſes, to ſtick particularly to this. He made Cœleſtius appear in St. Clement's Church; examined the Heads of the Accuſation that was formed againſt him. He cauſed him to make a Confeſſion of Faith, whereby he diſowned the Errors which Heros and Lazarus had laid to his Charge. He enquired after the Qualifications of thoſe Accuſers; whom he found (as he ſaith) to have been wrongfully Ordained, Expelled out of their Biſhopricks, and ſeparated from the Communion of the reſt. Zoſimus, though much prepoſſeſs'd in Cœleſtius's Zoſimus.

Zoſimus. Cœleſtius's behalf, yet durſt not give Judgment in his Caſe without writing to the African Biſhops; but he did it after ſuch manner as ſufficiently diſcovered how much he favoured him: For after he had writ all this that we have ſaid, he declares, That if Cœleſtius's Accuſers came not to Rome within Two Months, to Convict him of maintaining other Opinions than thoſe which he then profeſſed, he ſhould take it for granted that he was Innocent. At the latter end, he declares all theſe Queſtions to be only vain Subtilties, and unprofitable Conteſts, which rather deſtroy than edifie; and are Effects of an imprudent Curioſity, and of too great an itch of Speaking and Writing. This Letter was written about July, in the Year 417.

After the writing of this Letter, Zoſimus received one from Prailus, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, in Cœleſtius's behalf, with Pelagius's Confeſſion of Faith. This News, the Abſence of the Accuſers, and the Silence of the Africans, who returned no Anſwer to his Letter, confirmed him in the Judgment which he had made of Cœleſtius's Doctrine. He deals with their Accuſers, as with moſt unworthy Perſons. He upbraids Lazarus, as one that made it his practice to accuſe the Innocent; and as one that had been condemned by Proculus, Biſhop of Marſeilles, in a Synod at Turin, for having falſely and calumniouſly accuſed Britius, Biſhop of Tours. He adds, That having been Ordained Biſhop of Aix, ſome time after, by the Favour of Conſtantine the Tyrant, he retained the Shadow of the Prieſthood ſo long as the Power of that Tyrant laſted. As for Heros, he reproacheth him for following the ſame Party, and for doing Violence. Afterwards, he tells the African Biſhops, That they were to blame, in being ſo eaſily perſuaded upon the Word of thoſe Accuſers; and makes no ſcruple of declaring Pelagius and Cœleſtius Innocent, ſeeing their Accuſers had not appeared.

Zoſimus's Firſt Letter was carried by Baſiliſcus, a Subdeacon, who cited Paulinus to the Pope's Tribunal; but he did not concern himſelf to appear: And the African Biſhops were not at all moved by Zoſimus's Pretenſion; on the contrary, they ſtood by the Judgment which they had given firmly; which alſo had been confirmed by his Predeceſſor. They told him plainly, That this Cauſe being born in Africa, and judged there, Cœleſtius could not Appeal, nor he take Cognizance of it. Laſtly, They made a Proteſtation, to prevent Zoſimus pronouncing Judgment by default in the behalf of Cœleſtius and Pelagius: Yea, they went further, for without waiting for the Pope's Judgment, they confirmed what they had done, and condemned the Doctrine of Pelagius and Cœleſtius a-new. Having taken this Precaution, they writ again to Zoſimus, and ſent him all the Acts of what had been done in Africa againſt Cœleſtius: ſhewing him at the ſame time, That it was not enough to oblige Pelagius and Cœleſtius to approve in general what was in Pope Innocent's Letter, but that they ought to be made to acknowledge particularly all the Catholick Truths that were contrary to their Errors.

Zoſimus having received theſe Letters, with the Advertiſements of the Africans who had likewiſe written to Court about the buſineſs, durſt not go any further, and was contented to aſſert his Authority, by writing to them, That though he had power to judge all Cauſes, and none had any right to reform his Judgments, yet he would do nothing without communicating it unto them: That he was ſurprized, that they ſhould write to him as if they had been perſuaded that he had given credit to all that Cœleſtius had ſaid to him: That he had not proceeded ſo faſt; becauſe too much Deliberation cannot be uſed, when a Supreme Judgment is to be pronounced: and, That after the firſt Letter which he received from them, he left all in the ſame Condition that it was before. This Letter, of the 19th. of March, 418. is the Tenth in the uſual Order of Zoſimus's Letters.

It appears by this, that the Pope began to alter his Mind, concerning Cœleſtius, and to miſtruſt his Sincerity. But he was fully convinced of his Double-dealing, when the time of Judgment came: for having cauſed him to be cited to come and condemn the Six Articles that were laid to his Charge clearly, if he would be abſolved of the Judgment that was given againſt him in Africa, he not only refuſed to appear, but fled from Rome. Zoſimus, provoked to ſee himſelf deceived, wrote to all the Biſhops a long Letter, wherein he condemned Cœleſtius's Articles, and Pelagius's Writings. This Letter is not all extant, but only ſome Fragments of it produced by St. Auguſtin and Marius Mercator. It was very long, and contained the whole Hiſtory of this Affair. He gave this Judgment after April, in the Year 418.

Zoſimus had likewiſe ſome Conteſts with the Biſhops of Gaul. The Churches of Arles and Vienna had long diſputed the Right of Primacy, over the Provinces of Gallia Narbonenſis, and Viennenſis. This Conteſt had been laid a-ſleep for ſome time by a Decree of the Council at Turin, which ordained, That in Expectation of an abſolute Deciſion of that Quarrel, both Churches ſhould enjoy the Right of Metropolis over the Churches that were near to each of them. But Zoſimus was no ſooner promoted to the Popedom, but he declares for Patroclus, Biſhop of Arles; and granted him by his Letter all that he could wiſh for: For he gave him, in the firſt place, the Right of giving Formed Letters to all the Eccleſiaſticks of Gaul that would come to Rome; forbidding abſolutely that any ſhould go out of Gaul without that ſort of Letters from him, whereby it appeared what they were, and whence they came. This Privilege did belong to the Church of Arles; as indeed Zoſimus ſaith, That he granted it not to Patroclus, becauſe of his Church, but for his Deſerts. Meritorum ejus Contemplatione. The ſecond Advantage which Zoſimus would have Patroclus enjoy, was annex'd to the Dignity of his Church, and concerns the Metropolitical Rights which he ordains him to have over the Province of Gallia Viennenſis, and both the Narbonenſes, which implies the Right of Ordaining all the Biſhops of thoſe Provinces. Zoſimus.

and

Laſtly, Zoſimus annexed to the Biſhoprick of Arles, all the Pariſhes and Territories which formerly belong'd to it. He added, That all the Conteſts that ſhould ariſe in the Provinces of Gallia Viennenſis, and Narbonenſis, were to be carried to the Biſhop of Arles; except the Buſineſs was of Conſequence; in which caſe, he affirmed it neceſſary, That he ſhould examine the ſame himſelf at Rome: Niſi magnitudo cauſæ noſtrum deſideret examen. He obſerves beſides in that Letter, That Trophimus was ſent to Arles by the See of Rome, and that through his means the Gauls received the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt. This Letter was written ſoon after the Promotion of Pope Zoſimus, the 20th. of March, of the Year 417. It is the Fifth in the common Editions.

About the latter end of that Year he writ Two more; wherein he confirms the Metropolitical Rights to the Church of Arles; rejecting even with Scorn the Canon of the Council at Turin, and condemning Proculus of Marſeilles, and Simplicius of Vienna, who oppoſed his Deſign. In both thoſe Letters he grounds the Primacy of the Church of Arles upon its being founded by Trophimus, who was ſent from the See of Rome. Theſe Letters are the Seventh and the Eighth. The former is directed to the Biſhops of Gallia Viennenſis; and the ſecond, to Narbonenſis; and the latter to Hilary of Narbon, who maintained, That to him belonged the Ordinations of the Biſhops of the firſt Narbonenſis. Both theſe Letters are dated the 27th. of September, 417.

He that moſt oppoſed Patroclus, was Proculus Biſhop of Marſeilles, who conſtantly Ordained Biſhops in his Province, notwithſtanding the Pope's Prohibitions. Zoſimus undertook him, and cited him to Rome. But he not much regarding that Citation, continued to maintain his Rights, and to Ordain, as he had done before. This brought upon him a Condemnation from Zoſimus, who writ againſt him, not only to Patroclus, but alſo to the People of Marſeilles, That they ſhould Expell him out of his Biſhoprick. His Ninth Letter, to Patroclus, is upon this Subject, September 27th. 417. And the Eleventh, to the ſame, written March 2d. 418. and the Twelfth, to the People of Marſeilles, dated on the ſame day. Yet notwithſtanding the Pope's Judgment and Threatnings, Proculus remained peaceable Poſſeſſor of his Biſhoprick; and was always acknowledged Lawful Biſhop, not only by the Gallican, but alſo by the African Biſhops. And St. Jerom tells us, in his Letter to Ruſticus, That this Proculus of Marſeilles, who was uſed ſo ill by the Popes, was a moſt Holy and Learned Biſhop.

The Grudge which Zoſimus bore to Proculus, made him Condemn likewiſe two Biſhops Ordained by him, called Urſus and Tuentius,; againſt whom he writ a Circular Letter to the Biſhops of Africa, Gaul and Spain; it is the Seventh, dated September 20th. 417. He ſaith of theſe two Perſons whom Proculus had Ordained, That they had been both Condemned. The firſt by Proculus himſelf, and the ſecond by other Biſhops: That this Man, after his Condemnation, came to Rome; where he did Penance, and abjured the Errors of the Priſcillianiſts. He reproaches Proculus for regarding neither his Judgment, nor the Judgment of others. He ſpeaks alſo againſt Lazarus, whom Proculus Ordained Biſhop of Aix, who had aſſiſted at the Ordination of Urſus and Tuentius. He declares, That thoſe Ordinations were Illegitimate, having been performed in prejudice of the Biſhop of Arles, who alone had the Right to Ordain in the Provinces of Narbon and Vienna. Laſtly, He adviſes the Biſhops of Gaul, Spain and Africa, not to own either Urſus or Tuentius for Biſhops, and not to communicate with them.

By theſe Letters one plainly ſees the Reaſon why Zoſimus did ſo much deſire to invalidate the Judgment given againſt Cœleſtius and Pelagius. Their Accuſers were Heros and Lazarus; Patroclus's Adverſaries, and Friends of Proculus of Marſeilles. He openly declar'd for Patroclus. He eagerly proſecuted Proculus and his Adherents. He would have been glad to find Matter of Condemation againſt Heros and Lazarus, by cauſing them to be looked upon as Falſe Accuſers. Perhaps this is the only thing that made him favour Cœleſtius and Pelagius at firſt: But ſince both of them were convicted of Hereſie by the Biſhops of Africa, The Love of Truth prevailed in him, over the ſecret Satisfaction which he would have had by the Condemnation of Heros and Lazarus.

We have three Letters beſides aſcribed to Zoſimus, which do not ſeem to have had any relation to either of theſe Affairs we have now ſpoken of.

The Firſt is directed to Heſychius, Biſhop of Salona; to whom he preſcribes with much Imperiouſneſs, and with a very Commanding Tone, the Diſtances which he ſhould cauſe to be obſerved between the Sacred Orders. The Date is of February, 418.

The Second is directed to the Clergy of Ravenna. He ſpeaketh there againſt thoſe who durſt go to Court to Complain againſt him: telling the Clergy of Ravenna, That they were Excommunicated. The Letter is of the 2d. of October, of the ſame Year.

The Laſt, if it be true, is directed to the Biſhops of the Province of Byzacena in Africa; and not to the Biſhops of Byzantia, as it is in the common Title. There he blames thoſe Biſhops for admitting Lay-men to Judge Church-men. It is dated Novemb. 14th. 418. But it is very probable that it is Suppoſititious, becauſe it is of a very different Style from the reſt.

Zoſimus. Zoſimus writes purely, and nobly. He ſpeaks with Vigour, and Authority, and turns every thing to his own Advantage. He diſcerneth the weak ſide of his Adverſaries, and omits nothing that can do them Hurt. In a word, He writes like a Man throughly skill'd in Buſineſs, who knows the ſtrong, and the weak ſide of every Thing, and the exact Management of Affairs.

BONIFACE I.

Boniface I. After the Death of Pope Zoſimus, the Church of Rome was divided about the Election of his Succeſſor. The Arch-Deacon Eulalius, who aſpired to the Biſhoprick of Rome, ſhut himſelf up in the Church of the Lateran, with part of the People, ſome Prieſts, and ſome Deacons, and made them chuſe him in Zoſimus's room. On the other ſide, a great Number of Prieſts, ſeveral Biſhops, and part of the People, being aſſembled in the Church of Theodora, elected Boniface. Both were ordained. Eulalius was ordained by ſome Biſhops, among whom was the Biſhop of Oſtia, who uſed to ordain the Biſhop of Rome. Boniface was likewiſe ordained by a great Number of Biſhops, and went to take Poſſeſſion of St. Peter's Church.

Symmachus, Governour of Rome, having try'd in vain to make them agree, writ to the Emperor Honorius about it. In his Letter of the 29th. of December, 418. he ſpeaks in Eulalius's behalf, and judges Boniface to be in the wrong. The Emperor believing his Relation, ſent him word immediately, That he ſhould expell Boniface, and uphold Eulalius. The Governour having received this Order, ſent for Boniface to acquaint him with it, but he would not come to him; ſo that the Governour ſent to him, to ſignifie the Emperor's Order, and kept him from returning into the City. The Biſhops, Prieſts, and the People that ſided with Boniface, wrote immediately to the Emperor, to entreat him, that he would order both Eulalius, and Boniface, to go to Court, that their Cauſe might there be judged. To ſatisfie them, the Emperor ſent to Symmachus an Order of the 30th. of January 419. ſignifying, That he ſhould enjoin Boniface, and Eulalius, to be at Ravenna, about the 6th. of February. Honorius conven'd ſome Biſhops thither to judge of their Cauſe; and that they might not be ſuſpected of favouring any one ſide, he commanded, That none of thoſe who had ordained either of them, ſhould be a Judge in the caſe. The Biſhops that were choſen to judge this Cauſe being divided, the Emperor put off the Judgment till May, and forbad Eulalius, and Boniface, to go to Rome; and ſent thither Achilleus, Biſhop of Spoleto, to perform the Epiſcopal Functions, during the Eaſter Holy-Days. In which time he prepared a numerous Synod, and invited the Biſhops both of Africa, and Gaul; but Eulalius could not endure that Delay, and ſpoiled his buſineſs by his impatience: For whether he diſtruſted his Right, or whether he was of a reſtleſs temper, he returned to Rome the 16th. of March, and would have ſtay'd there, notwithſtanding the Emperor's Orders, which obliged Symmachus to uſe Violence to drive him out of Rome, and the Emperor having been informed of his Diſobedience, waited for no other Judgment, but cauſed Boniface to be put in poſſeſſion, in the beginning of April 419.

One of the Firſt Things that Boniface did, was to write to the Emperor, to entreat him to make an Edict, to prevent, for the future, the Intrigues, and Cabals that were made uſe of to get the Biſhoprick of Rome. This Letter bears Date the Firſt of July. To cut off the Root of theſe Diviſions, Honorius ordained, That if ever Two Men ſhould be ordained Biſhops of Rome, that neither ſhould remain in Poſſeſſion, but that both the Clergy, and People ſhould chuſe a Third.

Boniface's Second Letter, ought to go before this now mentioned, if the order of their Dates were obſerved, ſince this is of the 13th. of June 419. It is directed to Patroclus, and to the other Biſhops of the Seven Provinces of Gaul, concerning Maximus Biſhop of Valence, who was accuſed, by the Clergy of that City, who had carried their Accuſation directly to the Pope, in all probability about the Conteſts which had been in that Province, concerning the Right of Primacy. Boniface accuſes that Biſhop, not only for refuſing to appear at Rome to plead for himſelf, but for avoiding to appear before Provincial Synods, to which he was remitted by the Popes his Predeceſſors. Yet he declares, That he would not condemn him, becauſe he ought to have been judged in his own Province: Wherefore he deſireth them to call a Council before the Firſt of November, that he might appear there to make his own defence to the Accuſations formed againſt him; adding, That if he refuſed to appear, he ſhould hope no longer, that his abſence could put a ſtop to his Condemnation. "For, ſaith he, it is a ſhrew'd "Mark of a Man's Guilt, who, when he is accuſed, and has ſo many occaſions of clearing him-"ſelf, yet neglects to make uſe of them.

Boniface's Third Letter to Hilary, Biſhop of Narbonna, of the 2d. of February 422 overthrows all that Zoſimus had done in the behalf of the Church of Arles. For upon the Complaint of the Inhabitants of Lodevæ, a City of Gallia Narbonenſis Prima, againſt Patroclus, Biſhop of Arles, for ordaining a Biſhop without conſulting with the Metropolitan, he declares, That it was an Action againſt the Canons of the Council of Nice, which he could not patiently bear with, becauſe he was obliged to maintain the Canons. Wherefore he ſends word to the Biſhop of Narbon, That if that Church be of his Provence, he ſhould go to that City, and there perform a lawful Ordination, and put a ſtop to the Biſhop of Arles's Preſumption, who undertook beyond the Bounds of his Juriſdiction. Laſtly, He ordaineth, That for the future, every Province ſhall be ſubject to its own Metropolitan. Nothing can be more contrary than the Opinions of Zoſimus, and Boniface, concerning the Dignity, and Juriſdiction of the Church of Arles. Zoſimus is perſuaded, That the Biſhop of Arles ought to ordain all the Biſhops of Seven Provinces; and Boniface declares, That that is a violation of the Canons. The former ſaith, That the Biſhop of Arles is the ſole Metropolitan; and the latter affirmeth, That none can be Metropolitan of Two Provinces. Zoſimus is of Opinion, That the Pretenſions of Hilary, of Narbon, and of the other Metropolitans of the Seven Provinces, that they have a Right to ordain the Biſhops of their reſpective Provinces, are extreamly raſh. On the contrary, Boniface maintains, That it is a well-grounded Right; and that the Pretenſion of the Church of Arles to ordain in thoſe Provinces, is a breach upon the Canons, to which oppoſition muſt be made. The one forbids Hilary of Narbon, to ordain the Biſhops of his Province, when he asks it of him: The other enjoins him to do it without asking. Can there be a greater contrariety of Opinions betwixt Popes, who ſucceeded each other immediately. This made St. Leo ſay in the Epiſtle to the Biſhops of Provincia Viennenſis, That the See of Rome had taken away from Patroclus what it had given him, by a more juſt Sentence, than that by which it was granted. ID IPSUM QUOD PATROCLO A SEDE APOSTOLICA TEMPORALITER VIDEBATUR ESSE CONCESSUM, POSTMODUM ESSE SENTENTIA MELIORE SUBLATUM. Is it becauſe thoſe Popes thought themſelves abſolute Maſters of theſe Things? If ſo, Why ſhould they alledge the Canons, and profeſs to obſerve them? Is it becauſe they believed that Privileges attended the Perſons of Biſhops, and not their Churches? Wherefore then did Zoſimus exalt the Dignity, and Antiquity of the Church of Arles ſo high, becauſe it was founded by Trophimus? We are therefore to conclude, That there is no other Reaſon of that contrariety, beſides the difference of the Opinions of the Two Popes: But which of the Two was in the Right, and which in the Wrong, is a great Buſineſs to be decided, which we ſhall find afterwards ſharply debated in the time of St. Leo. In the mean time we may obſerve, That the common Right was on Boniface's ſide, and that we do not ſee any Privilege authentick enough, or any Cuſtom ſufficiently eſtabliſhed, whereby we ſhould allow to the Church of Arles, what Zoſimus grants to it. There are beſides Five of this Pope's Letters to Ruffus Biſhop of Theſſalonica, and to the Biſhops of Illyricum recorded in the Council that was aſſembled under Boniface II. in 531. Boniface I. was peaceable Poſſeſſor of the See of Rome until the Year 423. though there were ſtill ſome Chriſtians of Eulalius's Party.

to

Boniface I.

SYNESIUS.

SYNESIUS, originally of Cyrene, a City of Pentapolis, a Platonick Philoſopher, and Diſciple of the famous Hypatia, having ſpent part of his Life in worldly Employments, was converted, and choſen Biſhop of Ptolemais in the Year 420. He was hardly brought to accept of that Office, which ſeemed to him to be contrary to that Philoſophical Life, wherein he had lived till then: Neither could he reſolve to leave his Wife; nor was he yet fully perſuaded of all the Articles of the Chriſtian Religion. He believed that Souls were created before Bodies, and could not conceive that the World was to have an end: He did not believe the Reſurrection of the Dead, as it is believed in the Church; imagining, That what is ſaid in the Scripture, had ſome myſtical, and ſecret Sence. He urges theſe Reaſons in his 105th. Letter, to prevent their ordaining him Biſhop. Baronius thinks, That he did not really hold ſuch Opinions, but that he feigned to have them to avoid the Epiſcopal Function. But this Conjecture is not at all probable, becauſe he affirms with an Oath, that he expreſſed his real Sence: Wherefore it is better to ſay with the Ancients, that Syneſius's Merit, and the need which the Churches of Africa ſtood in of his Protection in a moſt difficult time, ſuperſeded theſe Conſiderations, in hopes that being ordained Biſhop, he would ſubmit his Opinions to thoſe of the Church. It is related in the Pratum Spirituale, that when he was Biſhop, a very remarkable Thing happened to him; which ſhews, That he had altered his Opinion, concerning the Reſurrection of Bodies. A Heathen Philoſopher, one Evagrius, Syneſius's old Friend, came to Cyrene. Syneſius uſed all his Endeavours to convert him. After ſeveral Sollicitations to that purpoſe, this Philoſopher declared to him at laſt, That the Reſurrection of the Body was one of thoſe Things which he was moſt diſpleaſed with in the Chriſtian Religion. Syneſius affirmed, That whatſoever the Chriſtians taught was true, and never left him, till he had Converted, and Baptized him. This Man, ſometime after his Baptiſm, having given Syneſius a Summ of Money to diſtribute to the Poor, demanded a Bond to repay it him again in the next Life. Syneſius readily gave him one. The Philoſopher kept it, and ſome time before his Death, commanded his Children to put it into his Coffin. Three Days after, he appeared to Syneſius in the Night, and bad him come to his Grave, and take his Bond

Syneſius.

Syneſius. Bond, becauſe he was pay'd; and to aſſure him of it, he had ſigned a Diſcharge with his own Hand. Syneſius not knowing that his Children had put the Bond in his Coffin, having ſent for them, and learned of them how the buſineſs had been carried, telling them withal what had happened, went to this Man's Grave, with his Clergy, and the chief Men of the Town, and cauſed the Coffin to be opened; where they found the Bond, with a Receit newly written in Evagrius's own Hand at the Bottom. The Author of the Pratum Spirituale, relates this Hiſtory, as having learned it of Leontius of Apamea, who came to Alexandria, in the time of the Patriarch Eulogius, to be Ordained Biſhop of Cyrene; adding, That that Man certified, That this Bond was ſtill kept in the Veſtry of the Church of Cyrene. This may give ſome Credit to a Story which would deſerve none, were it ſolely grounded upon the Teſtimony of the Author of the Pratum Spirituale, who is known to be of no great Authority. However, Evagrius and Photius affirm, That Syneſius was no ſooner Ordained Biſhop, but he yielded to the Opinion of the Church, concerning the Reſurrection.

Syneſius's Treatiſes are Philoſophical Diſcourſes, written with great nobleneſs and loftineſs. The Catalogue of them is as follows,

A Diſcourſe of reigning well, ſpoken in the preſence of the Emperor Arcadius about the Year 398. when he was Deputy of his own Province that was waſted by the Barbarians Incurſions, to obtain ſome Succours, and ſome eaſe of the Emperor. Syneſius ſpeaks there of Government with a wonderful freedom, and declaims openly againſt Courtiers, againſt the Luxury and Ambition of Princes. He lays down moſt excellent Inſtructions for Kings; He ſhows what are the truly Royal Vertues, and the Qualities of a good Prince. And diſcovers at laſt the ſpring of the Empire's Misfortunes, which was the Credit and Power that was given ſome time ſince to the Goths in the Affairs of the Empire. He compoſed at the ſame time another Diſcourſe directed to Paonius, to whom he ſent Aſtronomical Tables which he had made. This Diſcourſe contains a Commendation of Philoſophy, and particularly of Aſtronomy, with a Deſcription of the Work which he ſent.

The Book Intituled Dion Pruſæus, begins with the Praiſes of that great Man, mention'd in Philoſtratus. There Syneſius juſtifies himſelf againſt thoſe that blamed him for applying himſelf to the Study of Philological Learning, and againſt ſuch as found fault that the Books he made uſe of were not very exact. He ſhews with great Eloquence, That the Study of the fine Learning of Poetry and Rhetorick is of very great Uſe, and not unworthy of a Philoſopher. Afterwards he ſtrongly oppoſes the ſecond Calumny; proving, That it is ſometimes good for the exerciſe of a Man's Parts, to uſe Copies that are not ſo very Correct.

The Praiſe of Baldneſs, is one of the moſt Ingenious of all Syneſius's Works; and though the Matter ſeems not to afford much of it ſelf, yet he enlarges and beautifies it with variety of wonderful Reaſons and Figures.

The two Books of Providence contain, the Hiſtory, or rather the Romance of two Brothers, Kings of Egypt, called Oſiris and Typhon. It is thought that he deſcribes under thoſe borrow'd Names, the State of the Empire in his time.

In the Book of Dreams, there are ſeveral curious Obſervations upon the Original, Vertue, and Significations of Dreams.

Syneſius's Letters are written with inimitable Eloquence, Pureneſs, and Dexterity: They are full of Hiſtorical Paſſages, Sublime Notions, Fine Railleries, Moral Reflections, and Pious Expreſſions. There are 155. of them: We ſhall ſpeak of thoſe only that relate to Religion, and the Church's Affairs, which are but very few.

To this may be referred what he ſaith in the Fourth Letter of a Shipwrack; He obſerves, That their Pilot was a Jew, who quitted the Helm on the Saturday's-Eve after Sun-ſet, and that he could not be perſwaded to take it again, what Threatnings ſoever were uſed, till the Ship was in an unavoidable Danger of periſhing. This Letter is of the beginning of the Year 410.

In the 5th. Letter directed to certain Prieſts, he Exhorts them to proſecute the Eunomians, and to hinder their Meetings; yet ſo, that it might appear, that they had no deſign upon their Eſtates.

In the 9th. he commends a Letter that was written by Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria.

In the 11th. he declares, How unwilling he was to be made a Biſhop, and prays God who called him to that State, to give him ſtrength to diſcharge the Duties of it with Applauſe and recommends himſelf to the Prieſts and Peoples Prayers both Publick and Private.

In the 12th. he exhorts a Prieſt and a Biſhop called Cyril, to return to the Church from which they had been divided for a time; affirming, That Theophilus, their common Father, had admitted them if he had been alive. This Letter was written after Theophilus's Death, which happened in October 412.

The 13th. is an Epiſtle written from Alexandria; wherein he aſſigns the Day to his Clergy when they were to obſerve the Feaſt of Eaſter: The Day there ſet agrees with the Year 412.

Andronicus Governor of Pentapolis, a cruel Man, exerciſed ſeveral Violences againſt the People. Syneſius, who was of a meek and merciful temper, uſed all his Endeavours to hinder that Man's Cruelties, and to help thoſe Wretches whom he tormented. Among the reſt, he ſuccoured a Man of Quality, Andronicus's Enemy, whom that inexorable Governor perſecuted without any any Cause. That charitable Action provok'd him, and made him utter in his Anger these Impious words: That that Unfortunate Man fled to the Church in vain, and that no Man should be taken out of Andronicus's hands, though he held Jesus Christ by the feet. Synesius having heard this Blasphemy, excommunicated him in a Synod held in the Year 411. and with him Thoas, the Chief Minister of all his Cruelties, with his whole Family. After this Excommunication, he pronounced a Discourse against him, which is the 57th. of his Letters. There he describes that Governor's Cruelty; He speaks of his own former Life, and with what reluctancy he accepted the Bishoprick; He bewails the deplorable Condition of his Country, declaring, That he was altogether unfit to manage a Business of that Nature; wherefore he intreats his Brethren, either to choose one in his room, or give him a Collegue that was versed in Business. Synesius.

In the 58th. Letter, he gives Notice to all Bishops in the Name of the Church of Ptolemais, That an Excommunication was pronounc'd against Andronicus, declaring, That they ought to shut their Church-Doors against him and all his Accomplices; That if any Man receives him, not regarding the Sentence of a small Church, he breaks the Unity of the Church, and that he will have no fellowship with him.

Andronicus struck with that Excommunication, seem'd to be sorry for his Fault, and promised to do Penance. Synesius knowing his humour, did not think fit to admit him; but the other ancienter Bishops were not of that Opinion, and judged that the Excommunication was to be suspended; and that they should forbear sending the Letter that declared him Excommunicated, having taken his word, That thenceforth he should not offer the like Violences. But this Governor, instead of keeping his Promise, was more Cruel than ever; So that Synesius published the Excommunication that had been pronounced, and wrote to the Bishops to give an Account of the Governor's relapse in the 72d. Letter. He makes another Description of this Governor's Violences in the 79th. But at last this cruel Man received the Punishment of his Cruelties, and was dealt withal as he had dealt with others. Synesius charitably pity'd his Condition, as he observes in the 89th. Letter to Theophilus.

In the 66th. Synesius maliciously asks Theophilus, How he should entertain Alexander, who had been ordained by St. Chrysostom, Bishop of Basinopolis in Bithynia; giving him to understand at the same time, That he approved not of his Behaviour towards those who sided with that holy Patriarch of Constantinople. He readily tells Theophilus, That he reverenc'd his Memory; and, That at least Men ought not to hate an Enemy when he is dead. He adds, That Theophilus himself had writ to Atticus, exhorting him to admit into his Communion those of St. Chrysostom's Party. That as for this, Alexander who was born at Cyrene, formerly a Monk, then raised to the Dignity of a Deacon, and a Priest, and at last ordained Bishop of Basinopolis by St. John Chrysostom, that he was withdrawn into his own Country. Synesius durst not admit him to the Communion, nor to partake of the Church's Prayers; but he received him privately into his House, and shewed him much Friendship, it being his Custom so to deal with all guilty Persons. He intreats Theophilus to answer him plainly and clearly, whether he should look upon Alexander as a Bishop, or no? This Letter is of the latter end of the Year 410. or the beginning of 411.

The 57th. to the same Theophilus, contains several remarkable Points of Discipline; shewing the Power of the Bishop of Alexandria over all Egypt. He had appointed Synesius to compose some Disputes among the Bishops of Pentapolis, and in this Letter Synesius gives him an exact account of what he had done. There were in Pentapolis two Villages, Palebiscus and Hidrax, near Libya. Both these had formerly been Subject to the Bishop of Erythra the neareſt City. Since that under Orion Bishop of Erythra, an Easie Man; the Inhabitants of both these Villages had caused a Young Man, Syderius by Name, to be ordained their Bishop, who had served in Valens's Army, that they might have a Man of Courage to protect them; without observing the Formalities requisite in a Legal Ordination, for he was ordained by one only Bishop, and without the Approbation of the Bishop of Alexandria. But this happening when the Heretical Factions were formidable, they forbore the Severity of the Laws: And St. Athanasius caused Syderius to be translated to Ptolemais; but towards the latter end of his Life, he returned to his former Church. After his Death, Palebiscus and Hydrax were reduced to their former dependency upon the Bishop of Erythra; the Inhabitants of those Places being willing, according to the Bishop of Alexandria's Letters, to own Paulus of Erythra, for their Bishop. Since that, Theophilus upon the Information of some particular Men, offered to give them a Bishop, and gave Synesius a Commission to go and ordain him. He being come to the Village, found the People resolved to have no other Bishop but Paul, and could never bring them to consent that he should ordain a particular Bishop. He writ all this to Theophilus, and insinuates, That though the Inhabitants of those Villages were ready to obey, if he would absolutely impose a Bishop upon them; yet it was not convenient to do it.

There was another Business also to be decided at Hydrax. In this Town there was a Castle situate upon an Hill, whereunto belonged a great enclosure, which might have yielded a good income, if they rebuilt the Walls which had been thrown down with an Earthquake. The dispute about it was betwixt Dioscorus Bishop of Dardania, and Paulus of Erythra: The latter to take Possession, consecrated there a Chappel, and alledged, That that place had been long since consecrated. Synesius having examined the case, found that formerly Publick Prayers had been made in that Castle during the Barbarians Incursions. But he thought that this was not Syneſius. ſufficient to make the place Sacred, becauſe that by the ſame Reaſon, all others would prove Conſecrated places, wherein Publick Prayers, and Holy Myſteries had been celebrated in time of War. As for the Chappel, it was proved that Paul had conſecrated it to make himſelf Maſter of the Place. Syneſius declared, That it was an ill Example, to make uſe of the Church's Prayers, of the Holy Table, and of the Myſtical Veil, to invade another Man's Eſtate. And ſo far from looking upon that Chappel as conſecrated, he made no Scruple of declaring it to be common. "For, ſaith he, we are to diſtinguiſh Superſtition from true Religion. Superſtition is a Vice "adorned with the Name of Vertue; but Wiſdom makes us diſcover it to be a third ſort of "Impiety: And ſo I do not think that there is any Sanctity in a thing unjuſtly undertaken; "neither do I regard the Conſecration that is alledged. It is not with Chriſtians as with Hea-"thens. They do not imagine that their God is made to come down with Words and Cere-"monies; They require a pure Heart, and free from Paſſions: And when Wrath or Anger "cauſes Miniſters to act, they do not believe that the Holy Ghoſt accompanies their Motions. Paul did not refuſe to take away the Chappel, but ſince Syneſius urged to have it done, he preſented a Petition full of Invectives againſt Dioſcorus, but he ſoon confeſſed his Fault and begg'd Pardon. Then Dioſcorus, who would yield nothing whil'ſt Paul diſputed it, propoſed of himſelf to come to an Agreement with Paul about that Caſtle, and ſo exchanged it, with ſome Lands hard by, for ſome other Lands which Paul gave him in another place, which lay more convenient for him, though of leſs Value. Syneſius gave Theophilus an account of all this, and commended Dioſcorus for relieving the Poor of Alexandria.

A Third Buſineſs that Syneſius had order to compoſe, was a Quarrel betwixt two private Perſons, Jaſon and Lamponianus; The latter being accuſed to have Slandered the other, choſe rather to confeſs, than to be convicted, and was required to do Penance, and to ſeparate from the Aſſemblies of the Faithful. The People requeſted that he might be Abſolved. Syneſius referred the Matter to the Biſhop of Alexandria, and only gave order to the Prieſts to admit him to the Communion of the Church, if he ſhould be in danger of Death: For, ſaith he, as much as in me lies, I will take Care that no man ſhall die bound with Eccleſiaſtical Bonds. He adds, That Abſolution ſhould not be granted in caſe of Neceſſity, but upon this Condition, That if he Recover, he ſhall be in the ſame State as before. Lamponianus was indebted to the Church One hundred forty ſeven Crowns of the Poor's Money, which he had loſt by ſome Misfortune, which he promiſed to pay; but required time to Work, that he might get that Summ.

Syneſius writ again to Theophilus about ſome Abuſes that were practiſed in thoſe Parts. Biſhops accuſed one another of Ill Behaviour, rather to make the Governors get Money, than becauſe they had any Grounds for ſo doing. Syneſius prays him to make an Order directed to him, whereby that Abuſe might be forbidden; but without reproving any particularly, that it might not appear that he had accuſed them. He ſaith, That with ſuch an Order, he would put a ſtop to that Infamy of Biſhops. For, ſaith he, God forbid that I ſhould ſay, the Infamy of the Church. He obſerves, That this will turn to greater Advantage for the Accuſers, than for the Accuſed, becauſe they ſhall be delivered from a greater Evil, ſince it is a greater Evil to do injury, than to ſuffer; becauſe the one comes from our ſelves, and the other concerns other Men. The laſt thing which Syneſius acquaints Theophilus withal, is concerning certain Biſhops, who quitted their Biſhopricks without being expelled, to go from Church to Church, to receive there the Honours due to their Character. His Opinion is, That they ſhould not be received, nor Precedency given them; that they might be obliged to return to their Churches. And thus, he thinks, thoſe ought to be dealt withal in Publick; as to what ſhould be done privately, he waits for an Anſwer to the Letter he writ to Theophilus, concerning Alexander, which is that now mention'd; He concludes this Letter with theſe very humble words: Pray to God for me, and you ſhall Pray for a poor forlorn Man who wants all things, and needs help, not daring to addreſs to God for himſelf; for I perceive that every thing is againſt me, ſince I undertook to Miniſter at the Altar, who am laden with Sins; who was brought up out of the Church, and followed all my life-time a Profeſſion different from this. This Letter is of the Year 411.

In the 76th. Letter Syneſius recommends to Theophilus, Antonius, who had been choſen Biſhop of Olbiata, a Town of his Province, and was going to Alexandria, to be ordained by Theophilus, according to the Cuſtom of that time.

The 95th was written by Syneſius, Seven Months after he was made Biſhop; He expreſſes, with what difficulty he accepted of the Office, and begs of God Grace to diſcharge it well.

The 105th. is that famous Letter which he writ to his Brother, when he was choſen Biſhop of Cyrene; wherein he ſets down the Reaſons that kept him from being promoted to that Dignity. The reſt of the Letters contain nothing that is remarkable touching Religion.

We have but two Homilies of Syneſius which are not entire. The Firſt is the beginning of a Homily upon God's Law, of which he underſtandeth what is ſaid in the 75th. Pſalm, In the Hand of the Lord there is a Cup, &c.

The Second is likewiſe imperfect. It is the Fragment of a Sermon preached upon Eaſter-Eve. Both theſe Fragments ſhew, That Syneſius did not excel in this kind ſo much as he did in others; yet he was Eloquent, and compoſed Pieces of Rhetorick very well; as appears by his Diſcourſe concerning the Ruine of his Province; And by his Panegyrick upon Anyſius, which come after the two Homilies now mentioned; but there is a particular ſort of Eloquence neceſſary for the Pulpit, which he ſeems not to have had. He had a better genius for Hymns; We have

have Ten of his which are very excellent, in which there are some Platonick Principles concerning the Trinity. This Author ascribes much to God's Help, and to the Grace of Jesus Christ, which he requires us to ask by fervent Prayer, that we may be delivered from those Passions and disorderly Desires of Lust, wherewith we are transported. We have lost a Philosophical Work of his, Intituled, Cynegeticks, mentioned in the 153d. Letter. Synesius.

Synesius's Stile, according to Photius's Judgment, is great and lofty, but something Poetical. He chiefly excelleth in Narratives and Descriptions. He varies the Matters which he treats of, with long Prefaces, and frequent Digressions. He makes them agreeable by excellent Passages out of Histories and Fables, and by the best Thoughts of the Profane Poets. His Philosophy hath nothing harsh or disgusting. He has found a way to render it pleasant and easie. He seems to have designed only to recreate, when he discovers the main Points of Wisdom. The Reader is brought insensibly to the Knowledge of most Important Truths, when he thought to read only pleasant Relations. He observes in his first Letter, That he writ two sorts of Books, some of the most refined Philosophy, and others Rhetorical Pieces; but that they are easily known to be all written by the same Person, who applies himself sometimes to serious things, and sometimes to pleasant ones.--And indeed, it maintains every where the same Character. His Philosophical Works are adorned with Rhetorical and Poetical Figures, and his Pieces of Eloquence are supported with Philosophical Thoughts. He had a thorough Knowledge of Plato's Writings, and from that Fountain, he drew the noblest and the sublimest Notions in the old Philosophy, concerning the Knowledge of the Supream Being, and Principles of Morality. He wrote but little touching our Religion, and he was far from understanding it so well as he did Plato's Philosophy. Yet one may see by his Letters that he was a very Wise, Prudent and good Bishop. He avoided Business as much as he could; but when he was ingaged, he acted very dexterously, and brought every thing to a good issue. His Behaviour was accompanied with great Freedom and Uprightness of Heart. He wanted neither Courage nor meekness, as there was occasion. His endeavours to avoid being a Bishop, and his manner of speaking of himself, show his great Humility. The Year of his Death is not known.

The Book of Dreams was Printed in Greek and Latin, Translated by Ficinus, at Venice in 1497. and at Lyons in 1541. In 1553. Turnebus published most of his Works in Greek. The Letters were Printed in Greek at Venice in 1499. at Basle in 1558. and at Paris in 1605. with Turnebus's Translation. The Hymns were likewise Printed in 1590. with the Poems of St. Gregory Nazianzen, and those of St. Cyril of Alexandria, and Reprinted in 1603. in Latin by Portus. In 1653. Janus Cornarius translated most of Synesius's Works, and his Translation was Printed at Basle in 1560. The Discourse of Government of the same Translation, was Printed by it self at Francfort in 1583.

At last, Petavius having review'd and translated a-new all Synesius's Works, caused them to be Printed in Greek and Latin at Paris by Morellus in 1612. With Nicephorus's Notes and Commentary upon the Book of Dreams. This Edition was corrected and augmented in 1640. wherein Synesius's Works are joined with St. Cyril's Catechetical Lectures.

POLYCHRONIUS.

POLYCHRONIUS Bishop of Apamea, Brother of Theodorus of Mopsuesta, and Disciple of Diodorus of Tarsus, writ some Commentaries upon Job and Ezekiel; whereof you may find some Fragments in the Greek Catena, and in St. John Damascen, if any Credit may be given to that sort of Quotations. There are Spurious Acts of St. Sixtus with Polychronius, dated after his Death. He lived about the latter End of the Fourth Century. Polychronius.

Councils

Councils Aſſembled,

From the Beginning of the FIFTH CENTURY, To the YEAR 430.

The Canons of a Council, ſuppoſed to have been held at Rome under Pope Innocent I.

Spurious Council of Rome, under Innocent I.

SIRMONDUS hath publiſhed ſome Regulations, written in the Name of a Synod at Rome, to the Biſhops of Gaul; which are certainly ancient, though it be unknown to what time they are to be referred: but becauſe they appeared to Sirmondus to be written in the Style of St. Innocent's Letters, he believed they might belong to this Pope however, they are placed immediately after his Letters, and theſe are the Contents of them.

After a ſhort Preface, in the two firſt Canons, according to Sirmondus's Diſtinction, they ſpeak of thoſe Virgins Penance, who having ſolemnly put on the Veil, and received the Prieſts Benediction, commit Inceſt, or contract prohibited Marriages; it is ordained, That they ſhall do ſeveral Years Penance, to bewail their Fault. Penance is likewiſe impoſed upon thoſe that made the ſingle Vow of Virginity, though they made no ſolemn Profeſſion, nor received the Veil; when they happen to Marry, or ſuffer themſelves to be taken away. The Third Canon, is, concerning the Sanctity of Biſhops, of Prieſts, and of Deacons: they are told, That they ought to give Example to the People; That they are obliged to remain Unmarried: and ſeveral Reaſons are alledged for it. Prieſts and Biſhops (ſay they) are to preach Continence to the People: With what Confidence ſhall they do this, if they keep it not themſelves? They are obliged to offer frequently the Holy Sacrifice, to Baptize, Conſecrate and Adminiſter: To do it with the greater Reverence, they muſt be Chaſt both in Body and Spirit. In the Fourth, thoſe ſeem to be excluded out of the Clergy, that have born any Secular Offices.

In the Fifth Canon, it is obſerved, That the Church of Rome doth not admit to Sacred Orders thoſe who defiled the Sanctity of their Baptiſm by any carnal Sin. In the Sixth, other Biſhops are exhorted to follow the Cuſtom of that of Rome: becauſe that as there is but One Faith in the Church, ſo there ſhould be but One Diſcipline.

It is obſerved in the Seventh Canon, That Prieſts and Deacons may adminiſter Baptiſm in the Eaſter Holy-days, in Pariſhes, in the preſence of the Biſhop, in whoſe Name they adminiſter it at that time: but when Neceſſity obliges them to Baptize at any other time, that muſt be done by the Prieſt, and not by the Deacon.

The Eighth Canon, about the Benediction of the Holy Oyl, is very obſcure. It is probable, that all that is ſaid there, amounts to no more than, That there is no need o ſeveral Perſons to Bleſs it. The Ninth declares, That it is not lawful now, as it was under the Old Law, to Marry a Brother's Wife, nor to keep Concubines with a Wife.

The Tenth forbids thoſe to be ordained Biſhops, that have exerciſed Secular Functions, though they were Choſen by the People: becauſe their Approbation is of force, only when they chuſe one worthy of that Office.

The Eleventh Canon ſpeaks very ambiguouſly concerning a Man's Marrying his Uncle's Wife; or an Aunt's Marrying with the Son of her Husband s Brother.

The Twelfth appoints, That a Biſhop ſhould be choſen out of the Clergy.

The Thirteenth declares, That thoſe who go from one Church to another, ſhall be deprived of their Office.

The

The Fourteenth contains that Order ſo often repeated in the Canons, That a Clerk depoſed by his own Biſhop, is not to be admitted. This Order is defended in very ſtrong Terms, and eſtabliſhed upon very good Reaſons. If another Biſhop's Clerk is not permitted to do the Functions of his Miniſtry, except he brought his Dimiſſory Letters; how much rather is it forbidden to receive and admit to the Communion a Clerk condemned by his own Biſhop. This would be to partake of another Man's Sin; to offer Injury to a Brother, and ſuſpect him without ground to have done Unjuſtly.

The Fifteenth Canon confirms and renews the Law of the Council of Nice, touching the Ordination of Biſhops by the Metropolitan, and the Biſhops of the Province; and forbids Biſhops to meddle with thoſe Ordinations that belong not to them.

The Sixteenth is, againſt the Abuſe of thoſe Biſhops who had Ordained ſome Lay-men that had been Excommunicated by their own Biſhop.

The Council of Milevis.

THis Council was aſſembled at Milevis, a City of Africa, the 26th. of October, 402. It is one of thoſe the Africans called General; that is, it was not compoſed of Biſhops only of one Province, but of Deputies from all the Provinces of Africa. Aurelius, Biſhop of Carthage, preſided there. The Biſhops confirmed at firſt what had been done in the laſt Councils of Hippo and Carthage; and then made ſome New Orders about ſome particular Conteſts among the African Biſhops. Council of Milevis, in cccii.

The Firſt is concerning the Precedency of the Older Biſhops. Having juſtified the Equity of following the ancient Order, according to the eſtabliſhed Cuſtom of Africa, it was ordained, to prevent the Conteſts that might happen upon that Subject, That they ſhould keep Two Liſts, which they called Matricula's, or Archives of all the Biſhops of Numidia; the one to be preſerved in the City of the chief See; that is, in Carthage, or in that City whoſe Biſhop was Metropolitan by Seniority: and the other in the Civil Metropolis; that is, in Conſtantina. This Order ſeems to have been made upon the Occaſion of that Conteſt betwixt Victorinus and Xantippus, Biſhops of the Province of Numidia, who both pretended to the Primacy of that Province, as appears by St. Auguſtin's 59th. Letter.

The Second Canon is, touching the Accuſation formed againſt Quodvultdeus, Biſhop of Centuria. His Accuſer preſented himſelf to the Synod, and cauſed Quodvultdeus to be asked, Whether he would have his Cauſe debated in the Council. The Biſhop conſented at firſt; but the next day he was of another mind, and retired. The Biſhops ordered, That he ſhould not be admitted to the Communion of the other Biſhops, till his Buſineſs was decided, yet without depriving him of his Biſhoprick; becauſe they thought it unjuſt to do it before his Cauſe was judged.

The next Order was, concerning Maximianus, Biſhop of Vaga, who offered to quit his Biſhoprick for the good of the Church, (as it is obſerved in St. Auguſtin's 69th. Letter.) The Council ordained, That a Letter ſhould be ſent both to him, and to his People, to oblige him to withdraw; and, That the People ſhould chuſe another.

The Fourth Canon is likewiſe to prevent Conteſts about the Seniority of the Biſhops; enjoyning the Biſhops Ordained in Africa, to take Teſtimonial-Letters of thoſe that Ordained them; marking both the Day and the Year of their Ordination.

The Laſt Canon forbids any Man to be admitted into the Clergy of one Church, who performed the Duty of a Reader in another.

Theſe Canons are in the Code of the African Church, from the Eighty ſixth, &c. to the Ninetieth incluſively.

Of the Councils held by St. Chryſoſtom at Conſtantinople and at Epheſus, in the Years 400, and 401.

BOth theſe Councils examined the Accuſations brought by Euſebius of Valentinople, againſt Antoninus Biſhop of Epheſus. The Hiſtory of them is in the Life of St. Chryſoſtom, (pag. 8.) of this Volume. Councils at Conſtantinople and Epheſus, by St. Chryſoſtom, cccc, & cccci.

A Council aſſembled in the Year 403. in a Suburb of Chalcedon, called, The Oak, in which St. Chryſoſtom was Condemned.

THe Hiſtory of this Synod is likewiſe in the Life of St. Chryſoſtom, (pag. 9.) It is taken out of Palladius, and out of the Abridgment of the Acts of this Council, quoted by Photius, Cod. 59th. of his Bibliotheca. Council at the Oak, againſt St. Chryſoſtom. ccccii.

The Council of Carthage, in the Year 403.

Council of Carthage, cccciii. UPON the Three and twentieth Day of Auguſt, in the Year 403. was held at Carthage a general Council of Africa, wherein the Biſhops that had been ſent to the Churches beyond the Seas, about the Donatiſts Buſineſs, having reported what they had found, and the Excuſes of thoſe Provinces that had ſent no Deputies being allowed, a Command was laid upon the Catholick Biſhops of each City, to ſend a ſort of a Summons to the Donatiſt Biſhops of the ſame Cities, to oblige them to enter upon a Conference. And that this might be done uniformly, they preſcribed a Form for this Act, which ſhould be made in the Preſence of publick Officers. Wherefore the Biſhops of this Council deſired, That the Proconſul Septimius, would ſend word to the Officers to help them in the Buſineſs, and to give them authentick Acts of thoſe Summons. This Petition is regiſtred in the Acts of the Third Conference at Carthage, in the 183 Ch. of the Third Day.

The Council of Carthage, in the Year 404.

Council of Carthage cccciv. THE Donatiſt Biſhops having anſwered theſe Summons of the Catholick Biſhops, only with Violences and Threatnings, the Catholicks aſſembled in a Council held the next Year upon the 25th. of June, deputed Theaſius, and Evodius, to the Emperors, to obtain from them ſuch Orders, as might prevent the Violences which the Circumcellians exerciſed againſt the Catholicks; and to Petition at the ſame time, that Theodoſius's Law, which impoſes Ten Pounds Penalty upon ſuch as ordained Hereticks, or admitted them into their Aſſemblies, might take place againſt thoſe who ſhould detain the Proteſtations of Catholicks; and that the Law might be renewed which diſabled Hereticks either to give, or receive Legacies. Theſe were the Contents of the Memorials, given to both thoſe deputed Biſhops. Aurelius had a Commiſſion to write to the Emperors in the Name of all the Biſhops; and they alſo charged him to write to the Judges, till the Deputies were come back to obtain of them ſome Protection for the Church; and he is deſired to write to the Biſhop of Rome about it.

The Council of Carthage, in the Year 405.

Council of Carthage ccccv. THIS Council, aſſembled upon the 21ſt. of Auguſt, made no general Canons for Africa, but only regulated ſome particular Buſineſſes, which the Collector of the African Code hath expreſſed in theſe Terms. "It was ordained in this Council, That all the Provinces "ſhould ſend their Deputies to the general Council. Deputies were ſent with a Letter to Mi-"zonius, to let him know, That he might ſend Deputies with all Freedom. It was thought "fit to write to the Judges, to entreat them, That they would uſe their Endeavours "to reconcile the Donatiſts, and the Catholicks, as had been already done at Carthage. And "they were to write to the Emperor, to thank him for excluding the Donatiſts. But Pope In-"nocent having declared in his Letter which was read in the Council, That it was not convenient "to ſend Biſhops beyond the Seas, his Advice was approved, and they ſent only Clerks of the "Church of Carthage, to return the Thanks of the African Biſhops.

The Council of Carthage, in the Year 407.

Council of Carthage, ccccvii. THIS Council, aſſembled upon the 13th. of June, made a great many very uſeful Regulations.

The Council of Hippo ordained, That a general Council of Africa ſhould Yearly be held at Carthage. This diſcharges the Biſhops of that annual Fatigue; and leaves it to the Prudence of the Biſhop of Carthage, to call one, when, and where he thought fit. This is the ſubſtance of the Firſt Canon of this Synod, which is the 95th. of the African Code. The Second ordains, That whoever appeals from an Eccleſiaſtical Judgment, may chuſe ſuch Judges as he ſhall think fit, with the Conſent of his Accuſer; and that, from their Judgment, there ſhall be no Appeal.

After this, they admitted the Deputies of the Provinces, and ordered, That Five Men ſhould be appointed to ſee the Canons put in Execution.

The Third ordains, That Vincentius, and Fortunatianus, who were deputed to the Emperor, ſhould ask leave to nominate Advocates from among thoſe that were actually in the Service of the Church, that they might have Power to maintain the Church's Intereſts, and to go in to the Judges Courts, as the Biſhops did, and make ſuch Remonſtrances as they ſhould think neceſſary.

They diſcourſed of the Deputies Power at Court; and it was judged convenient, not to preſcribe to them what they ſhould ſay there. The Deputies of the Province of Mauritania Cæſarienſis Cæsariensis complained, That enquiry having been made after Primosus to cite him to the Council, he could not be found.

The Fourth Canon, which is the 98th. in the African Code, forbids the establishing of Bishops in those Cities that had none before, without the Authority of a Metropolitan, and of a Council of the whole Province.

In the next, The People that are reconciled to the Church, and had a Bishop before their Reconciliation, are allow'd either to chuse one, or to submit themselves to the nearest Catholick Bishop. For those who had no Bishop before, they are subjected to that Bishop who converted them, if that Conversion happened before the Emperor's Law was enacted; but if since, then they must have their dependance upon their natural Bishop.

In the Sixth Canon, Judges are nominated to examine the Business of certain Deputies, who came not to the Synod, according to their Primate's Order.

In the Seventh, it is resolved to write to Pope Innocent about the Dispute betwixt the Church of Rome, and that of Alexandria, that so both those Churches might be at peace, and keep a good Correspondence with each other.

The Eighth Canon forbids divorced Persons to be married to others. This Regulation is there judged to be conformable to the Law of the Gospel, and to the Decision of the Apostle St. Paul. But since the civil Laws gave leave to the Husband, to marry after putting away his Wife, it is said, That the Emperor should be entreated to make another Law against that Custom.

The Ninth Canon prohibits the use of other publick Prayers, Prefaces, or Recommendations, or the practising of another Form of laying on of Hands, besides those which are approved by the Councils, and composed by Men of known Piety.

By the Tenth, those are to be degraded from the Honour of Priesthood, that should desire of the Emperor to be try'd by Secular Judges, but they are not restrained from desiring of him to be try'd by Ecclesiastical ones.

The Eleventh provides, That those shall be absolutely degraded, who having been Excommunicated in Africa, repaired to remote Churches, to be admitted to Communion.

The Twelfth and last Canon, which is the 106th. in the African Code, appoints, That such Clerks, or Bishops as desire to go to Court, shall be obliged to take testimonial Letters of their respective Bishop, or Metropolitan, directed to the Bishop of Rome, and containing the Reasons that bring them thither, that so the Bishop of Rome might grant them another Letter to go to the Court. It does not permit that Bishop, who had a Letter to go to Rome only, to have one from the Pope, to go to Court, except a new Business should happen, which he should acquaint the Bishop of Rome withal, and which should be mentioned in the Letter that he should give him. It is provided likewise, That in that sort of Letters, shall be set down the Day of Easter for that Year, that they may not want Date, or the Easter of the Year past, if that of the present is not exactly known.

Two Councils of Carthage, in the Year 408.

THE former of these Councils is of the 14th. of June, 408. All that is said of it in the African Code, is, That Fortunatianus was made Deputy against the Heathens, and the Hereticks. Two Councils of Carthage, ccccviij.

The latter is of the 12th. of October. There they deputed the Bishops Restitutus, and Florentius to Court, to ask for Succor against the Heathens, and Hereticks, at the same time that Severus, and Macarius were Executed, and Theasius, Evodius, and Victor were Murthered upon their Account.

The Council of Carthage, in the Year 409.

THIS Council assembled upon the 13th. of June, is not a general Council, but a particular one. There it was declared, That one Bishop alone could not give Judgment. Council of Carthage, ccccix.

The Council of Carthage, in the Year 410.

UPON the Twelfth of June 410. a Council assembled at Carthage, deputed Five Bishops to the Emperor, upon occasion of a Law of Valentinian, which granted Liberty of Conscience, that it might not prejudice the Laws made against the Hereticks of Africa. Council of Carthage, ccccx.

The

The Council of Ptolemais.

Council of Ptolemais, in cccxi.

ANDRONICUS, Governour of Pentapolis, guilty of great Oppreſſion, and Injuſtice, which he exerciſed in that Province, was Excommunicated by a Synod of Biſhops held at Ptolemais. There Syneſius made a Speech againſt him. But this Governour having ask'd Pardon, and promiſed to behave himſelf otherwiſe, the publiſhing of the Sentence of the Synod was ſuſpended. There is an Account of this Matter in the Abridgment of the 57th 58th. and 72d. Letters of Syneſius. Mention is made alſo of Aſſemblies of ſome Biſhops, in the 67th. Letter of the ſame Author.

The Conference at Carthage.

Conference of Carthage, in cccxi.

THE Catholick Biſhops had often demanded, ever ſince the Year 403. a Conference with the Donatiſt Biſhops, to examine the Reaſons which theſe pretended for their Separation from the Church in an amicable manner. The Donatiſt Biſhops had conſtantly refuſed it, till the Year 406. and then conſented to have one. They cauſed this Deſign to be authorized by an Order of the Emperor Honorius, diſpatched at Ravenna the 14th. of October 410. Count Marcellinus was nominated Preſident; and for the Execution of that Order, Two Rules were made; the one to appoint the Day of the Conference, and the other to fix the manner of Proceedings, and to oblige the Biſhops of both ſides, to declare whether they accepted of it.

The Conference began at Carthage upon the Firſt Day of June 411. The Donatiſt Biſhops met there to the Number of 278. and the Catholicks were 286.

Marcellinus ordered, That Seven Biſhops of each Party ſhould be choſen to ſpeak, of whom the chiefeſt of the Catholicks were St. Auguſtin, and Alypius, and that beſides theſe, Seven ſhould be named to aſſiſt as Councellors, and Four to over-look, that the Notaries ſhould faithfully ſet down what ſhould be ſaid. He commanded alſo, That every one ſhould ſet his Hand to what he aſſerted; and that whatſoever was done ſhould be communicated to the People. He ordered, That the Thirty Six deputed Biſhops ſhould be admitted into the Place of the Conference. But the Donatiſts would be all there; and the Catholicks were contented, that their Eighteen Deputies only ſhould be preſent.

The Firſt Day was ſpent in perſonal Conteſts, concerning the Biſhop's Qualifications. Marcellinus confeſſed at Firſt, That it was above his capacity to be a judge of that Cauſe; and that it ſhould rather be decided by thoſe, of whoſe Diſputes he undertook to judge. He cauſed the Emperor's Letter to be read, whereby he was appointed to be Judge. He promiſes them not to judge of any thing that ſhould not be clearly proved by either Party. He gave the Donatiſts leave to chuſe one to be judge with him of that Cauſe.

Nothing Remarkable was done in the Second Meeting on the 3d. of June. The Donatiſts having deſired time to examine the Acts of the Firſt, Marcellinus granted it to them, and adjourned the Conference to the Eighth Day of that Month.

An Accident happened about the manner of their Seſſion. Marcellinus having deſired the Biſhops to ſit down, the Donatiſts pretended, That it was forbiden by Scripture. The Catholick Biſhops would not keep their Seats, while the Donatiſt Biſhops were ſtanding. Marcellinus, out of Reſpect to the Biſhops, cauſed his Seat to be taken away.

In the Eighth Day of the Third Seſſion, the Donatiſts diſputed long about the Qualities of Oppoſers, and Defenders. But at laſt, St. Auguſtin obliged them to come to the main Queſtion, which was, Where was the Catholick Church? The Donatiſts confeſſed, That that was it, which was ſpread throughout the whole Earth; and ſo they had only now to examine Which Party was united with the Churches of other Parts of the World: And in this Point, the Catholicks had the upper hand. To divert the Queſtion, the Donatiſts deſired, That the Acts which they had in their Hands might be read: And ſo they entered upon the Examination of Cæcilian's caſe. They preſented a Memorial, wherein they affirmed, That the Faults of every particular Member, infected a whole Community; and conſequently, that Cæcilian being guilty, the Catholicks were in the wrong for keeping with him, and that they had a ſufficient Reaſon to divide from him. This was the Point in Queſtion. St. Auguſtin anſwered it fully, proving out of Holy Scripture, that the Church upon Earth will always conſiſt of good and evil Members. He confirmed that Propoſition by St. Cyprian's Authority, and urged the Donatiſts Example againſt themſelves, alledging their Behaviour towards the Maximianiſts. After this, St. Auguſtin concludes, That though Cæcilian had been guilty, yet that argued nothing againſt the Cauſe of the Church.

Yet Marcellinus would have it examined, Whether he was really Guilty: His Innocence was proved, as well as that of Felix of Aptungis, who ordained him by Acts of the Judgments given in their behalf, whereby they had been pronounced guiltleſs of the Crimes lay'd to their Charge.

The

The Fourth Conference being ended, and the Biſhops of both ſides withdrawn, Marcellinus gave Judgment for the Catholicks, whom he declared Conquerors; and the Biſhops being called in, he read it to them.

The Council of Cirta, or Zerta.

THIS Council was aſſembled at Cirta, or rather Zerta, in June 412. The Council writ a Synodical Letter, to refute the falſe Rumours which the Donatiſts had ſpread abroad concerning the Conference at Carthage. This Letter is the 141ſt. amongſt St. Auguſtin's Letters. Council of Cirta, in ccccxij.

The Firſt Council of Carthage, againſt Cœleſtius.

COELESTIUS came from Rome, to Carthage, with a Deſign to be there ordained Prieſt in the Year 411. But his Error being diſcovered by Paulinus the Deacon, who formerly had been a Reader in the Church of Milan, he was put off to a Council of Carthage, held about the latter end of the Year 411, or the beginning of 412. by Aurelius Biſhop of Carthage. He was particularly asked, Whether he believed original Sin. He would never acknowledge it as a matter of Faith; and affirmed, before the Council, that ſeveral Catholicks held, That Children were not born in Sin, but in the ſame State wherein Adam was, before he had offended God. The Biſhops of this Council being not able to make him alter his Opinion, Excommunicated him, and he was forced to leave Africa. St. Auguſtin relates ſome Fragments of the Acts of this Council, in the Second Book of Grace, and Original Sin. Marius Mercator hath alſo written the Hiſtory of that Council. Council I. of Carthage againſt Cœleſtius, in ccccxj.

The Conference of Jeruſalem.

PELAGIUS, Cœleſtius's Tutor, being retired into Paleſtine, was well received by John of Jeruſalem, who had protected Rufinus, whoſe Diſciple Pelagius was: But Paulus Oroſius being then in that Country, and being well acquainted with Pelagius, and Cœleſtius's Errors, with the judgments given againſt the latter, and with the Writings both of St. Jerom, and of St. Auguſtin againſt them, accuſed Pelagius in a Synod, or rather in a Conference held at Jeruſalem the 30th. of July, in the Year 415. in the preſence of John, Biſhop of that City, who cauſed Pelagius though a Lay-Man, to come in, and ſhewed him much Reſpect. Oroſius having oppoſed to him both St. Jerom, and St. Auguſtin's Authority, it was little regarded. He then accuſed him of believing, That Man may be without Sin. John of Jeruſalem affirmed, That if he maintained that Man could be free from Sin, without God's Help, that was indeed impious, but ſince he acknowledged that Man needeth divine Succour, he could not be accuſed: And he asked Oroſius, whether he would deny the Aſſiſtance of God. Oroſius profeſſed, that he did not, and anathematized all thoſe that ſaid it; but he ſaw, that they underſtood not one another, and that the Interpreter was not Faithful; ſo that he was obliged to ſay, That Pelagius was an Heretick; and that they ought to ſend him to thoſe Judges that underſtood Latin; and that John having declared himſelf, his Protector could not be his Judge. After ſeveral Altercations it was agreed, that they ſhould write to Pope Innocent about it. In the mean time, Oroſius coming to John, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, Seven and forty Days after, was called by him Heretick, and Blaſphemer; having affirmed, That Man could not be without Sin, no not with God's Grace. Oroſius gives an Account of this whole Matter, in his Apology; which certainly, is an Ancient Monument. Conference of Jeruſalem, in ccccxv.

The Council of Dioſpolis.

HEROS, and Lazarus, Two Biſhops of Gaul, who had been obliged to quit, the one the Biſhoprick of Arles, and the other, that of Aix, and to retire into the Eaſt, joined with Oroſius, to accuſe Pelagius; and drew up a Petition, containing the Errors whereof they accuſed him, which they pretended to be taken out of his Books, and maintained by Cœleſtius his Diſciple. This Accuſation was preferr'd to a Synod of Fourteen Biſhops, held at Dioſpolis, anciently called Lydda, a City of Paleſtine. Eulogius of Cæſarea was Preſident, and John of Jeruſalem held the Second Place. Though they were abſent, yet their Petition was read; (for one of them was very ſick at that time) and they queſtioned Pelagius about the Errors alledged againſt him. This Man anſwered all the Heads of his Accuſation, by diſowning all the Errors imputed to him, or by giving a Catholick Sence in appearance, to what either Cœleſtius, or himſelf had aſſerted. Whereupon, the Synod abſolved him, as having ſufficiently anſwered the Charge of his Adverſaries. St. Auguſtin produces the Acts of this Council, in the Book of Pelagius's Acts; and there is an Abridgment of them in his 106th. Letter. He makes uſe alſo, of the Authority of the Fathers of this Council againſt Julianus. St. Proſper likewiſe Council of Dioſpolis, in ccccxviij.

quotes the Fathers of this Council with high commendation, for condemning Pelagius's Errors. Yet St. Jerom calleth this Council, a Pitiful Aſſembly, becauſe they ſuffered themſelves to be impoſed upon by Pelagius's Diſſimulation.

A Second Council of Carthage againſt Pelagius and Cœleſtius.

The Council of Milevis againſt the ſame.

Counc. II. of Carthage, and of Milevis, againſt Pelagius and Cœleſtius in ccccxvj

HEros and Lazarus were not contented to accuſe Pelagius before the Council of Dioſpolis, but they gave Oroſius Letters directed to the Biſhops of Africa; who, as they well knew, were leſs favourable to Cœleſtius and Pelagius. Theſe without receiving thoſe Letters, aſſembled both at Carthage, and at Milevis; where they condemned the Opinions attributed to Cœleſtius and Pelagius, and decreed, That the Authors of ſuch Doctrines were to be Anathematized, unleſs they condemned their Errors very clearly. The Biſhops of both theſe Councils writ to Pope Innocent, to authorize their Deciſion by the Concurrence of the See of Rome: Their Letters were followed by another from five Biſhops, who writ by themſelves to the Pope about the ſame Subject. Theſe Letters are the 175th. 176th. and the 177th. among St. Auguſtin's Letters. The Pope anſwered them, and approved the Judgment of the African Biſhops; as appears by his Letters dated the 25th. of January 417.

The Council of Carthage, held about the latter end of the Year 417.

Council of Carthage in ccccxvij.

THe Biſhops of Africa having received Zoſimus's Letter, aſſembled about the latter end of the Year 417. to deliberate about what they ſhould do. They anſwered him immediately, That he was to blame, for offering to retract the Cauſe of Pelagius and Cœleſtius, which had been judged, and proteſted againſt whatſoever he might do in their behalf, without hearing them. This Letter is not extant, but it is mention'd in the 3d. Letter which Zoſimus writ to them. After the firſt ſtep, they collected all that had been done againſt Cœleſtius; and having confirmed the ſame, they ſent it to Pope Zoſimus by the Subdeacon Marcellinus: and further, they deputed Biſhop Vindemialis to carry it to Court. To this Synod muſt be referred what Proſper ſaith in his Chronicon upon the Year 418. and elſewhere, That it conſiſted of Two hundred and fourteen Biſhops. They wrote a long Letter to the Pope; wherein they complained, That he did too eaſily believe Cœleſtius; telling him, That he ſhould have been obliged to revoke his Errors by Name. They diſcovered the Evaſions which he uſed to elude the difficulty, by equivocal Terms. They ſent him a Memorial of thoſe Errors, whereof they were to exact of him a clear and preciſe Condemnation; and exhorted him to maintain what was done by his Predeceſſor. Father Queſnel believes, not without probability, That in this Synod were concluded the Nine Canons concerning Grace; which are commonly aſcribed to the Council of Milevis. But if they were propoſed in this Council, they were not concluded upon nor ſubſcribed till that which was Aſſembled in May next Year, to which the Code of African Canons attribute them. The Endeavours of the Africans had good Succeſs; for the Emperor Honorius made an Edict againſt Pelagius and Cœleſtius, the laſt day of April, 418. And ſhortly after, Pope Zoſimus publiſhed, as we have ſaid, his Sentence againſt them.

The Council of Carthage in the Year 418.

Council of Carthage in ccccxviij.

THe African Biſhops willing to confirm what they had done againſt Pelagius and Cœleſtius, Aſſembled upon the Firſt day of May of the Year 418. and made Eight Canons againſt the Pelagian Errors, and ſome other Orders about the Buſineſs of the Donatiſts.

The Firſt pronounceth an Anathema againſt any who dares affirm, That Adam was created Mortal; ſo that he muſt have died, whether he had ſinned or not, becauſe his Death was not an Effect of Sin, but a Law of Nature.

The Second likewiſe declares an Anathema againſt ſuch as deny, That Children ought to be baptized as ſoon as they are Born; or ſuch as own that they may be baptized, and yet affirm, That they are born without Original Sin.

In ſome places there is a Third Canon, which is an Addition to this; wherein thoſe that affirm That there is a particular place, where Children dead without Baptiſm do live happily, are condemned; and to this Notion is oppoſed what our Saviour ſaith, That none can enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, except he be regenerate of Water and the Holy Spirit. Photius citeth this Canon in his Collection. It is found in another Manuſcript, and in the Code of the Romiſh Church, publiſhed by Father Queſnel. And laſtly, St. Auguſtin ſeems to own it, when he ſays, That the difference which the Pelagians made betwixt Eternal Life and the Kingdom of Heaven, had been condemned in an African Council; yet this Canon is not found in the ancient Code of the African Church. The Collectors of this Canon have not own'd it, and in the Chapters about Grace attributed to Pope Cœleſtine, the 3d, 4th, and 5th. Canons are cited, which ſhould be be the 4th, 5th, and 6th, if this were the Third. Perhaps this Canon was added, or look'd upon as an Explication of the foregoing.

The Third Canon in the common Editions pronounces Anathema againſt all that ſhould ſay, That the Grace which juſtifies Man through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, doth only remit Sins committed; but that it is not given to ſuccour Man that he may Sin no more.

The Fourth expounds the Nature of this Grace, by condemning thoſe who ſhould ſay, That it doth no further help us, than as it gives us the knowledge of what we ought to do, but not by enabling us to fulfil the Commandments, which it gives us the knowledge of.

The Fifth is againſt thoſe that hold, That Grace is given only that we may do that which is good with leſs difficulty; becauſe one may abſolutely accompliſh the Commandments by the Power of his Free-Will, without the help of Grace.

The Sixth declares, That St. John did not ſay merely out of Humility; If we ſay that we have no Sin, we deceive our ſelves.

The contrary Truth is confirmed in the Seventh Canon, by theſe words of the Lord's Prayer, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, &c. And they are condemned who affirm, That the Righteous do not ſay this Prayer for themſelves, but for others.

In the Eighth there is a Condemnation of another way of eluding the force of theſe words, by ſaying, That the Righteous pray out of Humility, but not truly. It is ſaid, That God would never endure that Man who in his Prayers ſhould lye not only to Men, but to God himſelf; by asking with his Mouth, That God would forgive his Sins, and ſaying in his Heart that he had none.

After theſe Eight Canons concerning Grace, ſome Orders are ſet down.

The Firſt, Is to reform the Fifth Canon of the Council of Carthage in the Year 407. whereby it was Enacted, That thoſe Biſhops who converted any Donatiſts, ſhould have the Juriſdiction over them. This Order having bred ſome Diſputes, it was thought fit here to reform it; and it is enjoyn'd, That in what place ſoever any Donatiſts are reconciled, they ſhall be of the ſame Dioceſs with the Catholicks of that place.

When there were two Biſhops in the ſame place, namely, The ancient Catholick and the reconciled Donatiſt, it might occaſion ſeveral Difficulties, which the Council prevents in the next Canon, which enjoins, That the junior Biſhop ſhall make a diviſion of thoſe places where there were many Catholicks and Donatiſts, and that the ſenior ſhall have his choice. That if there is but one place where the Catholicks and Donatiſts were intermixt, that Place ſhall belong to that Biſhop of the two, the place of whoſe reſidence is the neareſt; That if they prove equally diſtant, the Choice ſhall be left to the People. And if the ancient Catholicks deſire to have their own Biſhop, and the reconciled, him they had before, then the Majority of voices ſhall carry it; but if they be equal, then the ſenior ſhall have the Precedency. Laſtly, If the Places cannot be equally divided; As for example, if the number of Diviſions ſhould be odd, then two equal Diviſions ſhall be made, and the Place over and above ſhall bediſpoſed of, as is ſaid juſt before.

In the Third Rule it is provided, That whoſoever hath enjoy'd a place Three Years, ſhall remain in quiet Poſſeſſion, if there be a Biſhop in the Church of that Dioceſs, where naturally he ought to have been.

The Fourth is againſt thoſe Biſhops who violently took Poſſeſſion of the Juriſdiction of ſuch places as they pretended to be of their Dioceſſes, without having the matter in Diſpute adjudged by Biſhops.

The Firſt ordains, That thoſe that ſhall neglect to procure the Re-union of places dependent from their Dioceſſes, ſhall be put in mind of it by the Neighbouring Biſhops; That if they are not converted within Six Months after ſuch Admonition, they ſhall belong to the Dioceſs of that Biſhop that can convert them; if it appears that the Biſhop of the place hath neglected it. It is added, That if a Conteſt happens betwixt two Biſhops of different Provinces, the Metropolitan of the Province where the place in diſpute is ſituated ſhall appoint Judges, or the Parties ſhall chooſe one, or three.

This gives occaſion for renewing the Canon, which forbids any Appeal to be made from the judgment of Judges thus choſen.

It is enacted by the Seventh Order, That a Biſhop neglecting to reconcile the Donatiſts that are in his Dioceſs, ſhall be admoniſhed, and if they be not reconciled in Six Months, they ſhall not communicate with him until he hath reconciled them. Provided always, That he who had the execution of the Emperor's Orders was in his Province.

It is added in the Eighth, That if it be proved, that any Biſhop affirmed that theſe Donatiſts were come into the Communion of the Church, and it was not ſo, he ſhall loſe his Biſhoprick.

The Ninth enjoins, That if the Prieſts, Deacons, and other Clerks, complain of their Biſhop's Judgments, they ſhall be judged by the Neighbouring Biſhops, with the conſent of their own; That if they appeal from this Judgment, it muſt be to the Council of Africa, and it Excommunicates thoſe that ſhall make their Appeals to Judges beyond the Seas.

The Tenth contains an Exception from that Prohibition of veiling a Virgin before the Age of Five and twenty, when being in danger of Death, ſhe deſires it, or her Parents for her.

Laſtly, That they might not too long detain the Biſhops out of their Dioceſſes, they choſe three out of each Province, and gave them Power to order all things with Aurelius, who is deſired to Subſcribe the Canons and Rules now mentioned; which were alſo Subſcribed by all the Biſhops.

Of

Of the Council of Tella, or Zella, and of ſome other Councils of Africa.

Council of Tella, or Zella, &c. cccxviij.

AMong the African Councils, is reckoned one held the 22d. of February in the Year 418. at Tella or Zella; whereof a Decree is produced which confirms the Fourth Letter attributed to Pope Syricius, and under whoſe Name ſome Canons are found in the Collection of Ferrandus the Deacon. They do not agree about the Name of the place where this Council was celebrated. It is ſaid in the beginning, That it was Aſſembled at Tella; ſome think that it ſhould be Zella, inſtead of Tella; becauſe ſome Canons are quoted under that Name by Ferrandus.

Sirmondus thinks that we ſhould read Telepta, becauſe Donatianus of Telepta preſided; yet all Editions conſtantly call this the Council of Tella, and we read in the Notitia, of the Proconſular Province of Africa, that there was a City called Tella in that Province, which was a Biſhops See. This City differs from Telepta, and from Zella, which were in the Province of Byzacena. And though Ferrandus citeth Canons under the Name of a Council of Tella and Zella, yet it doth not follow, that he believed it to be the ſame Council; on the contrary, it is probable, that the Canons Regiſtred in his Collection under different Names, were made by different Councils.

But it is very likely, as Father Queſnel hath obſerved, That both the Council of Tella, and the Canons Regiſtred in Ferrandus under that Name, are Suppoſititious.

For, Firſt, Tella being a City of the Proconſular Province, what likelihood is there that a Council of the Province of Byzacena ſhould be called there? and that Donatianus the Metropolitan of Byzacena ſhould Preſide in it?

Secondly, Is it credible, That a numerous Council ſhould be Aſſembled in February, at a time that a General Synod of Africa was Summoned for the Month of May?

Thirdly, Wherefore do they ſuppoſe that the Legates of the Proconſular Province ſhould aſſiſt at a Council of the Province of Byzacena?

Fourthly, This Council is ſuppoſed to have been Aſſembled to receive the Fourth Letter of Pope Syricius. This Letter is Spurious as we have ſhewed, and though it were not, How unlikely is it, that the Africans would go about to confirm it ſo late? Is there any Example of their ſo doing? What reaſon had they to do it? Why ſhould they make uſe of the Pope's Letter written ſeveral Years before to make Regulations by?

In the Fifth place, Some of the Canons in Ferrandus's Collection, under the Name of the Council of Tella, do not ſuit with the African Cuſtoms. That in the 6th. Ch. forbids ONE Biſhop alone to ordain another Biſhop, except the Biſhop of Rome. The African Biſhops had been far enough from approving this Exception ſo contrary to the Canons, and to Cuſtom. The others are taken out of Syricius's Epiſtle againſt the African's pertinacioufneſs, who did not own the Canons of other Churches, except thoſe of the Council of Nice, and ſuch as had been made in African Councils. As for the other Canons cited under the Name of the Council of Tella, or Zella, they may be true, and it is probable that they are of another Council; namely, Thoſe that are in the 3d. 16th. 65th. 68th. and 218th. Chapters. The others are in the 4th. 6th. 30th. 138th 174th. Chapters.

There is mention in this Council, of another Council held at Thisdry, under whoſe Name there are two Canons in Ferrandus the Deacon's Collection, Ch. 76th, and 77th. In this Collection there are likewiſe ſome Canons of other African Councils, of which we have no other knowledge. The Learned Baluzius collected them in his new Collection of ſuch Councils as were omitted in the preceding Collections. Vol. 1. Page 366. and 367.

Council of Carthage in the Years 418. and 419. Concerning the Cauſe of Apiarius.

Councils of Carthage concerning Apiarius, in cccxviij & cccxix.

URbanus Biſhop of Sicca, a City of Mauritania Cæſarienſis, and formerly St. Auguſtin's Diſciple, did both degrade and excommunicate Apiarius, a Presbyter, as one that had been unlawfully ordained. This man repaired to Pope Zoſimus, who received him kindly, and admitted him to the Communion. This Pope's action, contrary to the Rules of the Church, that forbid Biſhops to receive thoſe Clerks that are excommunicated by their Brethren, amazed the African Biſhops. But Zoſimus ſeeking an opportunity to extend his Dominion and increaſe his Authority, would not let this occaſion ſlip. Wherefore he ſent Legates into Africa, a Biſhop called Fauſtinus, and two Prieſts, Aſellius and Philip; not only to cauſe Apiarius to be reſtored, but alſo to make them admit of the Canons of the Council of Sardica, concerning the Appeals of Biſhops to the See of Rome, and the Judgments of Clerks.

The Africans ſeeing that the Pope undertook to protect Apiarius, judged it more convenient to accommodate the buſineſs; and ſo they found this Medium, to put him out of the Church of Sicca, and give him leave to do the Functions of his Order any where elſe. But before they came to a concluſion, ſuſpecting that Zoſimus's Legats were not come into Africa without ſome Deſign, they urged them to give an account of their Commiſſion. At firſt they would have made ſome Propoſals of their own; but the Africans without heſitation, deſired to ſee the Writings of their Commiſſion, and ſo they were obliged to read the Memorial of their Inſtructions; which contained contained four Heads. The Firſt was, touching Appeals to the See of Rome. The Second, To hinder Biſhops from going to Court. The Third, That Prieſts ſhould be permitted to have their Cauſes examined by Neighbouring Biſhops. By the Fourth they were commanded, either to Excommunicate Urbanus Biſhop of Sicca, or to cite him to Rome, except he retracted what he had done. The Second Head admitted no Diſpute; becauſe the African Biſhops had already enacted, That neither Biſhops nor Prieſts ſhould go to Court. They anſwered the Fourth, by compoſing the buſineſs as we have ſaid; ſo that only the Firſt and the Third remained to be decided, and they were of great conſequence. The Pope's Legates alledged to ſupport their Pretenſions, the Canons of the Council of Sardica, which allow Appeals to the See of Rome for Biſhops condemned by a Provincial Synod, and permit a Clerk condemned by his own Biſhop, to appeal to the Biſhops of the Neighbouring Provinces.

Though the Africans had no knowledge of theſe Canons, yet becauſe the Pope's Legates poſitively urged them, they promiſed, out of the reſpect they paid to that Council, to obſerve the Canons, until they were inform'd whether they were belonging to the Council of Nice, or no. This was their reſolution in the firſt Council held about that buſineſs at Carthage in Autumn of the Year 418. which they acquainted Zoſimus withal.

After this Pope's Death, The Biſhops of Africa being aſſembled in an Univerſal Synod at Carthage the 23d. day of May, to the number of 217. Fauſtinus the Pope's Legate ſitting in that Synod, next after Aurelius Biſhop of Carthage, and Valentinus Metropolitan of Numidia, and Aſellius and Philippus the Prieſts after the Biſhops, the Canons of the Council of Nice were read, as they had the Copies of them on both ſides. The Africans not finding in their Code the Canons which the Pope's Legates affirmed to have been enacted by the Council of Nice, Alypius propoſed, That they ſhould ſend Deputies to the Biſhops of Conſtantinople, Alexandria, and Antioch, to clear this diſpute, by taking Copies of the true Acts of the Council of Nice: This Advice was approved, and they concluded, that in the mean time they ſhould obſerve the Contents of thoſe Canons: And they reſolved to write to Pope Boniface about what they had done, and to pray him to write to the Eaſtern Patriarchs; That this Point might be cleared. This being done, they repeated the Creed and the Twenty Canons of the Council of Nice, according to the Copy which Cæcilian Biſhop of Carthage, had brought from that Council whereat he aſſiſted. They added to theſe, Three and thirty other Canons conformable to thoſe of the Council of Nice. The Firſt is only an Advertiſement of Aurelius, concerning the Canons of the Council of Nice. The Second is a Confeſſion of the Holy Trinity. The Third confirms the Rule of the Council of Carthage of the Year 401. concerning the Celibacy of Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons. It is ſaid, That their Miniſtery obligeth them to it. Fauſtinus confirms this Order in the Fourth Canon. The Fifth is againſt the Covetouſneſs of the Clergy, that uſurp upon their Brethren. The Sixth reneweth the Law which forbids the Prieſts to conſecrate the holy Chriſm, and to reconcile Penitents publickly, and to conſecrate Virgins. The Eighth gives a Prieſt leave to reconcile Penitents in caſes of neceſſity. The Ninth provides that the Accuſation of one that is guilty of any Crime ſhall not be admitted againſt a Biſhop. The next is againſt either Biſhops or Prieſts, who receive a Perſon excommunicated by his Biſhop, without his conſent.

Both the Tenth and the Eleventh pronounce an Anathema againſt thoſe Prieſts, who being reproved by their Biſhops, are ſo bold as to raiſe an Altar againſt an Altar, or make a Schiſm.

The Twelfth ſettleth the neceſſary number of Judges, to decide Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes. A Biſhop is to be judged by Twelve Biſhops; A Prieſt, by Six Biſhops, with his reſpective Biſhop; and a Deacon by Three only. The Thirteenth Canon reneweth the ancient Laws about Biſhops Ordinations; namely, That a Biſhop cannot be ordained without the Primate's conſent; and that three Biſhops at the leaſt muſt be preſent at the Ordination. In the Fourteenth, there is an Exception of the Twelfth for the Province of Tripolis, where there were few Biſhops, declaring, That in this Province a Prieſt may be judged by Five Biſhops, and a Deacon by Two: and for the ſame reaſon, they ſay, That one Deputy may ſerve.

To maintain Eccleſiaſtical Authority among Clerks, The Fifteenth forbids them to make their Complaints before Civil Judges, when they are cited before Eccleſiaſtical ones; and in caſe they do, though they get the better, yet they muſt be depoſed, if it be a Criminal buſineſs; and if it be a Civil Matter, they ſhall loſe what they have got. It was alſo provided by theſe Canons, That if the Sentence of the firſt Eccleſiaſtical Judges, was reverſed by a Superiour Judgment; yet this ſhall do no Prejudice to the former Judges, except they are convicted of having given Judgment out of Paſſion or Favour. It is added, That there can be no Appeal from choſen Judges, though they were fewer in Number than is appointed. Laſtly, Prieſt's Children are forbidden to exhibit Publick Spectacles, or to be preſent at any; They declare alſo, That the ſame ought to be forbidden all Chriſtians.

The Sixteenth forbids Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons to be Farmers, Attornies, or to get their Living by any ſordid Commerce. Readers are obliged to Marry when they come to the Age of Puberty, or to make a Vow of Continency. Clerks are not to take Uſe for Money Lent. They will not have Deacons to be ordained, nor Virgins conſecrated before they are Five and twenty Years old. Laſtly, Deacons are forbidden to Salute the People; That is, to ſpeak to the People in Reading, as Biſhops were wont to do in Preaching.

The 17th. grants to the Province of Sileſia, that had been ſeparated from Numidia, the Right of having a Primate, or Metropolitan, but dependent upon the Primate of Numidia.

The 18th. enjoyns, That Biſhops Ordaining either Biſhops or Clerks, ſhall make them underſtand the Canons. It forbids the giving the Euchariſt to the Dead, and renews the Order of the Council of Nice, about the Celebration of Provincial Councils.

The 19th. ordains, That whoſoever accuſes a Biſhop, muſt do it before his Metropolitan; who ſhall cite him to appear within a Month before him, and before the Judges whom he hath choſen: That in the mean time the Biſhop ſhall not be ſuſpended from the Communion: That if at the Month's end he gives good Reaſons for his not appearing, he ſhall have another Month; but if he doth not appear at his ſecond Summons, he ſhall be ſuſpended from the Communion until he hath juſtified himſelf: and, That if afterwards he comes not to the Univerſal Council, he ſhall be look'd upon as having condemned himſelf: That the Accuſer is not to be kept from Communicating, if he appears upon all Set-days; but upon his withdrawing, he ſhall be ſuſpended, but yet ſo as not to hinder his Proſecution. Laſtly, They forbid the admitting of a noted Perſon to form an Accuſation, except it be concerning his particular Intereſt. The 20th. gives Rules for the Judgment of Prieſts and Deacons; but other Clerks are left to the ſole Judgment of the Biſhop.

The 21ſt. forbids Clergy-mens Sons to Marry Heretical or Heatheniſh Wives. The 22d. hinders Clerks to give their Eſtates to Hereticks, though they were their Parents. The 23d. forbids Biſhops to go out of Africa without leave from the Metropolitan of their reſpective Province, from whom they are to receive a formed Letter, or a Letter of Recommendation. The 24th. prohibits the Reading of any other beſides Canonical Books in the Church, whereof the Catalogue there ſet down agrees with that of the Council of Trent. It is noted at the latter end of this Canon, That the Contents thereof are to be notified to Boniface, and the Biſhops of Italy, that they may confirm it: and that the African Church hath learned from her Father's Tradition, That the Books expreſſed in that Catalogue, ought to be read in the Church. The 25th. confirms the Law of Celibacy, for the Superior Orders; and it extends it to Subdeacons, but other Clerks are left at their liberty.

The 26th. forbids the Selling the Goods of the Church, or of Biſhops, without the Metropolitan's leave, unleſs there be an urgent Neceſſity; in which caſe they are to adviſe with the neareſt Biſhops.

The 27th. provides, That Prieſts and Deacons ſhall not be put to publick Penance; and, That ſuch as were Re-baptized, ſhall not be promoted to the Prieſthood. The 28th. forbids thoſe Prieſts and Deacons who find fault with the Judgments of their own Biſhops, to ſeek for Judges out of Africa; but they are permitted to have their Cauſe examined by neighbouring Biſhops, but with the Conſent of their own Biſhop: wherein this Canon differs from that of Sardica, which gave Clerks leave indifferently to chuſe neighbouring Biſhops for their Judges, without ſeeking for the Conſent of their own Biſhop.

The 29th. declares, That he condemneth himſelf, by ſuffering himſelf to be Excommunicated by an Eccleſiaſtical Judgment, who neglects to appear, and yet doth not forbear Communicating before he is heard. The 30th. ſaith, That if the Accuſer hath ſome reaſon to fear any thing in the place where the Accuſed dwelleth, he may chuſe a place hard-by to produce his Witneſſes.

The 31ſt. puniſhes thoſe Clerks who refuſe to be promoted to Superior Orders by their Biſhops, by depriving them of the Functions of their Miniſtery. The 32d. declares, That the Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, who being poor when they were Ordained, have afterwards purchaſed Eſtates out of the Churches Revenue, ought to be dealt withal like thoſe who detain other Mens Eſtates unlawfully gotten, except they bequeath them to the Church: but they are permitted to do what they pleaſe with ſuch Eſtates as come to them either by Succeſſion or by Donation. Finally, The 33d. and laſt forbids Prieſts to Sell the Churches Goods unknown to the Biſhops; and the Biſhops, without acquainting the Council and their Prieſts with it: even the Metropolitan is not permitted to uſurp what belongs to his Church. This is what was enacted in the Firſt Seſſion of this Council. Afterwards the Canons of former African Councils were read, in the ſame order in which we ſee them in the Code of the African Church.

The laſt Seſſion of this General Council was upon the 28th. of May, of the ſame Year. Several Biſhops complained, That they were kept there too long, and ſo deſired to return to their Dioceſſes: wherefore they nominated Deputies of each Province to compleat what remained yet to do; but before they ſeparated themſelves, they added Six Canons more to the former. The 1ſt. forbids the receiving the Accuſation of an accuſed Perſon. In the 2d. they would not have ſuch admitted for Accuſers as are Slaves, or Freed-men, nor infamous Perſons, as Mimicks, or Stage-Players, no more than Hereticks and Heathens. In the 3d. it is provided, That if the Accuſation conſiſts of ſeveral Heads, and the Accuſer cannot prove the Firſt, he ſhall not be ſuffered to propoſe the reſt.

The 4th. preſcribes the Qualifications of Witneſſes, according to what hath been ſaid of Accuſers; that is, That whoſoever was not qualified to be an Accuſer, could not be admitted for a Witneſs: adding, That the Domeſticks of an Accuſer could not be Witneſſes, nor ſuch as were under the Age of Thirteen Years.

The 5th. provides, That if a Biſhop declares that ſuch a Perſon hath confeſſed a Crime to him alone, and that Perſon denies it, and refuſes to do Penance; that Biſhop ought not to think that Injury is done to him, if the thing is not believed upon his Word, though he ſaith, That he will not Communicate with that Perſon, out of a Scruple of Conſcience. The next

Canon

Canon adds, That in this caſe, if the Biſhop will not communicate with that Perſon, the other Biſhops ſhall not communicate with that Biſhop; that ſo Biſhops may not offer to ſay what they cannot prove. Theſe Canons ſhew, That Crimes were confeſſed to Biſhops,; and that the Biſhops excommunicated Men, and put them to publick Penance for thoſe Crimes, though they were ſecret ones; but that the Biſhop could not oblige thoſe outwardly to do publick Penance, who had confeſſed their Crimes ſecretly to him, unleſs he had other Proofs to convict them.

After this, Aurelius concluded the Synod, putting off to the next day the writing to Boniface. All the Biſhops ſubſcribed and approved what had been done and read in the Synod.

The next day they compoſed the Letter to Boniface; wherein the African Biſhops gave him an Account of what had been done about the Memorial of Inſtructions which Zoſimus had given to his Legates; and promiſed him to ſee the two Canons of the Council of Sardica executed, concerning the Appeals of the Clergy, and the Judgments thereupon, until they had received out of Greece the true Copies of the Council of Nice; upon Condition, That if theſe Canons were not there, they would not endure this new Yoke, which ſeemed to be an Effect of Ambition; and that they ſhould be ſuffered to enjoy their ancient Privileges.

Theſe Copies were not long in coming; they received them in November of the ſame Year, with obliging Letters from St. Cyril, and Atticus of Conſtantinople; but they did not find the Canons alledged by Zoſimus's Legates, but only the Confeſſion of Faith, and the Twenty ordinary Canons. They had no ſooner received them, but they ſent the ſame to Pope Boniface.

This ſeemed to have put an end to the Diſpute; and indeed, it was not ſpoken of any more in Boniface's time, but it was renewed under the Pontificate of Pope Cœleſtine. For this Apiarius, to whom the African Biſhops had ſhewed Kindneſs for the Pope's ſake, inſtead of behaving himſelf wiſely, gave great occaſions of Complaint againſt him; ſo that they were obliged to condemn him. He failed not, to procure his Reſtoration, to apply himſelf to the ſame Means that had before proved effectual: he went to Pope Cœleſtine, who received him kindly, and admitted him to Communion: he wrote in his behalf to the African Biſhops, and ſent Fauſtinus to procure his Reſtoration. The African Biſhops met to judge him. At firſt he rejected their Judgment, under pretence of maintaining the Privileges of the See of Rome, and demanded to be admitted to the Communion, ſince Cœleſtine, to whom he made his Appeal, had admitted him. This Oppoſition, back'd by Fauſtinus, did not hinder the African Biſhops from undertaking the Examination of the Crimes laid to his Charge. At the third time of their Meeting, Apiarius confeſſed, "That he was guilty of the Crimes he was accuſed of, ſo that there "was no more need of Pleading." But the African Biſhops ſeeing of what Importance it was, to prevent that for the future the African Councils ſhould not be thus impoſed upon, they writ a Letter to Pope Cœleſtine. In which having related in what manner Apiarius's Buſineſs was concluded, they intreated him earneſtly to hearken no more to thoſe that ſhould come from Africa, and not to admit any more to his Communion any Man that was Excommunicated by the African Biſhops. "For (ſay they) your Holineſs may take notice, That it was ſo decreed in the "Council of Nice; and though mention is made there only of Clergy and Laity, yet there is "a great deal more reaſon to obſerve this Rule, with reſpect to Biſhops; and it would prove "a great Diſorder, ſhould your Holineſs allow Communion againſt the Rules to Biſhops Ex-"communicated in their Provinces. Likewiſe, your Holineſs ought to reject thoſe Prieſts, "and other Clergy-men who apply themſelves to you, to avoid the Puniſhment which they "deſerve; ſo much the rather, becauſe we no where read that the Canons have taken away "this Privilege from the African Church; and that according to the Decree of the Council of "Nice, the Judgment of Prieſts, and of other Clerks, belongs to the Metropolitan. For the "Fathers of that Council were wiſe and juſt enough to ſee that all Cauſes ought to be decided "in thoſe very places where they have their birth; and that each Province ſhall not want the "Light of the Holy Spirit, which is neceſſary to direct and enable them to do Juſtice to their "People; ſo much the rather, that every one who thinks himſelf wrong'd by the Sentences of "Judges that are put upon them, may have their recourſe to a Synod of that Province, or even "to a National Council. Were it not great raſhneſs in any one of us, to believe that God can "inſpire by his Spirit one ſingle Perſon to do Juſtice, and deny the ſame to a great number of "Biſhops aſſembled in a Council? And how can it be imagined, that Judgment given out of "the Country, and beyond the Seas, can ſtand, ſince it is often impoſſible to tranſport Wit-"neſſes? They add, That they had ſent to Pope Boniface, Cœleſtine's Predeceſſor, the true Copies "of the Council of Nice, where the Canons alledged by Fauſtinus are not found. They adviſe "him to ſend no more Clerks into Africa to ſee his Judgments executed, leſt he ſhould ſeem to "introduce into the Church, which Breaths nothing but Humility, the Pomp and Vanity of "the Age; and then they entreat him, not to ſuffer Fauſtinus to abide any longer in Africa.

The Council of Ravenna, in 419.

THis Council was aſſembled at Ravenna, in April, 419. by order of Honorius the Emperor, to judge betwixt Eulalius and Boniface, who diſputed about the See of Rome. For ſince the Biſhops could not agree, the Emperor purpoſed to call another more numerous Council, to which Council of Ravenna, in CCCXIX which he invited Biſhops out of Gaul and Africa. In the mean while it was ordered in this, That Eulalius and Boniface ſhould keep out of Rome; and that Achillaus, Biſhop of Spoleto, ſhould take care of the Church till the Conteſt was ended. But Eulalius's Precipitation juſtified Boniface's Right, and was the cauſe that no other Council met upon that Subject. You may ſee what was ſaid about it in the Account of Pope Boniface.

The Council of Carthage, in the Year 420.

Council of Carthage, in cccxx.

WHat we have ſaid hitherto concerning the Councils of Africa, celebrated in the beginning of the Fifth Century, ſufficiently ſhews, That the Vigilancy of thoſe Biſhops made them meet often, and gives reaſon to conjecture, That Yearly Councils were held at Carthage; but we have not the Acts of all thoſe Councils. Poſſidius, in St. Auguſtin's Life, intimates, That in 420. there was a Meeting of Biſhops at Carthage, where a young Virgin confeſſed that ſhe had ſuffered infamous things from the Manichees. St. Auguſtin relates the ſame thing in his Treatiſe Of Hereſies, ch. 46. and the Author called Prædeſtinatus, hath not forgot to reckon this Meeting among the African Councils; but it may be that it was only an Aſſembly of Biſhops, like that wherein St. Auguſtin cauſed Heraclius the Prieſt to be elected his Succeſſor, which cannot be called a Council.

The Council of Conſtantinople, in the Year 426.

Council of Conſtantinople, in ccccxxvi.

THis Council was aſſembled by Theodoſius's Command, to Ordain Siſinnius Biſhop-Elect of Conſtantinople, in the room of Atticus. Theodorus of Antioch was preſent, and there condemned the Maſſalian Hereſie by a Synodical Letter: And Neon's Opinion was, That as many as ſhould be convicted of favouring that Sect, ſhould be Expelled, without hope of Re-admiſſion, whatſoever Promiſes they might make. The reaſon of that extraordinary Severity came from this, That thoſe Hereticks made no ſcruple of Abjuring their Sect, even with the moſt dreadful Oaths. This Synod is mentioned in the Council of Epheſus, where the Synodical Letter is confirmed, p. 3. Act. 7.

The Council of Carthage, in the Year 427. againſt Leporius.

Council of Carthage, againſt Leporius, in ccccxxvii.

Leporius, Prieſt and Monk of Marſeilles, embu'd with Pelagius's Errors, having likewiſe maintained that which Neſtorius publiſhed not long after, was driven out of Gaul: God's Providence directed him to Africa; where he was undeceived of his Errors by Aurelius and St. Auguſtin, who moſt charitably inſtructed him. After he was fully perſuaded of the Truth, they made him ſubſcribe a Confeſſion of Faith; wherein he ſharply condemned thoſe Errors which he had publiſhed, concerning the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt, and made a clear Profeſſion of the Faith of the Church. Aurelius, St. Auguſtin, and ſome other Biſhops, being aſſembled, ſigned that Profeſſion, and wrote a Letter to Proculus of Marſeilles, and the other Biſhops of that Countrey; whereby they atteſted Leporius's Converſion, and intreated them to receive him charitably. This Leporius having been preſent at the Aſſembly which St. Auguſtin called at Hippo, to chuſe Heraclius for his Succeſſor, held at the latter end of the Year 426, could not be ſent back before 427.

The Council of Conſtantinople, in the Year 428.

Council of Conſtantinople, in ccccxxviii.

Neſtorius having been choſen Biſhop of Conſtantinople, in 428. after Siſinnius's Death, Philip, an ancient Prieſt of the Church of Conſtantinople, found fault with ſome of Neſtorius's Sermons, and refuſed to Communicate with him. This provoked Neſtorius, who cauſed him to be cited to his Council, and perſuaded Cœleſtius to accuſe him. But Philip being come to the Council, and Cœleſtius not appearing, Philip remained fully juſtified. This Council is ſpoken of in the Memorial which St. Cyril gave to Poſſidonius, and which was carried to Rome.

We conclude here the former Part of the Third Volume, which gives an Account of the Authors of the Fifth Age of the Church, that we may not enter upon the Hiſtory of the Council of Epheſus, which we ſhall ſpeak of in the latter Part.

The END of the FIRST PART of the THIRD TOME.

A CHRO-

A CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE OF THE ECCLESIASTICAL AUTHORS Mentioned in the Third VOLUME.

Giving an Account of their Names, Time of their Birth, their Country and Employments, Time when they Flouriſhed, and the Time of their Deaths.

EVAGRIUS PONTICUS,

A Diſciple of the Macarii. Deacon of Conſtantinople. Flouriſhed from the Year 380. to the End of that Century. Died Anno 406.

MARK,

The Hermit. Flouriſhed about the end of the Fourth Century.

SIMPLICIANUS,

Biſhop of Milan, Succeſſor to St. Ambroſe. Flouriſhed at the end of the Fourth Century. Died in 400.

VIGILIUS,

Biſhop of Trent. Flouriſhed towards the end of the Fourth Century. Suffered Martyrdom in the Year 400.

PRUDENTIUS,

Of Saragoſa. A Chriſtian Poet. Born in the Year 348. Flouriſhed at the end of the Fourth Century. Died in 410.

DIADOCHUS,

Biſhop of Photice. Flouriſhed, according to ſome, at the end of the Fourth, or as others, at the end of the Fifth Century.

AUDENTIUS,

Biſhop in Spain. Flouriſhed at the end of the Fourth Century.

SEVERUS ENDELECHIUS,

A Chriſtian Poet. Flouriſhed towards the end of the Fourth Century.

FLAVIANUS,

Biſhop of Antioch. Flouriſhed from the Year 380. to the end of that Century. Died in the Year 404.

St. JOHN CHRYSOSTOM,

Biſhop of Conſtantinople. Born in 347. Flouriſhed from the Year 370. to the beginning of the next Century. He Preached in 380. and was Ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople in 398. Was Depoſed in 403. and driven away in 404. Died in Exile in the Year 407.

ANTIOCHUS,

Biſhop of Ptolemais. A Famous Preacher, about the end of the Fourth Century.

SEVERIANUS,

Biſhop of Gabala. Flouriſhed towards the end of the Fourth Century.

ASTERIUS,

Biſhop of Amaſea. Flouriſhed towards the end of the Fourth Century.

ANASTASIUS,

Biſhop of Rome. Ordained in the Year 398. Died in 402.

CHROMACIUS,

Biſhop of Aquileia. Flouriſhed towards the end of the Fourth Century.

GAUDENTIUS,

Biſhop of Breſcia. Ordained in the Year 387. Died towards the Year 410.

JOHN,

Biſhop of Jeruſalem. Ordained in 387. Died in the Year 416.

THEOPHILUS,

Biſhop of Alexandria. Ordained in 395. Died in 412.

THEODORUS,

Biſhop of Mopſueſtia. Flouriſhed at Antioch, towards the end of the Fourth Century: And was Ordained Biſhop in the beginning of the Fifth.

PALLADIUS,

A Monk, and afterwards Biſhop of Helenopolis. Flouriſhed, chiefly at the beginning of the Fifth Century. Died after the Year 421.

St. INNOCENT I,

Biſhop of Rome. Ordained in 402. Died in 417.

St. JEROM.

Presbyter. Born in the Year 345. Flouriſhed from the Year 370 to his Death. Died in 420.

RUFINUS TORANIUS,

Presbyter of Aquileia. Flouriſhed from the Year 372. Died in 410.

SOPHRONIUS,

Flouriſhed at the beginning of the Fifth Century.

SULPICIUS SEVERUS,

Presbyter of Agen. Flouriſhed from the Year 390. to 420. Died in 420.

St. PAULINUS,

Biſhop of Nola. Baptized in 389. after having been Conſul in 378. Ordained Prieſt in 393. and Biſhop in 409. Died in 431.

PELAGIUS,

A Britiſh Monk. Publiſhed his Errors towards the end of the Fourth Century.

COELESTIUS,

A Britain, Diſciple of Pelagius. Taught his Hereſie about the beginning of the Fifth Century.

NICEAS,

An Italian Biſhop. Flouriſhed about the beginning of the Fifth Century.

OLYMPIUS,

A Biſhop in Spain. Flouriſhed about the beginning of the Fifth Century.

BACCHIARIUS,

A Chriſtian Philoſopher. Flouriſhed about the beginning of the Fifth Century.

SABBATIUS,

Biſhop in Gaul. Flouriſhed about the beginning of the Fifth Century.

ISAAC,

A Converted Jew. Flouriſhed about the beginning of the Fifth Century.

PAULUS OROSIUS,

A Spaniſh Prieſt. Flouriſhed under the Emperours Arcadius and Honorius about the beginning of the Fifth Century.

LUCIAN,
Presbyter.
AVITUS,
Spaniſh Presbyter.
EVODIUS,
Biſhop of Vzala.

SEVERUS,
Biſhop of Minorca.
MARCELLUS, Memorialis.
EUSEBIUS,
URSINUS,
Monk.
MACARIUS,
Monk of Rome.
HELIODORUS,
Presbyter of Antioch.
PAUL,
Biſhop.
HELVIDIUS,
VIGILANTIUS, Prieſt.
} Wrote about the beginning of the Fifth Century.

St. AUGUSTIN,

Biſhop of Hippo. Born at Tagaſta the 13th. of Nov. 354. Was Converted in 387. Ordained Prieſt in 391. and Biſhop in 395. Began to Write in 387. and did not leave off writing till his Death. Died the 28th. of Auguſt in the Year 430.

ZOSIMUS,

Biſhop of Rome. Ordained in 417. Died in 418.

BONIFACE I.

Biſhop of Rome. Ordained in 418. Died in 423.

SYNESIUS.

A Platonick Philoſopher. Biſhop of Ptolemais. Famous for his Skill in Human Learning, about the end of the Fourth and the beginning of the Fifth Century; and was Elected Biſhop in 410. Died after the Year 412.

A CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE of the COUNCILS held in the Fourth Age of the Church.

The Figure ſhews the Year according to the Vulgar Æra.

THE Synod of Rome under Innocent I. 430
Council of Milevis, 402
Councils held at Conſtantinople & at Epheſus, 400, 401
Council at the Oak in the Suburbs of Chalcedon, 403
Council of Carthage, 403
Council of Carthage, 404
Council of Carthage, 405
Council of Carthage, 407
Two Councils of Carthage, 408
Council of Carthage, 409
Council of Carthage, 410
Council of Ptolemais, 411
Conference at Carthage, 411
Council of Zerta, 412
Firſt Council of Carthage againſt Celeſtius, 412
Conference at Jeruſalem, 415
Council of Dioſpolis, 418
Council of Milevis, 416
Council of Carthage, 417
Council of Carthage, 418
Council of Tella, or Zella, [or as ſome think Telepta] 418
The Second Council of Carthage againſt Cœleſtius, 416
Councils of Carthage concerning the Cauſe of Apiarius, 418, 419
Council of Ravenna, 419
Council of Carthage, 420
Council of Conſtantinople, 426
Council of Carthage againſt Leporius, 427
Council of Conſtantinople. 428

A TABLE

A TABLE of all the Works of the Eccleſiaſtical Authors mentioned in this Volume.

EVAGRIUS PONTICUS.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

PArt of a Gnoſtical Book and a Practical Book, contained in One hundred and Seventy one Sentences, with Eleven Inſtructions for Monks; Publiſhed by Cotelerius in the Third Tome of the Monumenta Eccleſiæ Græcæ, pag. 68.

A Treatiſe entituled Antirrheticus, or rather a Summary of that Treatiſe; publiſhed by Bigotius at the end of Palladius.

The Hiſtory of Pachon, among the Works of St. Nilus.

Sentences attributed to St. Nilus, which are found in the Works of that Author, from Page 543. to Page 575.

Other Sentences, which are at the end of the Firſt Volume of the Bibliotheca Patrum. Gr. Lat.

A Small Treatiſe of the Names of God, publiſhed by Cotelerius in the Second Vol. of the Monumenta Eccleſiæ Græcæ, pag. 116.

Fragments and Sentences of Evagrius, in the Code of Monaſtick Rules, in the Apophthegms of the Fathers, and in the Aſcetical Treaſure, publiſh'd by Poſſinus.

Three Fragments quoted out of the Gnoſtical and Practical Books, produced by Socrates, Book 3. chap. 3. Book 4. chap. 23.

BOOKS Loſt.

The Gnoſtical, Practical and Antirrhetical Books.

Six hundred Problems.

Two Books of Sentences.

MARK the Hermit.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

Eight Spiritual Diſcourſes in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

BOOK Loſt.

A Ninth Diſcourſe againſt the Melchiſedecians.

SIMPLICIANUS.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

Two Letters, in Saint Auguſtin.

BOOK Loſt.

A Letter mentioned by Gennadius.

VIGILIUS of Trent.

Genuine BOOK.

A Letter concerning the Martyrs, related by Surius at the 23d. of May.

PRUDENTIUS.

Genuine BOOKS.

Pſychomachia.
Caſhemerinôn.
Periſtephanôn.
Apotheoſis.
Hamartigenia.

Two Books againſt Symmachus.

An Abridgment of ſome Hiſtories of the Old and New Teſtament.

BOOKS Loſt.

The Dittochæon.

A Commentary upon the Six Days Work.

DIADOCHUS.

Genuine BOOKS.

A Hundred Chapters concerning a Spiritual Life.

BOOKS Loſt.

Ten Definitions.

AUDENTIUS.

BOOK Loſt.

A Treatiſe of Faith againſt Hereticks.

ENDELECHIUS.

Genuine BOOK.

A Bucolick.

FLAVIANUS.

BOOKS Loſt.

Sermons upon different Subjects, whereof Theodoret produces ſome Fragments.

St. JOHN CHRYSOSTOM's Works.

HOMILIES and SERMONS upon the PENTATEUCH.

Genuine Books ſtill Extant.

SIxty ſeven Homilies upon Geneſis, Volume I. of the Eaton Edition, from Page 1. to 522. and Vol. 2. of Paris, from Page 1. to 725.

Nine Homilies upon Geneſis in the Engliſh Edition Vol. 5. from p. 1. to 38. and in the Paris Edit. Vol. 2. from p. 725. to 773.

Two Fragments of Homilies---Upon Adam and Abraham. V. 5. Ed. Eton. p. 648. and 653.

Books Spurious, or Dubious.

Ten Homilies upon Geneſis, Engliſh Edition, V. 1. p. 39.

Hom. upon Gen. 1. God ſaw all his Works, &c. Ed. En. V. 5. p. 145. Ed. P. V. 6. p. 18.

Hom. upon theſe words, Gen. 1. Let us make man after our own Image, Ed. En. v. 5 p 645. P. v. 6. p. 24.

Latin Homilies, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15. upon Geneſis in the Latin Edition of Lyons, V. 1. p. 206, &c.

Hom. upon theſe words of Abraham, Gen. 24. v. 10. Put thine hand under my thigh, &c. Ed. En. v. 7. p. 565. P. v. 6. p. 30.

Hom. upon Adam driven out of Paradiſe, v. 7. Ed. En. p. 37.

A Sermon upon the Sacrifices of Cain and Abel, upon the Giants and the Flood, v. 7. Ed. En. p. 458.

Sermon upon Abraham and Iſaac, ibid. p. 394.

Hom. upon the brazen Serpent, Num. 21. Ed. En. v. 5. p. 669. P. v. 6. p. 49.

Another Homily upon the ſame, Ed. En. v. 7. p. 448.

Upon

A CATALOGUE of St. Chryſoſtom's Works.

Upon the Books of KINGS.

Genuine BOOKS.

Five Sermons concerning the Hiſtory of Hannah and Samuel. Ed. Eng. v. 5. from p. 50. to 83. and Paris v. 8. from p. 784. to 854.

Three Sermons of David and Saul; whereof the firſt is, v. 8. Ed. En. p. 10. And the two others, v. 6. p. 83. and 89. Ed. p. 841. 854. 864.

A Sermon upon the Hiſtory of Elijah and the Widow of Sarepta, 1 Kings 18. Ed. En. v. 8. p. 261. P. v. 5. p. 636.

BOOKS Spurious.

Several Sermons upon divers places of the Books of Kings, upon David and Goliah, Ed. L. v. 1. p. 243.

A Sermon upon the words of David, 2 Kings 7. ibid. p. 244.

A Sermon upon Abſalom, ibid. p. 245.

Sermon upon Elijah in Latin, ibid. p. 246. and in Greek, v. 6. p. 128. Ed. P.

Another Sermon upon the ſame, Ed. L. p. 248.

A Sermon of the Aſcenſion of Elijah, Ed. L. v. 1. p. 248.

A Sermon upon Naaman, p. 249.

A Sermon of Eliſha, p. 250.

A Sermon upon Rachel and her Children, Ed. En. v. 1. p. 317.

Upon Jordan, ibid. p. 41.

Four Greek Sermons upon Job, Ed. Eton v. 5. p. 949. P. v. 6. p. 76.

Five other Latin Sermons upon Job, Ed. L. p. 261.

A Sermon upon Job, ibid. 265.

A Sermon upon Job and upon Abraham, p. 267.

Upon the PSALMS.

Genuine BOOKS.

Sixty Homilies upon Pſal. 3d, &c. to the 13th. and upon the 41ſt. and 42d. and ſo to the 50th. upon the 100th. and 108th. and ſo on to the 117th. and from the 119th. to the end, v. 1. Ed. Eng. from p. 522. to 1016. and Vol. 8. p. 1. and 5. Ed. P. v. 3. p. 1. to 551.

An Homily upon Pſal. 13. Ed. P. v. 3. p. 833.

Two Homilies upon the Title of the 50th. Pſal. Ed. Eton. v. 1. p. 692. Ed. P. v. 3. p. 846. and 862.

BOOKS Spurious.

Two Latin Prefaces upon the Pſalms, Ed. L. v. 1. p. 269. and 270.

A Diſcourſe of the Uſefulneſs of the Pſalms, p. 272. ibid.

An Homily upon Pſal. 1. in Greek, v. 5. Ed. Eng. p. 677. In Latin, Ed. L. v. 1. p. 273.

An Homily upon the 9th. Pſalm, Ed. L. p. 313. upon the 14th. p. 323. upon the 22d. 24, 25, 26 29. 33. 37, 38, 39. 40. 42. 68. 71. 84. 90. 93. 95. 95. ibid.

An Homily upon Pſal. 4. Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 431.

The Homilies upon Pſal. 51ſt. 95th. 100th. Ed. Eng. v. 1. p. 9. 11. and following, Ed. P. v. 3. p. 884.

Hom. upon Pſalm 101ſt, &c. to 107th. and the Expoſition of the 119th. Ed. Eng. v. 1. p. 92.

Upon the words of Pſal. 75. Vovete & Reddite, &c. v. 7. Ed. Eng. p. 260.

An Homily upon theſe words of Pſal. 38. Man diſquieteth himſelf in vain, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 568. Ed. P. v. 6. p. 114.

An Homily upon theſe words of Pſal. 121ſt. Fiat pax in virtute tua, &c. Ed. L. v. 1. p. 483.

An Homily upon Pſal. 92. Dominus regnavit, &c. v. 5. Ed. Eton. p. 680.

Homily upon theſe words of the 92d. Pſal. Elevaverunt flumina, &c. Eng. Ed. v. 7. p. 256.

Upon the other words of Pſal. 94. Venite, &c. ibid. p. 561.

Upon Pſal. 139. Eripe me, Domine, &c. p. 347. ibid.

Upon the Books of WISDOM.

Spurious.

Upon theſe words of the Third Chap. of Wiſdom, They ſeemed as dead to the eyes of Fools.--- Ed. L. v. 1. p. 555.

Upon the PROPHETS.

Genuine BOOKS.

A Sermon of the obſcureneſs of Prophecies, Ed. En. v. 6. p. 649. Ed. P. v. 3. p. 799.

A Sermon of the obſcurity of the Old Teſtament, Ed. En. v. 6. p. 658. P. v. 3. p. 813.

A Commentary upon the firſt Seven Chapters of Iſaiah, Ed. En. v. 5. p. 100. P. v. 3. p. 554, &c.

Five Homilies upon the 6th. Chapter of Iſaiah, Ed. En. v. 5. p. 127, &c. to 155. Ed. P. v. 3. p. 723. to 762.

An Homily upon the Seraphim, upon a paſſage of the 45th. Chapter of Iſaiah, verſe 7. Ed. En. v. 5. p. 155. and 160. P. v. 3. p. 763. 776.

An Homily upon Jeremiah, Ch. 10. v. 23. Ed. En. v. 5. p. 168. P. v. 3. p. 789.

BOOKS Spurious.

A Sermon upon theſe words of Iſ. Ch. 1. If you will hear me, ye ſhall eat the good things of the Earth, Ed. L. v. 1. p. 598.

A Sermon upon Iſai. Chap. 9. ibid. p. 613.

A Sermon upon theſe words, Iſai. Chapter 42d. Sing unto the Lord, Ed. L. v. 1. p. 614.

An Homily upon the Seals of the Books ſpoken of, Iſai. Chap. 46. v. 3. Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 689. P. v. 6. p. 138.

A Sermon upon Iſai. Ch. 62d. of the coming of Jeſus Chriſt. Ed. L. v. 1. p. 615.

An Homily upon Ferem. Ed. L. v. 1. p. 616.

A Greek Homily upon Suſanna, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 703. Ed. P. v. 6. p. 141.

A Latin Sermon of Suſanna, Ed. L. v. 1. p. 617.

An Homily of the three Young Men in the fiery furnace of Babylon, Ed. En. v. 5. p. 698. P. v. 6. p. 148.

Homilies upon theſe words of the 6th. Chapter of Zachar. Exce vir oriens, Ed. L. p. 619.

Homilies upon whole BOOKS of the New Teſtament.

Genuine BOOKS.

Fourſcore and Ten Homilies upon St. Matthew, Ed. En. v. 2. from p. 1. to 555. Ed. P. v. 1. in N. T.

Eighty ſeven Homilies upon St. John, v. 2. Ed. En. p. 555. v. 2. Ed. P. in N. T.

Fifty and four Homilies upon the Acts, Ed. En. v. 4. p. 607.

Thirty

Thirty two Homilies upon the Epiſtle to the Romans, Ed. En. v. 3. p. 1. Ed. P. v. 3. in N.T.

Forty four Homilies upon the Firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians with a Preface, and Thirty upon the Second, Edit. En. v. 3. 243. Edit. P. v. 5. in N. T.

A Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Galatians, Ed. En. v. 3. p. 763. and Ed. P. v. 5. in N.T. p. 776.

Four and twenty Homilies upon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, Ed. En. v. 3. p. 763. Ed. P. v. 5. in N. T. p. 864.

Fifteen Homilies upon the Epiſtle to the Philippians, Ed. En. v. 4. p. 1. Ed. P. in N.T. v. 6. p. 1.

Twelve Homilies upon the Epiſt. to the Coloſſians, Ed. En. v. 4. p. 89. Ed. P. v. 5. in N.T. p. 147.

Eighteen Homilies upon 1 Theſſ. and Five upon the Second, Ed. En. v. 4. p. 161. Ed. P. v. 6. in N. T. p. 262.

Eighteen Homilies upon 1 Tim. with a Preface, and Ten upon the Second, Ed. Eton. v. 4. p. 249. Ed. P. in N. T. v. 6. p. 402.

Six Homilies upon the Epiſtle to Titus, Ed. En. v. 4. p. 381. Ed. P. in N.T. v. 6. p. 619.

Three Homilies upon the Ep. to Philemon, Ed. En. v. 4. p. 411. Ed. P. in N.T. v. 6. p. 770.

Four and thirty Homilies upon the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, Ed. Eton. v. 4. p. 427. Ed. P. in N.T. v. 6. p. 692. which are ſaid to have been Collected after his Death, by a Presbyter of his Acquaintance.

Books Spurious.

An imperfect Commentary upon St. Matth. Ed. P. v. 2. in N. T. from p. 3. to 196.

Seven and twenty Latin Homilies upon St. Matthew, whereof the 13th. and 17th. are among St. Chryſologus's Works, Ed. L. v. 2. p. 465, &c. to p. 502.

Fourteen Homilies in Latin upon St. Mark, ibid. from p. 513. to p. 551.

Six Homilies upon the Goſpel of St. Luke, p. 519. 529. and that of Zacchæus, p. 551.

Five Homilies upon St. John, p. 164, &c.

Diſtinct Sermons upon particular Texts of the New Teſtament.

Genuine Books.

A Sermon upon the Man that was ſick of the Palſy, ſpoken of in St. Matth. ch. 9. vol. 5. Ed. P. p. 814.

An Homily upon St. Matth. ch. 13. v. 7. Enter in at the ſtraight gate, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 175. Ed. P. v. 5. p. 125.

An Homily upon the Parable of the Servant who owed Ten thouſand Talents, Matth. ch. 18. Ed. En. v. 5. p. 196. Ed. P. v. 5. p. 1.

An Homily upon St. Matth. ch. 26. v. 39. Father, if it be poſſible, &c. Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 203. Ed. P. v. 5. p. 114.

Five Sermons upon the Parable of Dives and Lazarus, Luk. 16. Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 196. 220. 234. 242. 253. Ed. P. v. 5. p. 18, &c.

An Homily upon the Hiſtory of the impotent Man, related, John ch. 5. v. 3. Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 264. Ed. P. v. 5. p. 102.

An Homily of the Uſefulneſs of reading the Holy Scripture upon the beginning of the Acts, Ed. Eng. v. 8. p. 111. P. v. 5. p. 582.

An Homily upon the Title to the Acts, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 274. P. v. 5. p. 151.

An Homily why the Book of the Acts is read in the time of Pentecoſt, Ed. P. v. 5. p. 831.

An Homily upon St. Paul's Converſion, and changing of his Name, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 282. P. v. 5. p. 164.

An Homily upon the beginning of Ch. 9. of the Acts, Ed. Eng. v. 8. p. 60. P. v. 5. p. 544.

An Homily upon the Inſcription of the Altar at Athens, To the unknown God, Acts Ch. 17. Ed. Eng. v. 6. p. 722. P. v. 5. p. 556.

An Homily upon changing the Name of Saul into that of Paul, Ed. P. v. 5. p. 850.

An Homily upon Rom. 5. of glorying in Tribulations, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 292. P. v. 5. p. 180.

An Homily upon theſe words, Rom. 8. All things work together for good to thoſe that love God, &c. Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 299. P. v. 5. p. 192.

An Homily upon the words Ch. 12. of the Rom. If your Enemy hunger, Ed. Eton. v. 5. p. 304. P. v. 5. p. 199.

Two Homilies upon Rom. Ch. 16. Salute Priſcilla, &c. Ed. Eton. v. 5. p. 314. and 321. P. v. 5. p. 216. and 226.

An Homily upon the beginning of 1 Cor. Ch. 1. ed. eng. v. 8. 111. P. v. 5. p. 568.

An Homily upon theſe words, ch. 7. 1 Cor. Let every one have his Wife, &c. Ed. Eton. v. 5. p. 330. ed. P. v. 5. p. 240.

An Homily upon Chap. 7. 1 Cor. about the Bill of Divorce, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 337. ed. P. v. 5. p. 251.

An Homily upon theſe words, Ch. 10. 1 Cor. I would not, brethren, that ye ſhould be ignorant, &c. ed. eng. v. 5. p. 343. ed. P. v. 5. p. 260.

An Homily upon theſe words, Ch. 11. 1 Cor. It is convenient that there be Hereſies, ed. Eton, v. 5. p. 362. ed. P. v. 5. p. 273.

Three Homilies upon 2 Cor. ch. 4. Having the ſame ſpirit of Faith, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 368. P. v. 5. p. 296.

An Homily upon theſe words, Ch. 11. 2. Cor. Would to God you would bear with my folly a little, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 392. P. v. 5. p. 332.

An Homily upon theſe words, Ch. 2. Gal. I withſtood him to his face, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 398. P. v. 5. p. 705.

An Homily upon theſe words, Ch. 1. to the Philip. whether Chriſt be preached under a pretence, or in truth, &c. ed. eng. v. 5. p. 410. P. v. 5. p. 343.

An Homily upon that Ch. 4. 1 Theſſ. Concerning the dead, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 418. P. v. 5. p. 375.

An Homily upon theſe words, 1 Tim. Chap. 5. Let a Widow be choſen above ſixty years, &c. ed. eng. v. 5. p. 425. P. v. 5. p. 387.

Books Spurious.

A Sermon upon Herod and the Innocents, Matth. Ch. 2. Ed. Eton. vol. 7. p. 318.

A Sermon upon theſe words of the Devil to Jeſus Chriſt, If thou beeſt the Son of God caſt thy ſelf down; which is attributed to St. Ephrem in ſome Manuſcripts, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 301.

A Sermon upon theſe words, Matth. ch. 6. Take heed ye do not your Alms before men, &c. Ed. En. v. 7. p. 486.

A Sermon upon St. Matth. ch. 7. v. 14, and 15. and upon the Lord's Prayer, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 183. Ed. P. v. 5. p. 137.

A Sermon upon theſe words of Jeſus Chriſt, in St. Matth. ch. 6. See that you do not your Alms before men, &c. Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 488. Ed. P. v. 6. p. 523.

A Sermon upon the Woman that had an Iſſue of Blood, Matth. ch. 9. Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 816. Ed. P. v. 6. p. 533.

A Sermon upon theſe words of St. Matth. ch. 13. The Jews conſulted together, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 752. Ed. P. v. 6. p. 385.

Three Sermons upon the Transfiguration, Matth. ch. 17. ed. eng. v. 7. p. 332. 339. 345.

A Sermon upon the Woman of Cana, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 771. ed. P. v. 6. p. 295.

A Sermon upon the Parable of an Houſholder and his Workmen, Matth. 20. ed. eng. v. 5. p. 508. ed. P. v. 6. p. 539.

A Sermon upon the withered Fig-tree, ed. eng. v. 7. p. 252. ed. P. v. 6. p. 552.

A Sermon upon theſe words of Jeſus Chriſt, Matth. ch. 18. Whatſoever ye ſhall bind on earth, &c. ed. eng. v. 7. p. 268.

An Homily upon Matth. ch. 21. By what authority do ye, &c. publiſhed by Corelerius.

A Sermon upon the Ten fooliſh Virgins, Matth. 25. ed. eng. v. 7. p. 554. ed. P. v. 6. p. 589.

A Sermon upon St. Peter's denyal, Matth. ch. 26. ed. eng. v. 7. p. 275. ed. P. v. 6. p. 626.

An Homily upon theſe words, Matth. 26. The Phariſees conſulted together to deſtroy Jeſus, ed. eng. v. 7. p. 326.

Homilies upon the Women that brought Spices to the Sepulcher of Jeſus Chriſt, ed. Eton. v. 5. p. 740.

A Sermon upon theſe words of St. Luke, Cæſar Auguſtus made a Decree that all the World ſhould be taxed, Ed. Eton. v. 5. p. 715. ed. P. v. 6. p. 503.

A Sermon upon Zacharias's Viſion, and Elizabeth's Conception. Ed. Eton, v. 7. p. 340. Ed. P. v. 6. p. 412.

An Homily upon the Centurion, v. 7. ed. Eton, p. 403.

An Homily upon the reſurrection of the Widows Son at Naim, ed. Eton. v. 7. p. 439.

A Sermon upon the publican Woman, whoſe repentance is recorded in St. Luk. Ch. 7. ed. eng. v. 7. p. 440. ed. P. v 6. p. 395.

An Homily upon the parable of Seeds, Luk. 8. ed. eng. v. 7. p. 409.

An Homily of the Phariſee and the Banquet, Luk. 11. Ed. En. v. 7. p. 280. Ed. P. v. 6. p. 560.

Two other Sermons upon the ſame Subject, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 357. and 376.

Two Sermons upon the Parable of a man fallen among Thieves, Luk. 10. Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 387. and 506.

An Homily upon theſe words, Luk. 12. I came to bring War, &c. Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 478.

An Homily upon the Groat, Luk. 15. Ed. Eton. v. 7. p. 418.

An Homily of the Prodigal Son, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 539. Ed. P. v. 6. p. 369.

An Homily upon the Parable of Lazarus and Dives, Luk. 16. Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 728. Ed. P. v. 6. p. 564.

A Sermon upon the Parable of the unjuſt Steward, Luk. 16. Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 433.

An Homily of the Publican and the Phariſee, Luk. 18. Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 233. Ed. P. v. 6. p. 569.

Another Sermon upon the ſame Subject, Ed. En. v. 7. p. 462.

An Homily upon Zaccheus, Ed. Eton. v. 7. p. 403.

An Homily of the Blind man and Zaccheus, Luk. 18. Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 731. Ed. P. v. 6. p. 675.

An Homily upon the firſt words of St. John's Goſpel; In the beginning was the Word, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 745. Ed. P. v. 6. p. 235.

A Sermon upon the Marriage in Cana of Galilee, John ch. 2. Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 284. Ed. P. v. 6. p. 256.

An Homily upon John, ch. 11. v. 47. The Jews aſſembled their Counſel, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 532.

An Homily upon what Jeſus Chriſt ſaith of the Shepherd, John ch. 10. Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 984. Ed. P. v. 6. p. 265.

An Homily upon Chriſt's coming to Jeruſalem, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 369.

A Sermon upon Lazarus's reſurrection in John, ch. 11. Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 270. Ed. P. v. 5. p. 146.

Four Homilies upon the ſame Subject, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 320. 524. 528. 530.

An Homily upon the Woman of Samaria, John 4. Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 42. P. v. 6. p. 409.

Another Homily upon the ſame Subject, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 374.

An Homily of the man ſick of a Palſie, John 5. Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 414.

An Homily of the man born Blind, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 761. P. v. 6. p. 432.

A Sermon upon theſe words of St. John, ch. 7. v. 24. Judge not according to outward appearance, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 272.

An Homily upon theſe words Romans, ch. 7. v. 15. The good that I would I do not, &c. Ed. Eton. v. 5. p. 789.

An Homily upon theſe words, 2 Cor. ch. 12. My grace is ſufficient, Ed. Eton. v. 5. p. 799. P. v. 6. p. 340.

An Homily upon theſe words of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, If we Sin wilfully, there remaineth no more Oblation, &c. Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 772. It is a Fragment of the 20th. and 15th. Homilies upon the Epiſtle to the Hebrews.

Sermons upon ſome Points of Doctrine.

Genuine BOOKS.

SIx Sermons againſt the Jews, ed. eng. v. 6. p. 312, &c. P. v. 1. p. 385, &c.

An Homily of the Reſurrection of the Dead, Ed. Eng. v. 6. p. 703. Ed. P. v. 5. p. 440.

Sermons concerning the Pleaſures of another Life, Ed. Eton, v. 8. p. 71. P. v. 5. p. 647.

Five Sermons of the incomprehenſible Nature of God againſt the Anomæans, Preached at Antioch, Ed. Eton, v. 6. p. 389, &c. Ed. P. v. 1. p. 294.

A ſixth, Preached at Conſtantinople, Ed. Eton, v. 6. p. 434. P. v. 1. 698.

A Sermon of Conſubſtantiality, Ed. Eng. v. 6. p. 425. Ed. P. v. 1. p. 360.

A Sermon concerning the Requeſt of the Mother of Zebedee's Children, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 206. P. v. 1. p. 374.

An Homily concerning the Prayers of Jeſus Chriſt. Ed. Eng. v. 6. p. 714. P. v. 5. p. 595.

Two Sermons; One againſt thoſe who affirm, that the Devil rules things here below; and the other, againſt ſuch as ask, Why God did not deſtroy him? Ed. Eng. v. 6. p. 680, and 690. P. v. 1. p. 285, and v. 5. p. 689.

Books Spurious.

A Diſcourſe upon the Apoſtle's Creed, Ed. Eton, vol. 3. p. 287.

A Sermon to Catechumens, Ed. Eng. v. 6. p. 971.

A Sermon directed to the Neophytes, ibid.

Another Sermon to thoſe that are to be Baptized, ibid. p. 851.

A Diſcourſe of the Trinity, Ed. Eng. v. 6. p. 955. P. v. 6. p. 189.

A Sermon

A Sermon of the Holy Ghoſt, Ed. Eng. v. 6. p. 729. P. v. 6. p. 204.

An Homily to prove that there is but one Lawgiver, in the Old and New Covenant. Ed. A. v. 5. p. 622. P. v. 6. p. 1.

Five Homilies of Providence and Deſtiny, Ed. Eng. v. 6. p. 563.

A Sermon concerning Faith, and the Law of Nature, Ed. Eng. v. 6. p. 837. P. v. 6. p. 177.

A Sermon againſt Hereticks, Ed. Eng. v. 6. p. 979.

A Latin Sermon upon the Aſſembly of Angels Ed. A. v. 5. p. 997.

Sermons upon ſeveral Subjects.

Genuine Books.

AN Homily when he was deſigned Prieſt, Ed. Eton, v. 6. p. 443. P. v. 4. p. 834.

One and twenty Homilies of Statues, Ed. Eton, v. 6. p. 447, &c. P. v. 1. p. 1, &c. to theſe muſt be joyned the 22d. concerning Enmity, which followeth in both Editions.

Sermons againſt the Superſtition of New-years-day, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 335. P. v. 1. p. 264.

An Homily of Baptiſm to thoſe who are to be baptized, ed. Eton, v. 6. p. 851. P. v. 1. p. 705.

The firſt Diſcourſe upon Eutropius, ed. eng. v. 8. p. 67. P. v. 3. p. 666.

One Sermon before he was Baniſhed, and another after his Return, ed. P. v. 4. p. 842. and 848. Eton, v. 7. p. 941. and 943.

A Sermon in Commendation of Diodorus, publiſhed by Bigotius.

A Sermon after his Return out of Aſia, ed. eng. v. 7. p. 944.

A Sermon concerning his Reconciliation with Severianus, ed. Eton, v. 7. p. 947, and 948.

A Sermon after the withdrawing of Gainas. v. 5. ed. P. p. 895. ed. eng. v. 7. p. 936.

Two Sermons after his Return from Exile, v. 5. ed. P. p. 91.

Books Spurious.

Fifty nine Homilies upon ſeveral Subjects, which follow after thoſe of Statues. Collections out of ſeveral Paſſages of St. Chryſoſtom, ed. L. v. 5. p. 75. ad. p. 188. v. 5.

A Sermon concerning falſe Prophets, ed. Eton, v. 7. p. 41. P. v. 6. p. 473.

A Sermon upon the beginning of the Year, v. 5. ed. P. p. 820.

A Diſcourſe of the Circus. ed. eng. v. 6. p. 974. P. v. 6. p. 489.

Againſt thoſe that fell aſleep upon Whitſunday, ed. eng. v. 6. p. 858.

A Sermon upon the Drought that was among the Inhabitants of Theophania. ed. A. v. 7. p. 352.

Moral Sermons.

Genuine Books.

AN Homily of Penance, ed. Eton, v. 7. p. 943.

The firſt Homily Intituled in the Eton Edition, of Faſting, v. 6. p. 824, P. v. 1. p. 579.

The 2d. and 3d. are loſt.

The 4th. ed. eng. v. 6. p. 798. P. v. 1. p. 588.

The 5th. ed. eng. v. 6. p. 769. P. v. 1. p. 596.

The 6th. ed. eng. v. 6. p. 78. P. v. 4. p. 487.

The 7th. is loſt.

The 8th. is the 2d. of Faſting in the Engliſh Edition, v. 6. p. 830. ed. P. v. 1. p. 612.

The 9th. ed. eng. v. 6. p. 779. P. v. 5. p. 887.

The 10th. ed. eng. v. 6. p. 763. P. v. 1. p. 623.

The 11th. ed. eng. v. 6. p. 693. P. v. 5. p. 632.

There is another Sermon concerning the Conduct of Life, which is Intituled, Of Penance, ed. Eton, v. 6. p. 804. which was Printed more exact by F. Combefis, with a Tranſlation at Paris, in 1645.

The Sermon concerning Anathema's, ed. eng. v. 6. p. 439. ed. P. v. 1. p. 803.

A Diſcourſe of Repentance, and of the Euchariſt, ed. eng. v. 6. p. 790. ed. P. v. 5. p. 888.

Two Diſcourſes of Prayer, ed. A. v. 6. p. 754. ed. P. v. 1. p. 145.

Two Sermons of Alms-deeds, and Hoſpitality, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 113. and 123. ed. P. v. 3. p. 689 and 712.

Another Sermon of Alms, ed. Eton, v. 6. p. 816. ed. P. v. 6. p. 283.

A Sermon againſt Gluttony, falſly Intituled, The 6th. Diſcourſe, concerning Providence, ed. Eton, v. 6. p. 879. P. v. 1. p. 740.

A Sermon againſt Lazineſs, ed. Eton, v. 6. p. 844. ed. P. v. 2. p. 882.

A Diſcourſe of Meekneſs, ed. Eton, v. 6. p. 740. P. v. 5. p. 538.

A Sermon concerning the Choice of a Wife, ed. Eton, v. 8. p. 80. P. v. 5. p. 355.

Two Homilies againſt thoſe that Faſt at Eaſter, and with the Jews, ed. Eton, v. 6. p. 366. and 377. P. v. 5. p. 608, and 630.

An Homily againſt Deſpair, ed. Eton, v. 8. p. 75. P. v. 5. p. 654.

A Sermon againſt diſcovering our Brethren's Faults, ed. eng. v. 6. p. 695. P. v. 5. p. 662.

A Sermon ſhewing that we ſhould not Preach to pleaſe, ed. eng. v. 8. p. 93. P. v. 5. p. 674.

Books Spurious.

Three Sermons of Penance, ed. Eton, v. 6. p. 905.

Another Sermon of Penance, ed. eng. v. 7. p. 282.

An Homily of Repentance and Continency, by John the Faſter, ed. Eton, v. 7. p. 641. P. v. 1. p. 809.

A Sermon of Prayer, ed. eng. v. 7. p. 476.

An Homily againſt Hypocriſie, ed. Eton, v. 7. p. 297. P. v. 6. p. 529.

A Sermon of Faſting, ed. eng. v. 7. p. 428.

A Sermon of Faſting, and of Alms-giving, ed. eng. v. 6. p. 883. P. v. 6. p. 635.

Several Sermons of Faſting, ed. eng. v. 7. p. 428. p. 466. p. 469. p. 470. p. 509. p. 510.

A Sermon of Alms-deeds, ed. eng. v. 7. p. 520.

Several Homilies about Providence, Riches, and Poverty, ed. L. v. 5. from p. 582. to p. 598.

A Sermon againſt Swearing, ibid. p. 599.

A Sermon againſt thoſe that live in Pleaſures, ibid. p. 600. and 601.

That none ſhould mourn exceſſively for the Dead, ed. eng. v. 6. p. 943.

A Sermon of Faith, Hope, and Charity, ed. eng. v. 7. p. 288. 293. 295. 299. 522.

Spiritual Admonitions, ed. Eton, v. 7. p. 481.

Two Homilies of ſpiritual Warfare, ed. L. v. 5. p. 294. and 296.

A Sermon

A Sermon of Diſcipline, ibid. p. 297.
A Sermon of Vertue, ibid. 298.
A Sermon to ſhew that we ſhould be more careful of the Salvation of the Soul, than of the health of the Body, ed. eng. v. 6. p. 893.
A Sermon of the Salvation of the Soul, ibid. v. 6. p. 968.
A Sermon of Patience, &c. ed. eng. v. 7. p. 435.
A Sermon to prove that a Diſciple of Jeſus Chriſt muſt be meek, ed. eng. v. 6. p. 903. P. v. 6. p. 468.
Sermons of Charity and Meekneſs, ed. eng. v. 6. p. 742. 750.
Other Moral Sermons, which are Collections out of St. Chryſoſtom, ibid. v. 5. p. 313. to 375.
A Sermon to ſhew, That whoſoever hath received any Gift of God, ought to impart the ſame to others, ed. eng. v. 7. p. 42.
A Sermon againſt thoſe that accuſe Prieſts of living at eaſe, taken out of St. Chryſoſtom's Homilies, out of the 9th. upon the Ep. to the Philip. and out of the Homilies, upon the Ep. to Tim. and to Titus, ed. Eton, v. 6. p 896.
A Diſcourſe againſt thoſe that abuſed Virgins Conſecrated to God, ed. eng. v. 6. p. 976.

Sermons upon Feſtival Days.

Genuine Books.

AN Homily upon Chriſtmas, ed. Eton, v. 5. *p*51 i. P. v. 5. p. 417.
A Sermon of Jeſus Chriſt's Nativity, ed. Eton, v. 5. p. 846. P. v. 6. p. 493.
An Homily of Chriſt's Baptiſm, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 523. P. v. 1. p. 275.
A Sermon upon the Holy Week, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 540. P. v. 3. p. 712.
An Homily about Judas's Treaſon, Preached upon Holy Thurſday, ed. A. v. 5. p. 547. P. v. 5. p. 406.
An Homily upon Chriſt's Paſſion, ed. Eton, v. 5. p. 663. P. v. 5. p. 431.
An Homily concerning the Croſs and the Thief, ed. Eton, v. 5. p. 567. P. v. 1. p. 437.
An Homily of Chriſt's Reſurrection, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 581. P. v. 5. p. 447.
A Sermon upon Eaſter, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 885. P. v. 6. p. 641.
A Sermon upon the Aſcenſion, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 595. P. v. 5. p. 457.
Four Sermons upon the Aſcenſion, P. v. 6. p. 448, &c.
Two Sermons upon Pentecoſt, ed. Eton, v. 5. p. 602. and 611. P. v. 5. p. 468. and 481.

Spurious Books.

An Homily upon the Annunciation, Ed. Eng. v. 5 p. 889. P. v. 6. p. 350.
Sermons upon the ſame Subject, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 515. 237. 247.
A Sermon upon Chriſtmas, v. 5. Edit. Eng. p. 843.
Three other Sermons upon the ſame Feſtival, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 307. 367. 400.
Two Sermons upon the Theophany, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 350. and p. 388. P. v. 6. p. 252. and p. 361.
An Homily of Circumciſion, and concerning Simeon, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 872. P. v. 6. p. 245.
A Sermon upon the Epiphany, which is alſo attributed to St. Gregory Thaumaturgus, ed. eng. v. 7. p. 657.
An Homily upon Mid-Lent, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 876.
An Homily of Judas his Treaſon, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 893.
An Homily upon Good-Friday, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 906. P. v. 6. p. 403.
An Homily upon the Good Thief, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 910.
A Sermon upon the Paſſion, ed. eng. v. 7. p. 439.
A Sermon concerning the Croſs, ed. eng. v. 7. p. 502. P. v. 6. p. 288.
A ſecond Sermon upon the ſame Subject, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 868. P. v. 6. p. 611.
A third Sermon, ed. eng. v. 7. p. 864. P. v. 6. p. 620.
A fourth, about the Worſhip of the Croſs, ed. eng. v. 7. p. 493. P. v. 6. p. 611.
A Sermon of the Exaltation of the Croſs, ed. eng. v. 7. p. 661. written by Pantaleon the Monk.
An Homily upon Palm-Sunday, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 882.
A Sermon of the Reſurrection, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 592. P. v. 6. p. 442.
Another Sermon upon Chriſt's Reſurrection, ed. eng. v. 7. p. 264. 506.
An Homily upon Eaſter, v. 5. ed. Eton, p. 148.
Seven Diſcourſes upon the Faſt of Eaſter, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 977.
Sermons upon Aſcenſion and Whitſunday, ibid.
Sermons upon Aſcenſion, ed. Eton, v. 7. p. 330. p. 424. p. 466.
An Homily on Whitſunday, ed. Eton, v. 5. p. 976. P. v. 6. p. 227.
An Homily between Eaſter and Whitſunday, ed. Eton, v. 7. p. 372.
An Homily upon the Feaſt of Pentecoſt, ed. Eton. v. 7. p. 382.
An Homily on Chriſt's ſecond coming, ed. Eton, v. 5. p. 782. P. v. 6. p. 651.

Sermons upon the Saints.

Genuine BOOKS.

A Panegyrick upon all the Saints, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 618. P. v. 5. p. 685.
A Panegyrick upon all the holy Martyrs, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 614. P. v. 1. p. 792.
An Homily concerning the Martyrs, Ed. P. v. 5. p. 860.
A Fragment of an Homily in praiſe of Abraham, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 653. P. v. 1. p. 799.
Three Homilies upon the Maccabees, and their Mother, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 640. 633. 637. P. v. 1. p. 516. 552. 556.
A Diſcourſe of St. Peter and Elias, Ed. Eng. v. 8. p. 18. P. v. 1. p. 758.
Seven Homilies in praiſe of St. Paul, Ed. Eton, v. 8. p. 33. P. v. 5. p. 492.
A Panegyrick upon St. Ignatius, Ed. Eton, v. 5. p. 498. P. v. 1. p. 508.
A Panegyrick upon St. Meletius Biſhop of Antioch, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 537. P. v. 1. p. 323.
Panegyrick upon St. Babylas, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 438. P. v. 1. p. 641.
A Panegyrick upon St. Philogonius, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 505. P. v. 1. p. 551.
Panegyrick upon St. Euſtathius, ed. eng. v. 5. p. 628. P. v. 1. p. 571.
A Sermon upon the S S. Domnina, Berenice & Proſdoce, ed. Eton, v. 5. p. 473. P. v. 1. p. 557.

An

An Homily upon St. Pelagia, Ed. Eton, v. 5. *p.*482 P. v. 1. p. 491.

A Sermon upon S. Romanus, Martyr of Antioch, Ed. Eton, v. 5. p. 488. P. v. 1. p. 508.

A Sermon upon S. Barlaam, Ed. Eng. v. 5. *p.*493. P. v. 1. p. 785.

A Sermon upon S.S. Juventinus and Maximus Martyrs, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 533. P. v. 1. p. 485.

Panegyrick upon S. Lucian Martyr, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 529. P. v. 1. p. 530.

Panegyrick upon Julian Martyr, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 621. P. v. 1. p. 535.

An Homily upon the Egyptian Martyrs, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 519. P. v. 1. p. 770.

Panegyrick upon S. Phocas, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 826. P. v. 1. p. 775.

Panegyrick upon S. Theela, Ed. Eng. v. 5. *p.*943. P. v. 1. p. 785.

An Homily upon S. Baſſus, Edit. P. v. 5. p. 869.

A Panegyrick upon S. Droſis, Edit. P. v. 5. p. 877.

Books Spurious.

A Sermon concerning Joſeph and Chaſtity, Ed. Eton, v. 5. p. 656. P. v. 6. p. 134.

A Diſcourſe about Elias the Prophet, Ed. Eton, v. 5. p. 672. P. v. 6. p. 128.

Upon S. John's Conception, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 831. P. v. 6. p. 516.

A Sermon upon S. John, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 531. P. v. 6. p. 311.

Two Sermons upon S. John the Baptiſt and Herodias, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 545. and 549. P. v. 6. p. 281. 379.

Two other Sermons upon S. John, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 531. and 533.

A Sermon upon the Twelve Apoſtles, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 995. P. v. 6. p. 320.

An Homily upon S. Peter and S. Paul, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 995. P. v. 6. p. 315.

A Sermon of S. Thomas, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 837. P. v. 5. p. 324.

Another Sermon upon S. Thomas, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 575.

A Sermon upon S. Stephen, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 864. P. v. 6. p. 328.

Another Sermon upon the ſame, Ed. Eng. v. 9. p. 871.

Three others, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 579.

A Panegyrick upon S. John the Evangeliſt, Ed. P. v. 6. p. 605.

Two other Sermons upon S. John the Evangeliſt, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 342. 344.

A ſecond Sermon upon S. Romanus, Ed. Eng. v. 5. *p.*840. P. v. 1. p. 546.

St. Chryſoſtom's Treatiſes.

Genuine BOOKS.

A Book againſt the Gentiles, Ed. Eng. v. 5. p. 442. P. v. 1. p. 647.

A Writing againſt Jews and Gentiles, to prove that Jeſus Chriſt is God, Ed. A. v. 6. p. 622. P. v. 5. p. 729.

A Treatiſe againſt thoſe who find fault with a Monaſtick Life, Edit. Eton, v. 6. p. 161. P. v. 4. p. 355.

A Compariſon betwixt a Monk and a King, Ed. Eton, v. 7. p. 230. P. v. 4. p. 449.

A Treatiſe againſt ſuch as will be ſcandalized without a cauſe, Edit. Eng. v. 7. p. 1. P. v. 5. p. 756.

Two Diſcourſes to Theodorus, the ſecond ought to be placed firſt, Ed. Eng. v. 6. p. 55. P. v. 4. p. 545.

Six Books of the Prieſthood, Ed. Eng. v. 6. p. 1. P. v. 4. p. 1.

A Treatiſe of Compunction of heart to Demetrius, Ed. Eton, v. 6. p. 138. P. v. 4. p. 98.

Two Books of Compunction of heart to Stelechius, Ed. Eton, v. 6. p. 131. P. v. 4. p. 121.

Three Books of Divine Providence to Stagirius, Ed. Eng. v. 6. p. 84. P. v. 4. p. 1. 7.

A Treatiſe of Virginity, Ed. Eng. v. 6. p. 244. P. v. 4. p. 275.

Two Diſcourſes againſt Womens dwelling with Clergymen, Ed. Eng. v. 6. p. 214. and 230. P. v. 4. p. 225. and 247.

Another Diſcourſe ſhewing, That a Clergyman ought not to uſe jeſting, Ed. Eng. v. 6. p. 963. P. v. 6. p. 594.

Two Diſcourſes to a Young Widow, Ed. Eng. v. 6. p. 296. and 304. P. v. 4. p. 456. and 469.

A Treatiſe to ſhew that no man can be offended but by himſelf, Edit. Eng. v. 7. p. 36. P. v. 4. p. 498.

Two Letters to Pope Innocent, Ed. P. v. 4. *p.*593. and 599.

A Letter concerning his Perſecution, to the Prieſts and Biſhops caſt into Priſon. Edit. P. p. 600.

Two hundred forty two Letters to Olympias and others, Ed. Eng. v. 7. p. 51. to p. 205. P. v. 4. p. 603, &c. to p. 834.

A Letter to Cæſarius a Monk, Printed by it ſelf;

Spurious Book.

Liturgy, Edition Eton, v. 6. p. 983. P. v. 4. p. 522.

Edit. Eng. and Eton, ſignifies Sir Henry Savile's Edition in Greek; P. is Paris Edition in Greek and Latin; L. is the Lions Edition, only in Latin.

ANTIOCHUS.

Genuine Books.

A Fragment produced by Theodoret, in his Second Dialogue.

Other Fragments produced by Gelaſius in the Book of the two Natures.

Books Loſt.

A Diſcourſe againſt Covetouſneſs.

A Sermon upon the Parable of the Man that was Born Blind, and ſeveral other Homilies.

SEVERIANUS.

Genuine Books.

A Sermon on the Seals, another upon the brazen Serpent, & ſeveral others which are found among St. Chryſoſtom's.

Six Sermons of the Creation of the World.

Two Fragments produced by Gelaſius and ſome others, drawn from the Catenæ upon the Scripture.

Books Loſt.

A Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Galatians.

A Treatiſe upon the Feaſt of the Baptiſm and Epiphany of Jeſus Chriſt.

A Diſcourſe againſt Novatus, and ſeveral Sermons.

ASTERIUS.

Genuine Books.

Eleven Sermons on different Subjects.

Extracts of ſeveral others related by Photius.

Three Homilies upon the Pſalms, publiſhed by Cotelerius; if they are really his.

Books Loſt.

Several other Sermons.

ANASTASIUS.

Genuine Book.

A Letter to John of Jeruſalem.

Books Loſt.

A Synodical Letter againſt Origen.

A Letter to Ruſinus.

A Letter to Venerius.

A Treatiſe of the Incarnation.

Suppoſititious Books.

Two Letters, one to the Biſhops of Germany and Burgundy, and the other to Nectarius.

CHROMACIUS.

Genuine Book.

A Diſcourſe upon the Beatitudes.

Books Loſt.

Commentaries upon the whole Goſpel of St. Matthew.

Several Sermons.

Suppoſititious Book.

Letter of Chromacius to St. Jerom, upon the Martyrology.

GAUDENTIUS.

Genuine Books.

Nineteen Sermons.

Four ſmall Treatiſes.

The Life of St. Philaſtrius.

JOHN of Jeruſalem.

Book Loſt.

An Apologetick againſt his Enemies.

Suppoſititious Book.

Treatiſe to Capraſius of the Inſtitution of Monks.

THEOPHILUS of Alexandria.

Genuine Books.

Three Paſchal Letters, among the Works of St. Jerom.

Three other Letters, ibid.

Some Greek Fragments of other Paſchal Letters, related by Theodoret and the Councils of Epheſus and Chalcedon.

Another Fragment of his Treatiſe againſt Origen, and two Fragments of a Treatiſe addreſſed to the Monks of Scitha.

Five Canonical Letters.

Books Loſt.

A Treatiſe againſt Origen.

A Treatiſe againſt the Anthropomorphites.

A Cycle of the Feaſt of Eaſter.

A Treatiſe to the Monks of Scitha, written againſt St. John Chryſoſtom.

Two firſt Paſchal Letters, and the Sixth.

THEODORUS of Mopſueſtia.

* Vide the Catalogue of his Works in his Life.

A TABLE of the Writings of Eccleſiaſtical Authors, &c.

PALLADIUS.

Genuine Books.

. . . . . Hiſtoria Lauſiaca.

Life of St. John Chryſoſtom, written perhaps by another Palladius.

INNOCENT I.

Genuine Works.

Thirty four Letters, whereof the Thirtieth is Suppoſititious.

St. JEROM.

Genuine Books ſtill Extant.

Forty nine Letters of Exhortation, Inſtruction or Commendation, with the Lives of St. Paul the Hermit, St. Hilarion and Malchus contained in the firſt Tome of his Works.

A Treatiſe againſt Helvidius.

Two Books againſt Jovinian.

An Apology for thoſe Books addreſſed to Pammachius.

An Apologetical Letter to Domnion and Pammachius.

A Letter and Treatiſe againſt Vigilantius.

A Letter to Marcella againſt Montanus.

A Letter to Riparius againſt Vigilantius.

A Letter to Apronius againſt the Origeniſts.

Two Letters to Damaſus upon the Hypoſtaſes.

A Dialogue againſt the Luciferians.

A Letter to Avitus, concerning the Errours of Origen.

A Tranſlation of the Letter of St. Epiphanius to John of Jeruſalem.

A Letter to Pammachius againſt the Errours of John of Jeruſalem.

A Letter to Theophilus againſt the ſame.

A Letter to Rufinus.

Three Books of Apology againſt Rufinus.

A Letter to Cteſiphon, and Three Books of Dialogues againſt the Pelagians.

Three Letters to Theophilus.

A Letter againſt Vigilantius.

Some other Letters on divers Subjects of Doctrine, particularly to St. Auguſtin.

A Treatiſe of the beſt manner of Tranſlating.

Fifty Critical Letters or thereabouts, upon the Holy Scriptures.

A Book of the Names of Countries and Cities mentioned in the Bible.

An Explication of the Proper Names of the Hebrews.

An Explication of the Hebrew Alphabet and Jewiſh Traditions.

Letters to Minerius and Paulinus.

A Treatiſe of Illuſtrious Men, or of Eccleſiaſtical Writers.

A Latin Verſion of the Text of the Bible from the Septuagint.

A New Verſion from the Hebrew Text.

Eighteen Books of Commentaries upon Iſaiah.

Six Books upon Jeremiah.

Fourteen Books upon Ezekiel.

One Book upon Daniel.

A Commentary upon Eccleſiaſtes, and upon the Twelve minor Prophets.

A Harmony of the Four Goſpels.

Four Books of Notes upon the Goſpel of St. Matthew.

Commentaries upon the Epiſtles of St Paul to the Galatians, to the Epheſians, to Titus, and to Philemon.

A Tranſlation of the Book of Didymus, concerning the Holy Ghoſt.

A Tranſlation of ſome Homilies of Origen.

A Tranſlation of Euſebius's Chronicon.

Books Loſt.

Annotations upon the Pſalms.

A Commentary upon the Tenth Pſalm, and upon the Six following.

A Treatiſe upon the Book of Job.

A Treatiſe of Hereſies.

A Treatiſe of the Reſurrection.

A Letter to Antius.

Annotations upon the Prophets.

Suppoſititious Books.

Queſtions, upon the Chronicles, and upon the Books of Kings.

An Explication of the Names of Countries and Cities ſpoken of in the Acts of the Apoſtles.

A Commentary upon the Lamentations of Jeremiah.

A Book of Annotations upon St. Mark.

A Commentary upon the Pſalms.

A Commentary upon the Epiſtles of St. Paul.

A Letter to Demetrias.

Letters and Treatiſes in the laſt Tome, upon which there is a Cenſure paſt at the end of the Account of St. Jerom's Works in this Volume.

RUFINUS.

Genuine Books.

Tranſlations of the Works of ſeveral Authors, of which there is a Catalogue in Rufinus's Life.

Two Books of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory.

A Diſcourſe concerning the Falſification of the Books of Origen.

A Book of Invectives againſt St. Jerom.

An Apology, to Pope Anaſtaſius.

An Explication of the Creed.

An Explication of the Benedictions of Jacob.

A Commentary upon the Prophets, Hoſea, Joel, and Amos.

Books Loſt.

Several Letters, and ſome Tranſlations.

Suppo-

Suppoſititious Books.

A Commentary upon the Seventy five Firſt Pſalms.

SOPHRONIUS.

Genuine Book.

A Verſion into Greek of St. Ferom's Treatiſe of Illuſtrious Men.

Books Loſt.

An Elogy on Bethlehem.
A Diſcourſe of the Ruin of Serapis.
A Tranſlation of St. Ferom's Treatiſe of Virginity.
A Tranſlation of the Latin Verſion of the Pſalms and the Prophets, made by St. Ferom.

SULPICIUS SEVERUS.

Genuine Books.

An Abridgment of Sacred Hiſtory divided into two Books.
The Life of St. Martin.
Three Letters concerning the Vertues and Death of that Saint.
Three Dialogues.
Seven Letters.

Books Loſt.

Several Letters of Piety.

St. PAULINUS.

Genuine Books.

Fifty Letters of Doctrine and Piety.
The Paſſion of St. Geneſius.
Thirty two Pieces of Poetry.

Books Loſt.

An Abridgment of the Hiſtory of the Kings.
A Panegyrick upon Theodoſius.
A Letter to his Siſter, of the Contempt of the World; and ſome others.
A Treatiſe of Penance, and of the Praiſe of Martyrs.
Offices upon the Sacraments.

PELAGIUS.

Genuine Books.

A Commentary on the Epiſtle of St. Paul attributed to St. Ferom.
A Letter to Demetrias, and ſome others, in the laſt Tome of St. Ferom.
A Confeſſion of Faith, to Pope Innocent.
Fragments of a Treatiſe of the Power of Nature, and Free-Will, in St. Auguſtin.

Books Loſt.

A Treatiſe of the Power of Nature.
Several Books concerning Free-Will.

COELESTIUS.

Genuine Books.

Six Propoſitions.
Eight Definitions or Reaſonings.
A Profeſſion of Faith, to Pope Zoſimus, of which we have only ſome Fragments.

NICEAS.

Books Loſt.

Six Books of Inſtructions.
A Treatiſe addreſſed to a Virgin fallen into Sin.

OLYMPIUS.

Book Loſt.

A Treatiſe of the Beginning and Nature of Sin.

BACHIARIUS.

Genuine Work.

A Letter concerning the Penance of a Monk.

Books Loſt.

A Treatiſe of Faith.
A Diſcourſe concerning the End of Solomon's Life.

SABBATIUS.

Book Loſt.

A Treatiſe of Faith.

ISAAC.

Genuine Book.

A Treatiſe concerning the Trinity and the Incarnation.

PAULUS OROSIUS.

Genuine Book.

An Univerſal Hiſtory, entituled Hormeſta.

A TABLE of the Writings of the Eccleſiaſtical Author, &c.

LUCIAN.

Genuine BOOK.

The Hiſtory of the Invention of the Relicks of St. Stephen.

AVITUS.

Genuine BOOK.

A Tranſlation of the Book of Lucian, of the Invention of the Reliques of St. Stephen.

EVODIUS.

Genuine BOOK.

A Treatiſe of Faith or of the Unity of the Trinity, among the Works of St. Auguſtine.

Suppoſititious BOOKS.

Two Books of the Miracles of St. Stephen's Relicks.

SEVERUS.

Genuine WORK.

A Letter of the Converſion of the Jews in the Iſland of Minorca, made by the Miracles of the Relicks of St. Stephen.

MARCELLUS MEMORIALIS.

Genuine BOOK.

The Acts of the Conference of Carthage.

EUSEBIUS.

BOOK Loſt.

A Treatiſe of the Myſtery of the Croſs.

URSINUS.

Genuine BOOK.

A Treatiſe concerning the Re-baptizing of thoſe Baptiz'd by Heretioks.

MACARIUS.

BOOK Loſt.

A Treatiſe againſt Aſtrologers.

HELIODORUS.

BOOK Loſt.

A Treatiſe of Virginity.

PAULUS.

BOOK Loſt.

A Treatiſe of Penance.

HELVIDIUS.

BOOK Loſt.

A Treatiſe againſt the Virginity of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary, refuſed by St. Jerom.

VIGILANTIUS.

WORKS Loſt.

Some Treatiſes of the Diſcipline of the Church.

St. AUGUSTINE.

TOME I.

Genuine WORKS.

Two Books intituled of Retractations.
Thirteen Books of Confeſſions.
Three Books againſt the Academicks.
A Treatiſe of Bleſſedneſs.
Two Books of Order.
Two Books of Soliloquies.
A Treatiſe of the Immortality of the Soul.
A Treatiſe of the Quantity of the Soul.
A Treatiſe of Muſick, divided into ſix Books.
The Book Of a Maſter.
Three Books of Free-will.
Two Books upon Geneſis againſt the Manichees.
A Book of the True Religion.
The Rule.

WORKS Loſt.

A Treatiſe of Beauty and Knowledge.
Treatiſes of Grammar, Logick, Rhetorick, Geometry, Arithmetick and Philoſophy.

Suppoſititious BOOKS.

Treatiſes of Grammar.
Of Logick.
Of Categories.
Of Rhetorick.
Monaſtick Rules.

TOME II.

Genuine WORKS.

Two Hundred and Seventy Letters, divided into four Claſſes.
The firſt contains the Letters written from the time of his Converſion to his Ordination, from the year 386. to the year 395. in Number thirty.
The ſecond contains the Letters written to the year 410. in Number 92.
The third, the Letters written between that time and his Death, to the Number of 109.
The laſt Claſs contains the Letters to which there are no dates; in Number 39.

Suppoſititious WORKS.

Thirteen Letters of St. Auguſtin to Boniface, and of Boniface to St. Auguſtin.
A Letter to Demetrias.
A Letter of St. Auguſtin to St Cyril.
A Diſpute with Paſcentius.

TOME III.

Which Contains the Treatiſes upon Scripture.

Genuine.

Four Books of Chriſtian Doctrine.
An imperfect Work upon Geneſis.

A TABLE of the Writings of the Eccleſiaſtical Authors, &c.

Twelve Books upon Geneſis.
Seven critical Books of the ways of ſpeaking uſed in the ſeven firſt Books of the Bible.
Seven Books of Queſtions upon the ſame Books.
Annotations upon Job.
The Looking-glaſs.
A Treatiſe of the Harmony of the Goſpels, divided into four Books.
A Commentary upon the Sermon of Jeſus Chriſt upon the Mount.
Two Books of Queſtions upon the Goſpel of St. Matth. 'Tis queſtion'd whether this Book be Genuine.
A Hundred and twenty four Treatiſes upon the Goſpel of St. John.
Ten Homilies upon the firſt Epiſtle of St. John.
An Explication of ſeveral places of the Epiſtle to the Romans.
An Imperfect Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Romans.
A continued Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Galatians.

Suppoſititious.

Treatiſe of the Miracles in the Scripture, divided into three Books.
A Diſcourſe of the Benedictions of the Patriarch Jacob.
Queſtions upon the Old and New Teſtament.
An Explication of the Revelation.

TOME IV.

Genuine.

An Explication of the Pſalms.

TOME V.

Genuine.

An Hundred eighty three Sermons, upon ſeveral paſſages of the Old and New Teſtament.
Eighty eight Sermons upon the great Feſtivals of the Year.
Sixty nine upon the Feſtivals of the Saints.
Twenty three upon divers Subjects.
Fragments of the Sermons of St. Auguſtin.

Suppoſititious.

The laſt Claſſe of Sermons which contains thoſe that are dubious.
The Addition which contains three hundred and ſeventeen ſuppoſititious Sermons.

TOME VI.

Which Contains the Dogmatical Works.

Genuine.

Anſwers to eighty three Queſtions.
Two Books of Queſtions to Simplicianus.
Anſwers to Eight Queſtions of Dulcitius.
A Treatiſe of the Belief of things that we know nothing of.
An Explication of the Creed.
A Treatiſe of Faith and good Works.
The Manual to Laurentius.
The Combat of a Chriſtian.
The Book of Inſtruction.
A Treatiſe of Continence.
A Treatiſe of the advantages of Marriage.
A Treatiſe of the Holy Virginity.
A Treatiſe of the advantages of Widowhood.
Two Books concerning thoſe Marriages, which cannot be excuſed of Adultery.
A Book concerning Lying.
A Treatiſe againſt Lying.
A Treatiſe of the Labour of Monks.
A Treatiſe againſt the Predictions of the Devil.
A Treatiſe of the care we ought to have for the dead.
A Treatiſe of Patience.
A Sermon upon the Creed.

Suppoſititious.

Three Sermons on the Creed.
A Sermon of the fourth Day of Paſſion Week.
A Diſcourſe concerning the Deluge.
A Sermon upon the Perſecution of the Barbarians.
A Sermon upon the new Canticle
A Sermon of the Diſcipline and Uſefulneſs of faſting.
A Sermon upon the taking of Rome.
A Collection of Twenty one Queſtions.
Sixty five Queſtions.
A Book of Faith to Peter.
A Book of the Spirit, and of the Soul.
A Treatiſe of Friendſhip.
A Book of the Subſtance of Love.
A Book of the Love of God.
Soliloquies.
A Book of Meditations.
A Treatiſe of Contrition of Heart.
The Manual.
The Looking-glaſs.
The Looking glaſs of a Sinner.
The Ladder of Paradiſe.
A Treatiſe of the knowledge of Life.
A Book of the Chriſtian Life.
A Book of wholſom Inſtructions.
A Book of the twelve Abuſes of the Age.
The Combat of Virtues and Vices.
A Book of Sobriety and Charity.
A Book of true and falſe Repentance.
A Treatiſe of Antichriſt.
A Treatiſe upon the Magnificat.
A Treatiſe of the Aſſumption of the Bleſſed Virgin.
A Diſcourſe concerning the Viſitation of the Sick.
Some Sermons.
Sermon to the Brothers Hermits.

TOME VII.

Genuine.

Twenty two Books of the City of God.

TOME VIII.

Contains his Writings againſt Heretick.

Genuine.

A Treatiſe of Herefies to Quodvultdeus.
A Treatiſe againſt the Jews.
A Treatiſe of the Uſefulneſs of Faith.
A Treatiſe of two Souls.
A Conference with Fortunatus.
A Treatiſe againſt Adimantus.
A Treatiſe againſt the Epiſtle of the foundation of the Manichees.
Thirty three Books againſt Fauſtus a Manichee.
A Conference with Felix.
A Treatiſe of the Nature of Good.

A Book

A Book againſt Secundinus.
Two Books againſt the Adverſary of the Law and the Prophets.
A Treatiſe againſt the Prisſilianiſts and the Origeniſts.
An Anſwer to a Diſcourſe of an Arian.
A Conference againſt Maximinus.
Fifteen Books of the Trinity.

Suppoſititious.

A Diſcourſe of five Hereſies.
A Trial between the Church and the Synagogue.
The Book of Faith.
A Memorial of the manner of Receiving the Manichees.
A Book of the Unity of the Trinity.
A Treatiſe of the Eſſence of the Divinity.
A Dialogue of the Unity of the Holy Trinity.
A Book of Eccleſiaſtical Doctrines.

TOME IX.

Contains the Treatiſes againſt the Donatiſts.

Genuine.

A Hymn againſt the Donatiſts.
Three Books againſt the Epiſtle of Parmenian.
Seven Books of Baptiſm.
Three Books againſt Petilianus.
A Letter to the Catholicks againſt Petilianus.
Four Books againſt Creſconius.
A Book of one Baptiſm againſt Petilianus.
An Abridgment of the Conference of Carthage.
A Diſcourſe addreſs'd to the Donatiſts after the Conference of Carthage.
A Conference with Emeritus.
Two Books againſt Gaudentius.

WORKS Loſt.

A Book againſt the Epiſtle of Donatus.
Two Books againſt the Donatiſts.
A Book againſt Centurius.
A Book of the Proofs and Teſtimonies againſt the Donatiſts.
A Treatiſe againſt a Donatiſt.
Advertiſements to the Donatiſts.
A Diſcourſe addreſſed to Emeritus.

Suppoſititious.

A Sermon concerning Ruſticianus.
A Book againſt Fulgentius.

TOME X.

Contains the Treatiſes againſt the Pelagians.

Genuine.

Three Books of Merits, and of the Remiſſion of Sins.
A Book of the Spirit, and of the Letter.
A Treatiſe of Nature and Grace.
A Book of the Acts of Pelagius.
A Treatiſe of the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt.
A Treatiſe of Original Sin.
A Treatiſe of the Perfection of Juſtice.
Two Books of Marriage and of Concupiſcence.
Six Books againſt Julian.
Four Books to Boniface.
A Book of Grace and Free-will.
A Treatiſe of Correction and Grace.
A Treatiſe of the Predeſtination of the Saints.
A Treatiſe of the Gift of Perſeverance.
Six Books of the ſecond Work againſt Julian.
Four Treatiſes of the Origin of the Soul.

Suppoſititious.

A Treatiſe, entituled Hypognoſticon.
A Treatiſe of Predeſtination and Grace.
A Treatiſe of Predeſtination.

ZOSIMUS.

Genuine WORKS.

The Firſt Letter to the Africans.
The Second Letter to the Africans.
The Third Letter to the Africans.
A Fragment of a Letter to all the Biſhops againſt Cæleſtius and Pelagius.
A Letter to the Biſhops of Gaul of the Privileges of the Church of Arles.
A Letter to the Biſhops of Gallia Viennenſis, and Gallia Narbonenſis.
A Letter to Hilary of Narbon.
Two Letters to Patroclus.
A Letter to the People of Marſeilles.
A Circular Letter againſt Urſus and Tuentius.
A Letter to Heſychius, Biſhop of Salona.
A Letter to the Clergy of Ravenna.
A Letter to the Biſhops of Byzacena very doubtful.

BONIFACE I.

Genuine WORKS.

A Letter to the Emperour.
A Letter to Patroclus, and to the Biſhops of the Seven Provinces of the Gauls.
Letters to Hilary of Narbon.

SYNESIUS.

Genuine BOOKS.

A Diſcourſe of the manner of Reigning well.
A Diſcourſe to Pæonius.
A Book, entituled Dion Pruſæus.
A Panegyrick upon Baldneſs.
Two Books of Providence.
A Diſcourſe of Dreams.
One hundred and fifty Letters.

WORKS loſt.

Cynegeticks.

A Table of the Acts, Profeſſions of Faith, and Canons of the Councils, mentioned in this Volume.

Councils.	Years held in.	Acts, Profeſſions of Faith, and Canons.
Of Rome. under Innocent.		A Preface and ſixteen Canons.
Of Milevis.	402	Five Canons.
Of Conſtantinople and of Epheſus.	400 & 401	Acts of this Council in Palladius.
In the Suburbs of Chalcedon.	403	Acts of this Council, an Abridgement of them in Photius.
Of Carthage.	403	Acts, related in the Acts of the 3d. Conference of Carthage.
Of Carthage.	404	Acts of this Council in the Code of the Canons of Africa.
Of Carthage.	405	An Abridgment of the Acts in the ſame Code.
Of Carthage.	407	Twelve Canons in the ſame Code.
Of Carthage.	408	Deputations mention'd in the African Code.
Another of the ſame Year.
Of Carthage.	409	A Declaration in the African Code.
Of Carthage.	410	Deputation, ibid.
Of Ptolemais.	411	See the 67th. Letter of Syneſius.
Of Carthage.	411	Acts.
Of Zerta.	412	The 141ſt. Letter among thoſe of St. Auguſtin.
Firſt of Carthage againſt Cœleſtius.	411	Fragment of the Acts of this Council in St. Auguſtin, Book 2. Of Nature and of Grace.
Conference of Jeruſalem.	415	Acts.
Of Dioſpolis.	418	Acts, in St. Auguſtin, in the Book of the Acts of Pelagius.
Second of Carthage againſt Cœleſtius and Pelagius.	416
Of Milevis.	416	Letters, 175th 176th. and 177th amongſt thoſe of St. Auguſtin.
Of Carthage.	417	Letter to Zoſimus, and a Collection of ſome pieces.
Of Carthage.	418	Eight Canons againſt the Errours of Pelagius, and Ten Canons concerning Diſcipline.
Of Tella or Zella.	418	Some Canons.
Of Carthage concerning Apiarius, in the Year.	418	Acts. Letter to Zoſimus.
Another in	419
Of Ravenna.	419	Acts, Thirty three Canons, ſix other Canons, Letters to Boniface, and to Cœleſtine.
Of Carthage in the Year.	420
Of Conſtantinople.	426	A Synodical Letter.
Of Carthage againſt Leporius.	427	Profeſſion of Faith, and Letter to the Biſhops of Gaul.
Of Conſtantinople.	428

A Table of all the Writings of the Eccleſiaſtical Authors mentioned in this Volume, according to the Order of their Arguments.

Treatiſes for the Chriſtian Religion againſt the Pagans and Jews.

ST. Chryſoſtom's Treatiſe againſt the Gentiles.
Prudentius's two Books againſt Symmachus.
St. Chryſoſtom's ſix Sermons againſt the Jews.
A Diſcourſe againſt the Jews and Gentiles.
St. Auguſtin's Book of the true Religion, and of the manners of the Church.
——His twenty two Books of the City of God.
——His Treatiſe againſt the Jews.
——His Letters 16th. 17th, 91ſt, 232d, 233d, 234th. 235th.

Treatiſes againſt Hereticks.

St. Auguſtin's Treatiſe of Hereſies.

MANICHEES.

St. Auguſtin's two Books upon Geneſis againſt the Manichees.
——His Book of the Manners of the Church, and of the Manners of the Manichees.
——Of the Uſefulneſs of Faith.
——Of Two Souls.
——Conference with Fortunatus and Felix.
——Againſt Adimantus.
——Againſt the Epiſtle of the Foundation of the Manichees.
——Againſt Fauſtus, Thirty three Books.
——Of the Nature of Good.
——Againſt Secundinus.
——Againſt the Adverſary of the Law and the Prophets. Two Books.
—— Letters 79th. and 236th.

ORIGENISTS.

Anaſtaſius's Letter to John of Jeruſalem, and a fragment of a Synodical Letter of his againſt Origen.
John of Jeruſalem his Apology.
Theophilus's Paſchal Letters.
St. Jerom's Apologetick to Domnion and Pammachius.
——Letters to Apronius and Avitus againſt the Errours of Origen.
——His

A TABLE of the Writings of the Eccleſiaſtical Authors, &c.

——His three Books of Apology againſt Ruſinus.
The Invectives of Ruſinus againſt St. Jerom.
——His Apology to Pope Anaſtaſius.
St. Auguſtin's Treatiſe againſt the Origeniſts and Priſcillianiſts.
——His 237th Letter againſt the Priſcillianiſts.
——His 265th. Letter againſt the Novatians.

ARIANS.

St. Jerom's Treatiſe againſt Helvidius.
—— His two Books againſt Jovinian, with his Apology to Pammachius.
——His Treatiſe againſt Vigilantius, and two Books againſt the ſame.
——Dialogue againſt the Luciferians.
St. Auguſtin's Anſwer to the Diſcourſe of an Arian.
——His Conference againſt Maximinus.
——His Letters 238th. 239th, 240th, 241ſt, and 242d.

PELAGIANS.

St. Jerom's Letter to Cteſiphon, and three Books of Dialogues againſt the Pelagians.
St. Auguſtin's Treatiſe againſt the Pelagians, contained in the tenth Tome of his Works, whereof ſee the Catalogue in the preceding Table.
——His Letter 140th. and others noted in the Table of Letters, diſpoſed according to their Arguments by the Benedictines.
Canons of the Council of Carthage of the Year 418.
Acts of the Council of Dioſpolis, of the Conference of Jeruſalem, and of the Councils of Carthage and Mileviſ againſt Pelagius and Cæleſtius.

DONATISTS.

St. Auguſtin's Treatiſes againſt the Donatiſts, contained in the ninth Tome of his Works. See the Catalogue as above.
——His other Treatiſes and Letters againſt the ſame Hereticks; whereof there is a Table at the end of the ninth Tome.
——His Letter 23d. and others marked by the Benedictines in the Table of Letters.

Treatiſes upon the Articles of Religion.

St. Chryſoſtom's ſix Diſcourſes, of the incomprehenſible Nature of God.
——His Treatiſe of the Divine Providence to Stagyrius.
——Treatiſe of Virginity.
Ruſinus's Explication of the Creed.
The Confeſſions of Faith of Pelagius and Cæleſtius.
St. Auguſtin's Treatiſes of the true Religion, and the Manners of the Church.
——his explication of the Creed.
——Manual to Laurentius.
——Diſcourſe of the Inſtruction of the Ignorant.
——Diſcourſe of the Belief of things we cannot comprehend.
——Treatiſe of Faith and Good Works.
——Treatiſe of the Uſefulneſs of Faith.
——Letters upon divers Articles of Religion, marked in the Catalogue of the Benedictines.
——his Books of Retractations.

Upon the Trinity.

St. Jerom's two Letters to Damaſus upon the Hypoſtaſes.
St. Chryſoſtom's Sermon concerning the Conſubſtantiality.
A Treatiſe of Iſaac a converted Jew, upon the Trinity and the Incarnation.
St. Auguſtin's fifteen Books upon the Trinity.

Upon the Incarnation.

Fragments of Homilies of Flavianus and Antiochus, produced by Theodoret.
Fragments of Theodorus Mopſueſtenus.
St. Chryſoſtome's Letter to Cæſarius againſt the Errors of Apollinaris, where alſo the Euchariſt is ſpoken of.

Upon different Subjects.

St. Chryſoſtom's Homily concerning the Reſurrection of the Dead.
—— his Sermon concerning Dæmons.
St. Paulinus's Twelfth and Forty ſecond Letters concerning the Fall of Man and the Merits of Jeſus Chriſt.
St. Auguſtin's Books againſt the Academicks.
——his Treatiſe of Bleſſedneſs.
——Treatiſe of Immortality, and of the quantity of the Soul.
——Diſcourſe of Muſick.
——Book of a Maſter.
——Three Books of Free-will.
——Anſwers to ſeveral Queſtions.
——Anſwers to the Queſtions of Simplicianus, and Dulcitius.
——Two Diſcourſes againſt Lying.
——Another Diſcourſe concerning the Prediction of Dæmons.
——Four Books concerning the Origination of the Soul.

Treatiſes concerning the Diſcipline of the Church.

The Canonical and Paſchal Letters of Theophilus.
The Letters of Pope Innocent I.
Some of St. Chryſoſtom's Sermons upon the chief Feaſts of the Year.
St. Chryſoſtom's Defence of a Monaſtick Life.
——Compariſon between a Monk and a King.
——Books of the Prieſthood.
——Two Diſcourſes to Theodorus.
——Three Treatiſes of Compunction of heart.
——Treatiſe of Virginity.
——Two Diſcourſes againſt Women's cohabiting with Clerks.
——Diſcourſe to a Nun againſt Raillery.
——Two Diſcourſes to a Young Widow.
——Homily of Anathema and ſome others of his.
St. Jerom's Letters contained in the firſt Tome of his Works.
——Treatiſes againſt Jovinian and Vigilantius.
Several Letters of St. Paulinus, and particularly the 1ſt. 2d. 45th. 46th. 22d. 23d. 26th. 29th. 30th. 32d. 38th.
Letter of Bachiarius concerning Penance.
Urſinus's Treatiſe againſt the Reiteration of Baptiſm conferr'd by Hereticks.
St. Auguſtin's Treatiſes concerning Continence and the benefits of Marriage, of Holy Virginity, of the advantages of Widowhood, of adulterous Marriages, of the labour of Monks, and of the care they ought to have for the Dead.
——his Anſwers to the Queſtions of Dulcitius.
——Letters marked in the Table of the Benedictins.
The Letter of Pope Zoſimus and Pope Boniface I.
Syneſius's Letters, and particularly the 5th. 9th. 11th. 12th. 13th. 57th. 58th. 79th. 89th. 66th. 67th. 76th. 95th. and 105th.

Canons of the Councils related at the end of this Volume.

Books

A TABLE of the Writings of the Eccleſiaſtical Authors, &c.

Books of Morality and Piety.

Treatiſes and Fragments of Books of Evagrius Ponticus.
Spiritual Diſcourſes of Mark the Hermit.
Prudentius's Pſychomachia, Cathemerinon, and Hamartigenia.
Diadochus's Hundred Chapters of a Spiritual Life.
Severianus's Sermon among the Works of St. Chryſoſtom.
Aſterius of Amaſea's Sermons with the Extracts of Photius.
Gaudentius's Works.
The forty nine Letters contained in the firſt Tome of St. Jerom's Works.
St. Chryſoſtom's Sermons, whereof ſee the Catalogue in the Table.
——— his Diſcourſes of Piety and Morality, ſee the Catalogue ibid.
——— the greateſt part of his Letters.
Sulpicius Severus's Seven Letters.
——— the greateſt part of the Letters of St. Paulinus, and particularly the 1ſt. 13th. 22d. 23d. 30th. 32d.
St. Paulinus's Diſcourſe to Alethius, entituled the Eccleſiaſtical Treaſure.
Letter to Marcella and to Celancia attributed to St. Paulinus.
——— His Thirty two Poems.
Pelagius's Letter to Demetrias, and ſome others in St. Jerom.
St. Auguſtin's Confeſſions.
——— Book of the manners of the Church.
——— Soliloquies.
——— Book of the true Religion.
——— moſt part of his Sermons, chiefly thoſe of the ſecond, third, and fourth Claſſes.
——— Treatiſe of Faith and Good Works.
——— Manual to Laurentius.
——— Chriſtian Combat.
——— Treatiſe of Patience.
——— Moral Letters, mentioned in the Table of the Benedictines.
The Diſcourſes of Syneſius; and, particularly, that of the manner of well Reigning, and thoſe concerning Providence.
———His Letters, and particularly the 95th.

Commentaries and Diſcourſes upon the Holy Scripture.

BOOKS of Criticiſm.

St. Jerom's Treatiſe of the beſt manner of Tranſlating.
——— his Book of the Names of Countries and Cities ſpoken of in Scripture.
——— Explication of the proper Names of the Hebrews.
——— Explication of the Hebrew Alphabet.
——— Book of the Tradition of the Jews.
——— Fifty Letters upon divers critical Queſtions upon the Bible.
——— Letters to Minerius and Paulinus.
——— Verſions of the Text of the Bible from the Septuagint and from the Hebrew.
——— Harmony of the four Goſpels.
St. Chryſoſtom's Homily upon the beginning of the Acts, of the Uſefulneſs of reading the Holy Scripture, and ſome others.
St. Auguſtin's four Books of the Chriſtian Doctrine.
——— his ſeven Books, of particular ways of ſpeaking, uſed in the ſeven firſt Books of the Bible, and Queſtions upon the ſame Books.
——— The Mirrour of Scripture.
——— Harmony of the Goſpels.
——— Letters 143d. 137th. and 132d.
Books upon all the Scriptures.
See the Catalogue of St. Chryſoſtom's Works.

Upon the Old Teſtament.

Six Sermons of Severianus upon the Creation of the World.
An Imperfect Work of St. Auguſtin's upon Geneſis.
St. Auguſtin's twelve Books upon Geneſis.
——— Explication of all the Pſalms.
Aſterius's three Homilies upon the Pſalms.
Explication of the Benedictions of Jacob.
St. Jerom's Commentaries upon Iſaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, and upon the twelve minor Prophets.
Rufinus's Commentaries upon the Prophets Hoſea, Joel, and Amos.
St. Auguſtin's Notes upon Job.

Upon the New Teſtament.

St. Jerom's Notes upon the Goſpel of St. Matthew.
St. Auguſtin's Commentary upon Chriſt's Sermon in the Mount.
——Queſtions upon St. Matthew's and St. Luke's Goſpels.
——— Seventeen other Queſtions upon St. Matthew's Goſpel.
——— A Hundred twenty four Treatiſes or Homilies upon St. John's Goſpel.
Chromacius's Diſcourſe upon the Beatitudes.
St. Jerom's Commentaries upon St Paul's Epiſtles to the Galatians, Epheſians, Titus and Philemon.
Pelagius's Commentary upon all St. Paul's Epiſtles, attributed to St. Jerom.
St. Auguſtin's Explications of ſeveral paſſages in the Epiſtle to the Romans.
——— Imperfect Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Romans.
——— Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Galatians.
——— Ten Homilies upon the firſt Epiſtle of St. John.
——— Hundred eighty three Sermons upon ſeveral paſſages in the Old and New Teſtament.
——— Several Letters, noted in the Catalogue of the Benedictines.

Hiſtorical Treatiſes.

Vigilius of Trent his Letter concerning Martyrs.
Prudentius's Abridgment of the Hiſtory of the Old and New Teſtament.
——— Hymns of Crowns.
Palladius's Hiſtoria Lauſiaca.
——— Life of St. John Chryſoſtom.
St. Jerom's Lives of St. Paul the Hermit, St. Hilarion and Malchus.
——Treatiſes of Illuſtrious Men, with Sophronius's Verſion.
——Tranſlation of, and Supplement to Euſebius's Chronicle.
St. Chryſoſtom's Panegyricks of the Saints, whereof ſee the Catalogue in the Table.
——— Letters to Pope Innocent and ſome others.
Rufinus's two Books of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory.
A Diſc. concerning the falſification of the Books of Origen.
Sulpicius Severus's Abridgment of ſacred Hiſtory.
——— Life of St. Martin.
——— Dialogue concerning the Vertues of that Saint.
——Another Dialogue of the Lives of the Eaſtern Monks.
Paulinus's Paſſion of St. Geneſius.
——— Letter 49th and Poems upon St. Felix.
Paulus Oroſius's Univerſal Hiſtory.
Hiſt. of the Invention of St. Stephen's Relicks made by Lucian, and Tranſlated by Avitus.
Severus's Letter concerning the Miracles wrought by St. Stephen's Relicks in the Iſle of Minorca.
Acts of the Conference of Carthage digeſted by Marcellus Memorialis.
Some Serm. of St. Auguſtin, upon the Feaſts of the Saints.
St. Auguſtin's Treatiſe of Hereſies.
——— Hiſtorical Letters, mark'd in the Catalogue of the Benedictines.
Acts of the Councils, mentioned at the end of this Volume.

A General

A General INDEX.

Of the Principal Matters contained in the Third Volume.

A

Abnegation. To renounce the Riches of this World, unless we renounce our selves signifies little. . . . .

Absolution. Not to be granted to Penitents in danger of Death, but upon condition that if they recover their Health, they shall continue in a State of Penance 214

Acacius of Berœa, Enemy to S. Chrysostom, 9 Received a Letter of Communion from Pope Innocent, with a Charge not to continue his Hatred to that Saint, 11. This Letter is the Nineteenth among those of that Pope 70

Afflictions. Their Usefulness, 17. They are the Portion of the Saints, 30, 47. God often permits the most Just and Holy Men to be Afflicted with Poverty and Diseases 59

Alexander, who succeeded Porphyry in the Bishoprick of Antioch, was the First among the Eastern Bishops, that put S. Chrysostom's Name into the Diptychs, 11. The Fifteenth Letter of Innocent I. is addressed to him 69

Alms, 18. Their Effects, 40. As the water of Baptism extinguisheth the Fire of Hell, so the abundance of Alms extinguishes the Fire of Lust which remains after Baptism, or at least hinders it from enflaming 60

Ammonius an Egyptian Monk 8

Anastasius Pope, succeeded Siricius, 58. Condemned the Books and Person of Origen, ibid.

Anathema, Not to be pronounced upon light occasions against any, nor any rashly to be Condemned 21

Andragathius, Master in Philosophy to S. John Chrysostom 7

Angels. Their Creation, 189. They have Care over Men, Assist at the Divine Mysteries, and every one of the Faithful hath his Guardian Angel, 35. Why Moses did not speak of their Creation 53

Antiochus Bishop of Ptolemais, in Phœnicia, 52

Antoninus Bishop of Ephesus, Exarch of all Asia, accused in a Council held at Constantinople 8

Apparition of the Dead 155

Arms. The Profession of Arms is not forbid, 159

Arsacius, Brother to Nectarius, ordained Bishop of Constantinople, in place of S. John Chrysostom, in Exile 10

Asterius Bishop of Amasea a City in Pontus 53

Attention necessary in Prayer 44

Atticus Successor to Arsacius in the See of Constantinople, during the Exile of S. John Chrysostom 11

Audentius a Bishop in Spain 5

St. Augustin, Born at Tagasta a City of Numidia, 125. Learns Grammar there, and Studies Humanity at Madaura, and Rhetorick at Carthage, ibid. Returns to Tagasta, where he taught Grammar and frequented the Barr, ibid. He taught Rhetorick at Carthage, is engaged in the Errors of the Manichees, from thence he went to Rome, and after to Milan, making the same Profession, ibid. He there renounced the Errors of the Manichees, and having received Baptism, returned to Hippo, where against his Will he was ordained Priest by Valerius, ibid. The same Bishop made him his Co-adjutor, and he was ordained Bishop by the Primate of Numidia, 126. Dies in his own City, while it was besieged by the Vandals, ibid. A Critical Disquisition upon his Works, ibid. His Genius 206, 207.

Avitus a Priest of Spain, Friend to Paulus Orosius. 122

B

Bachiarius, a Christian Philosopher. 121

Balls. No Enemies so dangerous, as Nocturnal Divertisements, Balls, Musick-Meetings, and pernicious Dancings 46

Baptism. We receive by Baptism, not only Pardon and Remission of our sins, but also the Grace of the Holy Ghost, and several other spiritual Gifts, 36. It matters not who Baptizes, provided it be in the Name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost 198

Basil, Friend of S. Chrysostom 7

Basilina, Mother of the Emperor Julian 8

Benefices. The Goods of the Church are the Patrimony of the Poor 7

Bishop. Qualities which are necessary to him, 28, 29. He ought to be Learned, 29. His only Care ought to be to please God, ibid. The Glory of a Bishop, is to relieve the necessities of the Poor, 77. He ought to be an Example to his whole Church, ibid. They ought to be judged by those of their Province, 9. The Infamy of Bishops is not the Infamy of the Church, 214. They ought to be an Example to the people 215

Boniface I. Successor to Pope Zosimus 210
Bonosus, an ancient Companion of S. Jerom 74
Bread, a Mark of Union.

C

Canons, It is not permitted to a Bishop to be ignorant of them 69
Carterius, Superior of the Monks in the Suburbs of Antioch 7
Cœlestius, Companion and Disciple of Pelagius, 120. condemned in the Synod of Carthage, 207
Cœlibacy of the Clergy 85
Charity ought to be the sole end of all our Actions, 142. The Duties of Christian Charity cannot diminish; and the more we perform, the more we have to do 159
Children. A Father that brings up his Son ill is more cruel than if he had put him to Death 47
Chromacius, Bishop of Aquileia 58
S. John Chrysostom, Native of Antioch, 6. Baptized by Meletius, 7. Hides himself and flies to avoid being Ordain'd Bishop, ibid. Ordained Deacon by Meletius, and Priest by Flavianus, ibid. Elected Bishop of Constantinople, and ordain'd by Theophilus Bishop of Alexandria his Enemy, ibid. His strict Discipline caused him to be hated, ibid. His pastoral Vigilance, ibid. Reunites the Eastern and Western Churches, 8. Assembles a Synod at Ephesus, ibid. The Empress Eudoxia enraged against him, urges Theophilus to come to Constantinople, 9. He holds a Synod in the Suburbs of Chalcedon against S. Chrysostom, who refuses to be judged by that Council, his Enemies being the principal Judges, ibid. He was there deposed, ibid. The Emperor orders him to be banish'd, and he was accordingly conducted to a little City in Bithynia, 10. His return to Constantinople, ibid. Another Discontent of Eudoxia, ibid. A new Council confirms the first Sentence of Deposition against this Saint, ibid. Violences, and Edicts against S. Chrysostom, ibid. He Surrenders himself into the hands of those that had Orders to Arrest him, and is conducted to Nice, and from thence to Cucusus, the place of his Exile, ibid. Calamities at Constantinople, after the removal of S. Chrysostom, ibid. He writes to Pope Innocent, and to the Bishops of the West to implore their help, 11. The Pope sends him Letters of Communion, ibid. And also obtains Letters from Honorius to his Brother Arcadius in his Favour, ibid. Violence offer'd to the Persons that brought those Letters, ibid. S. Chrysostom remov'd from Cucusus to Pityus, a City upon the Euxin Sea, and dies in this Journey, ibid. Peace restored after his Death, 12. Critical Remarks upon his Works ibid.
The Church consists not in the Walls of it, but in the Holy Union with the Members of Jesus Christ, 13. It's perpetuity is an invincible proof of the truth of Religion, 34. The Church mixes the good with the bad, till the day of Judgment 198
Clinicks, Those who receive Baptism in their Bed, at the point of Death 36
Comedies. It is a kind of Adultery to go to Comedies 46
Communion. The forgetting of Injuries and Reconciliation, is a condition Essentially necessary to the worthy receiving the Sacrament, 21. The Revengeful is as unworthy of the Holy Communion, as the Blasphemer and Adulterer, 41. Disposition for worthy receiving 43
Council of Carthage, of the Year 403 P. 218
Council of Carthage, of the Year 404 ibid
Council of Carthage, of the Year 405 ibid
Council of Carthage, of the Year 407 ibid
Two Councils of Carthage, of the Year 408 p. 219
Council of Carthage, of the Year 409 ibid
Council of Carthage, in the Year 410 ibid
The First Council of Carthage, against Cœlestius in the Year 412, p. 221
Council of Carthage, in the Year 417 p. 222
Councils of Carthage, in the Year 418 ibid
Council of Carthange, in the Years 418, and 419, concerning the Cause of Apiarius 224
Council of Carthage, in the Year 420
Council of Carthage, in the Year 427 against Leporius
Council in the Suburbs of Chalcedon at the Oak in 403 p. 217
Council of Cirta, or Zerta, in the Year 412, p. 221
Councils held by S. Chrysostom at Constantinople, and at Ephesus, in 400, and 401 p. 217
Council of Constantinople, in the Year 426
Council of Constantinople, in the Year 428
Council of Diospolis in the Year 418 p. 221
Council of Milevis held in the Year 402 p. 217
Council of Milevis against Cœlestius and Pelagius, in the Year 416 p. 222
Council of Ptolemais, in Pentapolis, in the Year 411 p. 220
Council of Ravenna, in the Year 419
Council of Tella, or Zella, &c. of the Year 418 p. 224
Concupiscence, and an Inclination to evil, are the Consequents of the Sin of the first Man 35
Conference of Carthage, in the Year 411 p. 220
Conference of Jerusalem, in the Year 415 p. 221
Continence. True Continence consists in the suppressing all the Passions 180
Conversion. It is never too late to be converted 78
Correction, Ecclesiastical Princes have submitted to it, as well as others of the Faithful 38
Covetousness a kind of Idolatry, 45. Consists in the desire of having more than we ought to have. Other Vices diminish in time, but Covetousness encreases as we grow in years 55
Custom is a bad Reason where it is sinful 17
Customs of Churches ought to be observed, 82, 139 141
Cross. The Efficacy of the Sign of the Cross 5

Curiosity will not make us discover Mysteries, but it will make us lose the Faith, that must carry us to Salvation, and eternal Life 60

D

Dead. Oblations for the Dead received in the Church, 138. When the Eucharist is administred, or Alms made for all the Dead that have been baptized, they are Thanksgivings for those that have been extremely Good; they are Intercessions for those that have not been great Sinners; and as for those that have been very bad; if these things bring no Comfort to them, they serve at least for Consolation to the living, 178, 179. The Dead not to be lamented, but to rejoyce that they have left this unhappy Life, to enjoy an eternal Blessed one, 48. Their Relations ought to give Alms for them 38

Death. A Christian instead of fearing ought to desire it 48

Decentius Bishop of Eugubium, a City of Umbria in Italy 67

Devotion. Women ought not to give any cause of Discontent to their Husbands, by an indiscreet Devotion 167

Diadochus Bishop of Photice, a City of the ancient Epirus 5

Diadorus, Superior of the Monks in the Suburbs of Antioch 7

Dioscorus, a Monk of Egypt 8

Divinity, impossible to define it 2

Donatus, S. Jerom's Master 73

Drunkenness is of all Vices the most dangerous, and the most to be hated 45

E

Ecclesiasticks, their Dignity, 75, 76, their Duties, ibid. Their Habits 77

Education of Children, 79. Mothers are not less charg'd with the Education of Children than Fathers, 12, 18. Education of Daughters, 78, 80

S. Epiphanius, Bishop of Cyprus, a great Enemy to Origen 9

Evagrius, Three of that Name, Evagrius Ponticus, Evagrius of Antioch, Evagrius Scholasticus 1

Eucharist. Sacrament, 105. Eucharist explained, 59, 60. Disposition fit to partake of it, ibid. To receive it Fasting, 142. Dispositions requisite to worthy Communicating 37

Eudoxia, Empress of Constantinople, enraged against S. Chrysostom 9, 10

Evodius, Bishop of Uzala in Africa 122

Eusebius, Bishop of Valentinople in Asia 8

Eusebius, Father of S. Jerom. 73

Eusebius, an Ecclesiastical Author of the Fifth Century. 123

Euthymius, a Monk of Egypt 8

Excommunication unjust, does more Injury to him, that Pronounces it; than to him against whom, it is pronounced 167

Exuperius, Bishop of Tholouse, to whom Innocent I. addresses his Third Letter 68

F

FAITH. The beginnings of Faith, of Conversion, and of good Inclinations come from God and not from our Free-will, 163. Faith stops not at a curious search into Natural things, 179. The beginning of Faith and of Good Desires is the Effect of Grace, 203. We ought to believe that God is, what he hath Revealed to us himself. We must not examine his Actions with a Rebellious Spirit, but admire them with Faith and Submission 60

The Falls of Great Men should teach the most holy, not to be Presumptuous 171

Fast. It is a great Scandal to Fast on the Lord's Day, 139. Fast of Lent, 20. Fasting ought to be accompany'd with Abstinence from Vice, 53. Fasting consists not in a simple abstaining from Meats, but also in abstaining from Sins, and the Practice of Vertues, 42. It concerns not the Mouth alone, but the Ears, the Hands, the Feet, and all the parts of the Body, ibid. It consists not only in the retrenching our Meals, but in the reforming the Manners, ibid. We may have a reason for not Fasting, but there can be none for not correcting a vicious habit, ibid.

Fear causes Charity to enter, but Charity drives out Fear 174

Flavianus, a Priest of Antioch, Successor to Meletius in the Bishoprick of that City 6

Florentius, Bishop of Tivoli, to whom Innocent I. addressed his Eighth Letter 69

Frequent Communion 141

Free-will. Vide Will in W.

Friends. Whom we ought to choose 41

G

Games of chance are the occasions of Blasphemies, Anger, Injuries, and all sorts of Crimes 46

Gaudentius, Bishop of Brescia, 59. The Life of S. Philastrius his Predecessor attributed to him ibid.

Genesis is the Foundation and Source of all the Truths which are in the Law and the Prophets 53

Gerontius, Bishop of Nicomedia, driven from his See 8

God. To think of the Glory of God in all things, 43. God alone is the Sovereign good of our Souls, 133, 148. God is the Source of a Happy Life, and true Vertue consists in the Love of God, 154. True Blessedness consists in the knowledge of God, 130. The Apparitions of God are made by the Ministring Angels, who make use of Bodies to make those Apparitions 194

Goods. We ought to consider all that we have received, as not belonging to us, 54. Men are not the Masters but the Dispensers of their Goods 55

Grace of God. Man cannot be deliver'd from Ignorance and the Necessity of Sinning, but by the assistance of God, 133. The Grace of Jesus ſus Chriſt neceſſary to make us good, is intirely free, 158. Twelve Articles which comprehend all that we are obliged to believe concerning Grace 163

Grace of Jeſus Chriſt. Reaſons of the Neceſſity of it, 71, 91. To implore it by fervent Prayer 215

Greatneſs, is like Shadows and Fantoms which diſappear after they have diverted us a very ſhort time. They are as Flowers that wither away of a ſudden at once after having ſpent their luſtre 55

H

Habits. God hath given to Man Wool and Flax, to defend him from the Injuries of the Weather 54

Hatred is as an Executioner that tears the bowels of thoſe that harbour it 41

Heliodorus, Prieſt of Antioch 123

Helvidius, Heretick, Diſciple of Auxentius 124

Heraclides, Deacon, ordained Biſhop of Epheſus 8

Heraclides, ordained Biſhop of Epheſus by S. Chryſoſtom, depoſed in the Council held againſt that Saint 9

Hereticks. Thoſe that return to the Boſom of the Church are put under Penance, after they had quitted it to enter into a Sect of Hereticks, 70. The example of ſome ill Catholicks cannot ſerve as a pretence to Hereticks to ſeparate themſelves from the Church 134

Hiſtoria Lauſiaca, vide in L.

Honours. How fine a Figure ſoever we make in this World, the end is always the Grave, which buries all men in eternal oblivion 55

Humility. The greateſt Action we can do and the moſt pleaſing to God, is to have low thoughts of our ſelves, 44. Humility blameable, that hath not Faith for its foundation

Hypepa, a City of Aſia 8

I

Jeſus Chriſt. His Divinity 16, 19

John of Jeruſalem, Succeſſor to S. Cyril in the Biſhoprick of that City, was a great Defender of the Books, Opinions and Partiſans of Origen, 61. His Quarrel with S. Epiphanius, ibid.

S. Jerom, his Birth, Education and Studies, 73, 74. Paſſes into the Eaſt, ibid. Receives the Order of Prieſthood at Antioch, ibid. Goes to Bethlehem, ibid. Came to Conſtantinople, and from thence to Rome, ibid. Returns to Bethlehem, where the Ladies Paula, Euſtochium and Melania, came to him, 75. His Death, ibid. Cenſure upon his Works, ibid. his Character 103

Impenitence Final, is what we are to underſtand by the Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt 158, 174

The Incarnation. If we could give a Reaſon for this Myſtery, it would no more be wonderfull; if an example were to be found of ſuch a thing, it would not be ſingular 155

Injuries. That we ought not to revenge them, nor condemn thoſe that have offer'd them to us, but conſider them as a puniſhment for our ſins 3

Injuſtice. It is not a leſs vertuous thing to ſuffer Injuſtice patiently than to give Alms 13

S. Innocent I. Succeſſor to P. Anaſtaſius 67

Interſtices that ought to be obſerv'd in the conferring of Holy Orders 209

Invention of the Holy Croſs

Joannites, a Name given by the Enemies of S. John Chryſoſtom to thoſe who remained firm to that Saint during his Perſecution 10

Iſaac, A Chriſtian Author, once a Jew 121

The Juſt, God permits them to be afflicted for three Reaſons; 1. To correct them; 2. To purifie them; 3. To try them: and this ſeverity he exerciſes againſt them is the ſeverity of a Father 59

Juſtice. It is not Fear that renders us good, but the Love of Juſtice 54

Juſtification. We cannot be Juſtified but by Faith in Jeſus Chriſt 159

Juſtina Empreſs favoured the Arians, and perſecuted S. Ambroſe 59

K

KINGS; Wherein their Happineſs conſiſts 188

L

Lauſiaca Hiſtoria written by Palladius, and addreſſed to one Lauſus 66

Libanius, S. Chryſoſtom's Maſter in Rhetorick 7

Liberty. Evil conſiſts in the ill uſe of our Liberty 192, 193

Life. The preſent Life being nothing but a Journey, a Train of Miſeries, a Baniſhment from our Countrey, we ſhould be moſt miſerable if it had not an end 48

Lord's-day, and Feſtivals, ſhould be ſpent in Exerciſes of Devotion 38

Love of God is a ſtrong fixing the heart on God, which makes us deſpiſe all that is not of God 39

Lucian, a Prieſt of Greece 122

Lucian Biſhop of Signi, to whom the Twentieth Letter of S. Innocent is Addreſſed 70

Lying, is to ſay a thing which we think not, with deſign to abuſe, 182. We ought not to tell a Lye neither for our Life, or for any other Reaſon whatſoever, 183. Tropes, Parables and Figures are not Lyes ibid.

Luſt. To preſerve and encreaſe Charity, we ought to oppoſe and weaken Luſt 177

M

Macarius, a Monk 123

Manners, that young People ought to have 130

Mark the Hermit, not he that lived under the Emperor Leo 2

Marcellus Memorialis 123

Marriage, what ought to be the end of Marriage among Chriſtians, and of the Duties of married

ried People, 17. A Second Marriage cannot be lawfull, if the first Wife is not dead 69
Martinianus, Bishop in Macedonia, to whom the Twenty-first Letter of S. Innocent I. is directed 70
Martyrs, not only the Patterns of Vertue, but the Accusers of Vices, 56. Those that are Afflicted, have recourse to them, ibid. They Implore with confidence their Intercession, ibid. The best way of Honouring them is by Imitating their Vertues 18
Masters ought to Treat their Servants with sweetness and goodness, considering them as their Brothers, and that they are made of the same Mould with themselves, that they have the same Creator, the same Nature, &c. 57
Christian Maxims established by S. Chrysostom in his Sermons 48
Mediator. That quality belongs only to Jesus Christ 189
Megalius, Bishop of Calamia, Primate of Numidia 126
Melchisedechian Hereticks 3
Metropolitan. Each Province must submit to its Metropolitan 211
Miracles are wrought by the Power of God, 189. A Christian Life and good Works more to be esteem'd than the Gift of working Miracles 16
S. Monica, the Mother of S. Augustin, died at Ostia 128
Monks. The Monastick state, 79, 114. The Labour of the hands one part of the Monastick state, 183. Counterfeit Monks are Hypocrites, whom the Devil sends abroad into the World clad in the Monastick Weeds ibid.
Moses. In what Sence he was a Prophet in the History of the Creation of the World 53
Montanists, their Errorrs 85
Musick ought to Elevate the Heart and Mind to a Cœlestial and Divine Harmony 131
Mysteries. We ought not to penetrate into them by humane Reason, but ought to be content with what the Scripture says of them 17, 35

N

Niceas, Bishop in Romania 120
Nicholas, a Monk 3

O

DIvine Offices against those that neglect them to go to Comedies and Publick Shews 12. Necessity of Assisting at them 13, 38
Olympius, Bishop, Originally of Spain 120
Ordinations. Those who make Ordinations against the prescribed Rules, shall themselves be Deprived of the Sacerdotal Dignity as well as those they have Ordained 71
Origen, his Errors, 66. Three Monks of Egypt, Sir-named the Long-brothers, condemned by Theophilus, Bishop of Alexandria, for refusing to Sign the Condemnation of Origen, 8. The Accusations formed against them, were Calumnious. 9. S. Epiphanius, Bishop in Cyprus, prepossessed by Theophilus, came to Constantinople to Excommunicate them, ibid. But having reflected upon it, desisted ibid.
The true Ornament of a Christian is Purity of Life 166

P

PAcon, Hermit, his History 2
Pagans; Their Theology is ridiculous 189
Palladius, Originally of Galatia, Ordained Bishop of Helenopolis; from whence he passed to the Bishoprick of Aspuna in Galatia, 66. A friend to Rufinus, a Defender of Origen, a Partisan of Pelagius, and Enemy to S. Jerom ibid.
Pamsophius, Bishop of Nicomedia, in the place of Gerontius 8
Pardon of Enemies 16
Patience, and Pardon of our Enemies, 13, 16. No Good comparable to that of Patience 32
Patricius, Father to S. Augustin 125
Paul, Bishop of Heraclea, President of the Council where S. Chrysostom was Deposed 9
Paulus Orosius, a Priest of Spain, of the City of Tarragon 122
Paul, a Bishop, Author of a Treatise of Repentance 123
S. Paulinus, Native of Bourdeaux, Disciple to Ausonius, retired into Spain with his Wife Therasia, and was made Priest at Barcelona against his will. He parted from thence for Italy, and Retired to Nola, whereof he was ordained Bishop, and died there, 113. His Works, 113, to 117, &c. His Genius 118
Paulinianus, Brother to S. Jerom, Ordained by S. Epiphanius 61
Pelagius, an English Monk, Disciple to Rufinus, and chief of the Heresie that bears his Name, 119. Attacked by S. Jerom. Errors of this Heretick 91
Pelagians, their Errors, 159, 160. Abridgment of the Doctrine of S. Augustin against them 204, 205
Penitents should not dye without the Peace of the Church 182, 214
Penance usefull at all times, 2. The Necessity and Conditions of a real Penance, 31, 32. God considers not the Length, but the Fervour of it, 37. Conditions of it, 38. The true Penitent hath nothing in his view but to leave no Evil unpunished that he hath committed, 153. To judge of a Penance, we must have regard to the Labour, Sighs and Tears of the Penitent, and forgive him his Sin, when he hath made a proportionable satisfaction, 68. Penance is not usefull but when he that changes his Resolution can correct his past Life; and Regret and Grief for Sins past can be of no great use when they are not in a state of doing nor practising Vertue 54
Publick Penance. Those that have been put to publick Penance, cannot be afterwards admitted into the Clergy 70, 71
Persecution. Whether it be permitted to Priests, to Clerks or Bishops to fly and abandon their Flocks in time of Perſecution? 165. The Careſſes of this World are often more dangerous than Perſecutions ibid.

S. Peter, Chief of the Body of the Apoſtles, &c. 16
Phocas Martyr, a Native of Synope, and a Gardener by Profeſſion 56
Piety. The Principle of Chriſtian Piety is to bring all things to God 159
Pilgrimages, the chief intention we ought to have in making Pilgrimages, is the aſſiſting the Poor 38, 85
Platoniſts knew the true God 189
Polychronius, Biſhop of Apamea 215
The Pope ought to maintain the Canons 210
Porphyrius Elected Biſhop of Antioch in place of Flavianus 10
Poverty, of great advantage to thoſe that know how to make good uſe of it 40
Power Eccleſiaſtical and Civil; their Difference 14
Prayer. Application is neceſſary to him that prays, &c. 14. Prayer quenches the Deſires of the Fleſh, the Love of Riches, and removes from the Minds of Men the Thoughts of Glory and Vanity, 57. It ought to be preferr'd before any other Work, 3. Common-prayer is an excellent Harmony proceeding from the Concord of Charity, 38. God often does not immediately grant us what we ask, that he may excite our Ardency 44
Prayer for the Dead
The Praiſes of Men, how to be received, 165. Exceſſive Commendations give as much Remorſe to the Conſcience as Sins, when we find not in our ſelves the Vertues there commended ibid. & 25
Preachers. The Obligations they are under, 16. What ought to be their End, 171. In what manner they ought to preach the Word of God 77
Prieſts, the Reſpect which is due to them, 12, 14, 46. Diſorderly Prieſts to reſpect their Character, 46, 47. Prieſthood; Excellence of its Dignity 14
Pride. The more good we do, the leſs we ought to boaſt, 44. That Pride is commendable which makes us Deſpiſe the World, and all that appears great in the Eyes of Men
Priſcillianiſts; their Errors 193
Probability, a Damnable Maxim 129
Solemn Proceſſions inſtituted at Conſtantinople by S. John Chryſoſtom 8
Prophecies, their Obſcurity when taken away 14
Providence. In following the Commandments of God we act, but in all the reſt God conducts us by the motions of his Providence, without our having any part in the Events, 177
Prudence. The Prudence of a Man not to be judged of by the number of his Years 27
Prudentius, Born at Saragoſſa in 348 5

Q

Quartodecimani, Hereticks ſo called 8

R

Religion of Jeſus Chriſt, 78. Efficacy of the Religion of Jeſus Chriſt 5
Relicks. The Remembrance of the Actions of Saints, and the Combats of Martyrs, is one of the moſt powerful Motives we can make uſe of, to carry Chriſtians to Piety and Vertue; and it is for this Reaſon, that their Relicks are preſerved, &c. 56. It is in Honour of the Martyrs that we preſerve their Relicks with Veneration, 56. Relicks and Invocation of Saints, ibid and 85
The Renouncing of all things to follow Jeſus Chriſt, ought to go even to the leaving Father and Mother for the Service of God 166
Repaſt. Prayer before and after 12
Reprimands. Their Uſefulneſs 17, 19
Reſtitutions. We are obliged to reſtore Goods gotten by Theft, Rapine and Oppreſſion, to thoſe from whom they were taken; and it is not enough to give it to the Poor 154
Reſurrection of Bodies 211
Rheticius Biſhop of Autun wrote a Commentary upon the Canticles 78
Rich Men are only Diſpenſers of their Goods for the Aſſiſtance of the Poor, 40. God has not given them Wealth, but that they might impart to the Poor, and he hath alſo made the Poor and Miſerable, that Rich Men might have an opportunity to exerciſe their Pity and Charity
Riches are not forbidden, provided we make good uſe of them, 41. It is impoſſible to gather great Wealth without Sin 54
Ruſinus Presbyter, Condemned as a Heretick by Pope Anaſtaſius, 58. Contemporary with S. Jerom, 107. Embraced a Monaſtick Life, and went afterwards to Jeruſalem, ibid. having tranſlated the Works of Origen, he became his Defender, ibid. Return'd to Rome, ibid. Dies, ibid. his Works, ibid. and 108. his Genius 108, 110

S

Sabbatius, Biſhop in Gaul 121
Saints. The Happineſs they will enjoy after the Reſurrection, They help us in our Neceſſities, A Deſcription of their Felicity 190
Scandal. That we muſt always keep our ſelves in the Boſom of the Church, notwithſtanding the Scandals we may be afflicted with 161
Schiſmaticks. Their good Works are uſeleſs 143
The Holy Scripture, and Reaſon cannot ever be contrary, 152. Charity and Humility are the two Keys without which we cannot underſtand the Holy Scripture, 170. The reading of it recommended, 79, 80, 81, 95, 135. The Uſefulneſs of that Reading, 18, 39. Its Simplicity 103
Secundus, Father to S. John Chryſoſtom 6
Semipelagians. Principal points of the Doctrine 164
Serapion S. John Chryſoſtom's Deacon 8
Servants, ought readily, and with a good Will obey their Maſters 57
Severianus Biſhop of Gabala, in Cœleſyria, 8, 75. S.

75. S. Chryſoſtom made him Preach at Conſtantinople, during his Journey into Aſia, ibid S. Chryſoſtom being returned drove him out, ibid. The Empreſs cauſes him to return, and reconciles him outwardly with S. Chryſoſtom, ibid. His Works ibid
Severus Endelechius 5
Severus Biſhop of the Iſle of Minorca 122
Simony. Six Biſhops depoſed for giving Money to be Ordained 8
Simplicianus Biſhop of Milan 3
Sin. We are our ſelves the Authors of our Sins, 6. Sin is the only thing that a Chriſtian ought to Fear, 20, 32. Nothing but Sin that makes us truly miſerable, 32. Sins committed after Baptiſm, are greater and more dangerous, than thoſe committed before, 127. When a Man is fallen into one Sin, he is very often led on by this firſt Crime into all ſorts of Iniquities, 56. We hate Sin in proportion as we love Juſtice 152
Siſinnius Martyr. His Relicks ſent to Milan 4
Solitude; The Advantages of it, 76. Excellency of a ſolitary Life 30
Sophronius, Friend to S. Jerom 111
The Soul. Its Habitation is in God, who hath created it, 131. made in the likeneſs of God, ibid. hath no Corporeal Dimenſion, ibid. not a part of God, 161. Errors of the Pelagians, concerning the Creation of Souls 204
Sulpicius Severus Prieſt of Agen, a Diſciple of S. Martin, and Friend of Paulinus Biſhop of Nola, 111. His Genius 112
Superſtition is a Vice that ſets it ſelf off with the Name of Vertue 214
Swearing. It is moſt dangerous to make a Jeſt of Swearing, and the ſureſt way is never to ſwear at all 155
Syneſius, Originally of Cyrene, Biſhop of Ptolemais, 211. Catalogue of the Treatiſes which he wrote, 212. his Genius 215
Roman Synod under Innocent I. 216

T

Tapers lighted in Churches 85
The Tavern is filled with Impiety and Intemperance 46
Temptations. We muſt reſiſt the Temptations of the Devil in this World 44
Theodorus Biſhop of Mopſueſtia, Condemned with his Writings long after his Death, in the Fifth Council, by the Contrivance of the Emperor Juſtinian 64
Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria, 7. Chryſoſtom's Enemy, 9. Even after his Death, 11. Succeſſor to Timotheus, 62. Finiſhed the ruin of Idolatry in his own City, ibid. his Character 63
Traditions of the Church 86
Trinity impoſſible to be explained 2
Truth; the Enquiry after it can only render a Man happy, 129. It is never permitted to betray Truth 183

V

Vain-Glory corrupts, and renders the beſt Actions Uſeleſs; as Prayer, Faſting and Alms 57
Valerius Biſhop of Hippo 125
Victricius Biſhop of Roan: S. Innocent I. directs his Second Letter to him 68
Chriſtian Vigilance. Temptations are uſeful, provided we are always upon our Guard, and that we have continually a Watch over our ſelves 44
Vigilantius Prieſt, a Native of Gaul 124
Vigilius; Five of the Name, 1. Vigilius of Africa. 2. Vigilius the Deacon, 3. Vigilius Biſhop of Tapſus in Africa, 4. Vigilius Biſhop of Breſcia. 5. Vigilius a Biſhop at the Council of Agde 3
Vigilius Biſhop of Trent, Martyr under the Conſulſhip of Stilico ibid
Virgins that Marry after having made a Vow of Chaſtity 216
Virginity: What muſt be done to preſerve it, 81. the Advantages of it, 84. Though Parents may inſpire into their Children, the Love of Virginity; yet they cannot oblige them to make a Vow of perpetual Continency, 60. Virginity as much above Marriage, as Heaven is above the Earth, 31. Virginity ſignifies nothing, if it be not joyn'd with Charity and Meekneſs 17
Urſinus a Monk 123

W

Watchfulneſs, vide Vigilance
War. How we may make War like a good Chriſtian 159
Widowhood. Though Second Marriages are not forbidden, it is Nevertheleſs much better to continue in Widowhood, 31. The State of Widowhood is to be preferr'd to that of Marriage 182
Free-Will. The Will is enclined to Evil, and cannot do Good, without the Aſſiſtance of the Grace of God, 158. Sin conſiſts in the ill Uſe of our Free-Will 172
Works. The Error of thoſe that believe they ſhall be juſtified by their Works 2

FINIS.

ERRATA.

PAg. 4. Lin. 9. from bottom of the Text, read Second, the Petition. P. 5. l. 6. after Auguſtus's Age, add, His Thoughts are juſt enough, and worthy of a good Chriſtian: He has ſome things elegantly written, which are read with pleaſure. P. 12. l. ult. r. Hymn P. 15. note Col. 1. l. 16. from bot. r. poſitively ſays ſo. P. 17. l. 20. dele juſtifying. P. 20. l. 5. from bot. for 10th. r. 17th. P. 23. l. 17. from bot. r. Fragments of it. Ibid. l. 13. from bot. r. not unworthy. P. 24. l. 38. after conſecrated to God, add P. 976. Sermons Catechumens. P. 25. not. col. 1. l. 3. from bot. for which r. what. P. 38. l. 1. for after r. alter. P. 49. l. 10. from bot. for Book r. principal Books. P. 50. l. 21. from bot. r. printed at Paris. P. 55. l. 7. from bot. for Firſt r. Fifth. P. 60. l. 42. dele by the bye. P. 61. l. ult. for ſuppoſed r. ſuppoſitious. P. 63. l. 2. from bot. r. that came firſt, provided it could. P. 64. l. 20. from bot. r. Fortune, to put for. P. 65. l. 6. for Eaſe r. Freedom. P. 71. l. 8. for the conſequence r. a continuation. P. 78. l. 32. dele ſince. Ibid. l. 7. from bot. r. obliged if they would do it well, to have. P. 79. l. 10. for many r. heavy. P. 86. l. 41. r. an enumeration. P. 90. l. 37. dele that. P. 92. l. 39. r. Dignity in a manner. P. 125. l. 12. from bot. r. that all that deſigned to embrace a Spiritual. P. 131. l. 30. r. Said. I writ whileſt I was in that City, a Dialogue. P. 138. l. 19. from bot. for the Latter r. theſe Letters. P. 144. l. 36. for to oblige r. of obliging. P. 150. l. 10. from bot. dele but. P. 153. l. 15. from bot. for that it is r. by how much it is. P. 161, l. 10. from bot. r. wiſeſt. P. 174. l. 32. for found r. formed. P. 184. l. 6. r. his Epiſcopal Office.

Proper Names Miſtaken.

MElania (p. 1.) for Melanius. Pulmannus (p. 5.) for Putmannus. Severianus (p. 6.) for Severus. Iſidore for Iſodore Paſſim. Cotelerius for Cotelierius Paſſim. Euſtathius (p. 21.) for Euſtachius. Armens (p. 33.) for Armenis. Mopſueſtia for Mopſueſta Paſſim. Aptilia (p. 72.) for Appilia. Aſella (p. 81.) for Acilla. Vercella (p. 83.) for Vercella. Patavinenſis (p. 84.) for Patarinenſis. Tanis (p. 92.) for Tunis. Expiratus (p. 151.) for Expiratus.

Smaller miſtakes, which are not very numerous, are left to the Readers Candour.